PROCEEDINGS AND DEBATES OF THE 107th CONGRESS, FIRST SESSION

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES—Thursday, October 11, 2001

The House met at 10 a.m.

The Right Reverend Jane Holmes Dixon, Bishop of Washington, pro tempore, Washington, D.C., offered the following prayer:

Most gracious God, Creator and Ruler of the Universe, the one to whom there are many paths and to whom we call many days, we give You thanks this day for the men and women who serve our Nation in the House of Representatives.

We pray that as they make decisions for our welfare and enact laws for our country, You will guide them to perceive what is right and grant them both the courage to pursue it and the will to accomplish it.

In this time of great national tragedy, profound sadness, and indeed a fear among our people, touch us with Your compassion even as we contend against evil. Help us to know with certainty that love is stronger than hate, and as we make no peace with oppression, give us a devotion to justice and freedom here and throughout the world.

We pray also this day for George, our President, and for all our allies that they may be led to wise decisions and right actions for the welfare and peace of the world. Be especially with all who serve in the armed forces, defend them by day and night, strengthen them in their trials, and give them solace and courage as they offer their lives for freedom.

And we pray for our enemies. Lead them and us from prejudice to truth; and deliver them and us from hatred, cruelty and revenge.

Finally, I ask Your blessing on each and every one gathered here today. Comfort and keep them and make them ever mindful that You, O God, require us to do justice, to love mercy, and to walk humbly with our God. In Your most holy name we pray. Amen.

SEC. 321. Amounts deposited during fiscal year 2001 in the roads and trails fund provided for in the 14th paragraph under the heading ''FOREST SERVICE'' of the Act of March 4, 1913 (37 Stat. 843; 16 U.S.C. 501), shall be used by the Secretary of Agriculture, without regard to the State in which the amounts were derived, to repair or reconstruct roads, bridges, and trails on National Forest System lands or to carry out and administer projects to improve forest health conditions, which may include the repair or reconstruction of roads, bridges, and trails on National Forest System lands in the wildland-community interface where there is an abnormally high risk of fire. The projects shall emphasize reducing risks to human safety and public health and property and enhancing ecological functions, long-term forest productivity, and biological integrity. The projects may be completed in a subsequent fiscal year. Funds shall not be expended under this section to replace funds which would otherwise appropriately be expended from the timber salvage sale fund. Nothing in this section shall be construed to exempt any project from any environmental law.

SEC. 322. Other than in emergency situations, none of the funds in this Act may be used to operate telephone answering machines during core business hours unless such answering machines include an option that enables callers to reach promptly an individual on-duty with the agency being contacted.

SEC. 323. No timber sale in Region 10 shall be advertised if the indicated rate is deficit when appraised under the transaction evidence appraisal system using domestic Alaska values for western red cedar: Provided, That sales which are deficit when appraised under the transaction evidence appraisal system using domestic Alaska values for western red cedar may be advertised upon receipt of a written request by a prospective, informed bidder, who has the opportunity to review the Forest Service's cruise and harvest cost estimate for that timber. Program accomplishments shall be based on volume sold. Should Region 10 sell, in fiscal year 2002, the annual average portion of the decadal allowable sale quantity called for in the current Tongass Land Management Plan in sales which are not deficit when appraised under the transaction evidence appraisal system using domestic Alaska values for western red cedar, all of the western red cedar timber from those sales which is surplus to the needs of domestic processors in Alaska, shall be made available to domestic processors in the contiguous 48 United States at prevailing domestic prices. Should Region 10 sell, in fiscal year 2002, less than the annual average portion of the decadal allowable sale quantity called for in the current Tongass Land Management Plan in sales which are not deficit when appraised under the transaction evidence appraisal system using domestic Alaska values for western red cedar, the volume of western red cedar timber available to domestic processors at prevailing domestic prices in the contiguous 48 United States shall be that volume: (i) which is surplus to the needs of domestic processors in Alaska; and (ii) is that percent of the surplus western red cedar volume determined by calculating the ratio of the total timber volume which has been sold on the Tongass to the annual average portion of the decadal allowable sale quantity called for in the current Tongass Land Management Plan. The percentage shall be calculated by Region 10 on a rolling basis as each sale is sold (for purposes of this amendment, a ''rolling basis'' shall mean that the determination of how much western red cedar is eligible for sale to various markets shall be made at the time each sale is awarded). Western red cedar shall be deemed ''surplus to the needs of domestic processors in Alaska'' when the timber sale holder has presented to the Forest Service documentation of the inability to sell western red cedar logs from a given sale to domestic Alaska processors at price equal to or greater than the log selling value stated in the contract. All additional western red cedar volume not sold to Alaska or contiguous 48 United States domestic processors may be exported to foreign markets at the election of the timber sale holder. All Alaska yellow cedar may be sold at prevailing export prices at the election of the timber sale holder.

SEC. 324. The Forest Service, in consultation with the Department of Labor, shall review Forest Service campground concessions policy to determine if modifications can be made to Forest Service contracts for campgrounds so that such concessions fall within the regulatory exemption of 29 CFR 4.122(b). The Forest Service shall offer in fiscal year 2002 such concession prospectuses under the regulatory exemption, except that, any prospectus that does not meet the requirements of the regulatory exemption shall be offered as a service contract in accordance with the requirements of 41 U.S.C. 351–358.

SEC. 325. A project undertaken by the Forest Service under the Recreation Fee Demonstration Program as authorized by section 315 of the Department of the Interior and Related Agencies Appropriations Act for Fiscal Year 1996, as amended, shall not result in—

(1) displacement of the holder of an authorization to provide commercial recreation services on Federal lands. Prior to initiating any project, the Secretary shall consult with potentially affected holders to determine what impacts the project may have on the holders. Any modifications to the authorization shall be made within the terms and conditions of the authorization and authorities of the impacted agency.

(2) the return of a commercial recreation service to the Secretary for operation when such services have been provided in the past by a private sector provider, except when—

(A) the private sector provider fails to bid on such opportunities;

(B) the private sector provider terminates its relationship with the agency; or

(C) the agency revokes the permit for noncompliance with the terms and conditions of the authorization.

In such cases, the agency may use the Recreation Fee Demonstration Program to provide for operations until a subsequent operator can be found through the offering of a new prospectus.

SEC. 326. For fiscal years 2002 and 2003, the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to limit competition for fire and fuel treatment and watershed restoration contracts in the Giant Sequoia National Monument and the Sequoia National Forest. Preference for employment shall be given to dislocated and displaced workers in Tulare, Kern and Fresno Counties, California, for work associated with the establishment of the Giant Sequoia National Monument.

SEC. 327. REVISION OF FOREST PLANS. Prior to October 1, 2002, the Secretary of Agriculture shall not be considered to be in violation of subparagraph 6(f)(5)(A) of the Forest and Rangeland Renewable Resources Planning Act of 1974 (16 U.S.C. 1604(f)(5)(A)) solely because more than 15 years have passed without revision of the plan for a unit of the National Forest System. Nothing in this section exempts the Secretary from any other requirement of the Forest and Rangeland Renewable Resources Planning Act (16 U.S.C. 1600 et seq.) or any other law:

Provided, That if the Secretary is not acting expeditiously and in good faith, within the funding available, to revise a plan for a unit of the National Forest System, this section shall be void with respect to such plan and a court of proper jurisdiction may order completion of the plan on an accelerated basis.

SEC. 328. Until September 30, 2003, the authority of the Secretary of Agriculture to enter into a cooperative agreement under the first section of Public Law 94–148 (16 U.S.C. 565a–1) for a purpose described in such section includes the authority to use that legal instrument when the principal purpose of the resulting relationship is to the mutually significant benefit of the Forest Service and the other party or parties to the agreement, including nonprofit entities.

SEC. 329. (a) PILOT PROGRAM AUTHORIZING CONVEYANCE OF EXCESS FOREST SERVICE STRUCTURES.—The Secretary of Agriculture may convey, by sale or exchange, any or all right, title, and interest of the United States in and to excess buildings and other structures located on National Forest System lands and under the jurisdiction of the Forest Service. The conveyance may include the land on which the building or other structure is located and such other land immediately adjacent to the building or structure as the Secretary considers necessary.

(b) LIMITATION.—Conveyances on not more than 10 sites may be made under the authority of this section, and the Secretary of Agriculture shall obtain the concurrence of the Committee on Appropriations of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate in advance of each conveyance.

(c) USE OF PROCEEDS.—The proceeds derived from the sale of a building or other structure under this section shall be retained by the Secretary of Agriculture and shall be available to the Secretary, without further appropriation until expended, for maintenance and rehabilitation activities within the Forest Service Region in which the building or structure is located.

(d) DURATION OF AUTHORITY.—The authority provided by this section expires on September 30, 2005.

SEC. 330. Section 323(a) of the Department of the Interior and Related Agencies Appropriations Act, 1999, as included in Public Law 105–277, Div. A, section 101(e) is amended by inserting ''and fiscal years 2002 through 2005,'' before ''to the extent funds are otherwise available''.

SEC. 331. No funds provided in this Act may be expended to conduct preleasing, leasing and related activities under either the Mineral Leasing Act (30 U.S.C. 181 et seq.) or the Outer Continental Shelf Lands Act (43 U.S.C. 1331 et seq.) within the boundaries of a National Monument established pursuant to the Act of June 8, 1906 (16 U.S.C. 431 et seq.) as such boundary existed on January 20, 2001, except where such activities are allowed under the Presidential proclamation establishing such monument.

SEC. 332. Section 347(a) of the Department of the Interior and Related Agencies Appropriations Act, 1999, as included in Public Law 105–277, is amended by striking ''2002'' and inserting ''2004''. The authority to enter into stewardship and end result contracts provided to the Forest Service in accordance with section 347 of title III of section 101(e) of division A of Public Law 105–277 is hereby expanded to authorize the Forest Service to enter into an additional 28 contracts subject to the same terms and conditions as provided in that section: Provided, That of the additional contracts authorized by this section at least 9 shall be allocated to Region 1 and at least 3 to Region 6.

SEC. 333. Any regulations or policies promulgated or adopted by the Departments of Agriculture or the Interior regarding recovery of costs for processing authorizations to occupy and use Federal lands under their control shall adhere to and incorporate the following principle arising from Office of Management and Budget Circular, A–25; no charge should be made for a service when the identification of the specific beneficiary is obscure, and the service can be considered primarily as benefiting broadly the general public.

SEC. 334. The Chief of the Forest Service shall issue a special use permit for the Sioux Charlie Cabin within the boundary of the Custer National Forest, Montana, to Montana State University-Billings, for a term of 20 years for educational purposes compatible with the cabin's location. The permit shall be administered under normal national forest system authorities and regulations, with an additional review after 10 years to ensure the facility is being used for educational purposes.

SEC. 335. Section 551(c) of the Land Between the Lakes Protection Act of 1998 (16 U.S.C. 460lll–61(c)) is amended by striking ''2002'' and inserting ''2004''.

SEC. 336. MODIFICATION TO STEEL LOAN GUARANTEE PROGRAM. (a) IN GENERAL.—Section 101 of the Emergency Steel Loan Guarantee Act of 1999 (Public Law 106–51; 15 U.S.C. 1841 note) is amended as follows:

''(i) the aggregate amount of loans guaranteed at such percentage and outstanding under this section at any one time does not exceed $100,000,000; and

''(ii) the aggregate amount of loans guaranteed at such percentage under this section with respect to a single qualified steel company does not exceed $50,000,000.

''(C) INCREASED LEVEL TWO.—A loan guarantee may be provided under this section in excess of 85 percent, but not more than 95 percent, of the amount of principal of the loan, if—

''(i) the aggregate amount of loans guaranteed at such percentage and outstanding under this section at any one time does not exceed $100,000,000; and

''(ii) the aggregate amount of loans guaranteed at such percentage under this section with respect to a single qualified steel company does not exceed $50,000,000.''.

(2) TERMINATION OF GUARANTEE AUTHORITY.—Subsection (k) is amended by striking ''2001'' and inserting ''2003''.

(b) APPLICABILITY.—The amendments made by this section shall apply only with respect to any guarantee issued on or after the date of the enactment of this Act.

JOINT EXPLANATORY STATEMENT OF THE COMMITTEE OF CONFERENCE

The managers on the part of the House and the Senate at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 2217), making appropriations for the Department of the Interior and Related Agencies for the fiscal year ending September 30, 2002, and for other purposes, submit the following joint statement to the House and the Senate in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the managers and recommended in the accompanying conference report.

The conference agreement on H.R. 2217 incorporates some of the provisions of both the House and the Senate versions of the bill. Report language and allocations set forth in either House Report 107–103 or Senate Report 107–36 that are not changed by the conference are approved by the committee of conference. The statement of the managers, while repeating some report language for emphasis, does not negate the language referenced above unless expressly provided herein.

REPROGRAMMING GUIDELINES

The Interior and Related Agencies Appropriations reprogramming guidelines were last published in the House and Senate reports accompanying the FY 1998 Interior and Related Agencies Appropriations Act (H. Rep. 105–163, S. Rep. 105–56). While the managers have agreed to only one minor change to these guidelines for the National Park Service (addressed under the land acquisition and State assistance account), recent dealings with several agencies suggest that the following clarifications are needed to prevent any future misunderstandings regarding the applicability of reprogramming procedures in certain situations.

Though a reprogramming is in part defined in the guidelines as a reallocation of funds from one budget activity (or other applicable level of detail) to another, the guidelines also state that any significant departure from the program described in the agency's budget justification shall be considered a reprogramming. This latter portion of the definition encompasses the reallocation of funds within a budget activity, if such reallocation represents a ''significant departure'' from the description provided in the relevant budget justification. In this regard, the managers would view as a ''significant departure'' any reallocation of funds within a budget activity for programs or contracts involving out-year mortgages that are not discussed in detail in the budget justification.

Multi-year and no-year funds do not lose their program identities when carried over to subsequent years and a reprogramming is required if such carry-over funds are to be used for purposes other than those originally directed.

CONSERVATION SPENDING CATEGORY

The conservation spending category created in title VIII of the fiscal year 2001 Interior and Related Agencies Appropriations Act, provided that up to $1,320,000,000 could be appropriated for conservation related activities, in addition to ongoing activities funded in this bill. The conference agreement fully funds the conservation spending category at $1,320,000,000. The distribution of funds as agreed to by the managers is shown in the table below.

TITLE I—DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR

BUREAU OF LAND MANAGEMENT

MANAGEMENT OF LANDS AND RESOURCES

The conference agreement provides $775,632,000 for management of lands and resources instead of $768,711,000 as proposed by the House and $775,962,000 as proposed by the Senate. Within this amount, $29,000,000 is from the conservation spending category.

Increases above the House for land resources include $501,000 for noxious weeds for the Montana State University weed program, $500,000 for Idaho weed control, and $400,000 for the Headwaters Forest reserve and a decrease of $1,000,000 for the natural resource challenge program.

Increases above the House for recreation management include $1,000,000 for Missouri River undaunted stewardship.

Increases above the House for energy and minerals include $45,000 for management reforms, $2,000,000 for the National Petroleum Reserve/Alaska, and $1,775,000 for Alaska minerals for the continued development of an interagency geological database that was initiated in fiscal year 2001.

The managers have provided $6,000,000 to address the Bureau's increased operational workload for oil and gas permitting and related activities, with an emphasis on expediting permit applications for coalbed methane development. The managers direct the Bureau to focus all possible efforts towards completion of environmental reviews that are necessary to proceed with further leasing.

The managers did not agree with the $700,000 earmark included in the Senate version of the bill to address the oil and gas permit backlog in the State of Utah. However, the managers did provide a significant increase for oil and gas permitting activities, a portion of which should be used to address the Utah backlog.

Increases above the House for realty and ownership management include $350,000 for the Montana cadastral project, $300,000 for the Utah geographic reference project, and $1,500,000 for Alaska conveyance to establish a public lands database.

The managers note that the increase provided for the Montana cadastral project fully funds the Federal share of this effort, however, the Bureau is encouraged to continue working with the State of Montana to finalize the project and facilitate data sharing.

Decreases below the House for resource protection and maintenance include $200,000 for desert rangers, for a total increase of $400,000 in fiscal year 2002.

There is an increase above the House level for transportation and facilities maintenance of $250,000 for the Iditarod National Historic Trail.

There is a decrease of $500,000 below the House level for workforce organizational support, which reflects a transfer to the Inspector General for Bureau audits.

The managers agree to the following:

1. The managers note that both the House and Senate included the Bureau's request of $3,000,000 to identify and evaluate oil and gas resources and reserves on public lands. In light of recent attacks on the United States that have underscored the potential for disruptions to America's energy supply, the managers believe this project should be considered a top priority for the Department. Additionally, the managers direct the Bureau to provide the House and Senate Committees on Appropriations biannual reports on the progress of this effort and a final report detailing the findings of this review.

2. The managers wish to clarify the language dealing with the allocation of funds from the conservation spending category. Funding included in the management of lands and resources appropriation for the conservation spending category can be used for infrastructure improvements on all public lands including Oregon and California grant lands.

3. The managers are aware of the significant success the military services have had in utilizing pulse technology in their vehicles and other equipment to reduce costs and increase environmental benefits through the extension of the service life of batteries. The managers urge the Department as a whole, and specifically the Bureau of Land Management, the National Park Service, and the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service to examine the opportunity for cost savings and associated environmental benefits of using pulse technology for battery management programs. The managers believe that this technology, if adopted by the Department, will directly benefit the Bureaus.

4. The managers urge the Department and the Bureau to place the highest possible priority on completion of the Imperial Sand Dunes Recreation Management Plan.

5. The managers have not provided $300,000 for the Southwest Strategy as proposed by the Senate.

Bill Language:

1. Language is included under the Bureau's administrative provisions reauthorizing the hard rock mining holding fee for 2 years.

2. The managers have earmarked $700,000 for the Rio Puerco watershed project, which is $300,000 above the budget request. The increase above the request shall be used for projects and initiatives developed by the Rio Puerco Management Committee (section 401 of Public Law 104–333).

3. The managers have earmarked $4,000,000 for the assessment of mineral potential in Alaska as proposed by the Senate instead of $2,225,000 as proposed by the House.

4. The conference agreement includes a technical correction to the conservation spending category statutory language as proposed by the Senate.

WILDLAND FIRE MANAGEMENT

The conference agreement provides $678,421,000 for wildland fire management instead of $700,806,000 as proposed by the House and $659,421,000 as proposed by the Senate.

The managers have provided $280,807,000 for preparedness, $161,424,000 for fire suppression of which $34,000,000 is a contingent emergency appropriation, and $236,190,000 for other operations of which $20,000,000 is a contingent emergency appropriation for the rehabilitation and restoration program. The bureau may allocate up to an additional $2,838,000 for the Ecological Restoration Institute, Arizona for fuels reduction work including work at Mt. Trumbull.

The managers have not earmarked funds in bill language for hazardous fuels reduction work in the wildland-urban interface as proposed by the Senate. Instead, the managers direct the Department of the Interior to allocate the funding level proposed in the Administration's budget request of $111,255,000 on projects in the wildland-urban interface. If for any reason the Department is unable to attain the proposed levels, it shall promptly notify the House and Senate Committees on Appropriations explaining why the Department was unable to expend such sums. The managers continue to believe that an emphasis on fuels reduction work in the wildland-urban interface is critical to protecting the safety of rural communities.

Within the funds provided for other operations, $1,000,000 is for the National Center for Landscape Fire Analysis at Montana State University including funding for the purchase of a hyperspectral digital camera.

	Non-emergency	Emergency	Total
Preparedness	$280,807,000		$280,807,000
Suppression	127,424,000	$34,000,000	161,424,000
Other Operations:
Hazardous Fuels	186,190,000		186,190,000
Rehabilitation	20,000,000	20,000,000	40,000,000
Rural Fire Assistance	10,000,000		10,000,000
Other Operations Subtotal	216,190,000	20,000,000	236,190,000
Total Fire Funding	624,421,000	54,000,000	678,421,000

The managers believe that the full, integrated national fire plan effort needs to be sustained in future years in order to reduce the risks of catastrophic fire in many areas of the Nation. The managers note that the Administration, working along with governors and local communities, have submitted a framework for a ten-year national fire plan. However, after reviewing the plan, the managers are concerned that the plan does not lay out clear funding requirements for various aspects of this important endeavor. Therefore, the managers direct the Secretaries of Agriculture and the Interior to provide to the House and Senate Committees on Appropriations by March 15, 2002, an updated fire plan that includes detailed schedules of activities and funding requirements. The managers understand that funding requirements for wildfire activities include considerable year-to-year uncertainty depending on weather and fire circumstances and therefore the managers view the funding requirements for the national fire plan as being an iterative process, which requires annual updates. The managers direct the Departments of the Interior and Agriculture to continue to work together to formulate complementary budget requests that reflect the same principles and a similar budget organization and submit a cross-cutting budget request to the Committees, which covers all federal wildfire responsibilities. In addition, the managers expect the agencies to seek the advice of governors, and local and tribal government representatives in setting priorities for fuels treatments, burned area rehabilitation, and public outreach and education.

The managers remain concerned about the variation in methods by which the Departments calculate wildfire fighting readiness and how the Departments plan their distribution of firefighting resources to attain efficiency. The managers direct the two Departments to develop and implement a coordinated and common system for calculating readiness which includes provisions for working with the shared fire fighting resources of the States and other cooperators and considers values of various resources on both Federal and other lands.

The managers are also concerned about the fire suppression costs during major incidents and therefore the Forest Service and the Department of the Interior are directed to contract for a thorough, independent review of wildfire suppression costs and strategies. The Departments should equally share the cost of the review and a preliminary report should be issued by May 31, 2002 and the final report should be delivered to the House and Senate Committees on Appropriations by September 30, 2002.

CENTRAL HAZARDOUS MATERIALS FUND

The conference agreement provides $9,978,000 for the central hazardous materials fund as proposed by the House and Senate.

UNITED STATES FISH AND WILDLIFE SERVICE

RESOURCE MANAGEMENT

The conference agreement provides $850,597,000 for resource management instead of $839,852,000 as proposed by the House and $845,814,000 as proposed by the Senate. The numerical changes described below are to the House recommended level.

In endangered species programs there are increases of $400,000 in candidate conservation for the Idaho sage grouse management plan, $524,000 for the listing program, and $250,000 in consultation for the Central Valley and Southern California habitat conservation plan. There is also a decrease of $1,500,000 for the consultation program backlog.

Changes in the endangered species recovery program include increases of $800,000 for eider recovery at the Alaska Sealife Center, $200,000 for wolf monitoring in Idaho, $500,000 for the Preble's meadow jumping mouse in Colorado, $700,000 for Upper Colorado River endangered fish recovery, $600,000 for Lahonton cutthroat trout in Nevada, and $1,100,000 for Atlantic salmon of which $1,000,000 is for grants through the National Fish and Wildlife Foundation and $100,000 is for Service activities. There is also a decrease of $1,000,000 for the recovery program backlog.

Changes to habitat conservation programs include increases in partners for fish and wildlife of $750,000 for the Hawaii ESA community conservation plan, $1,250,000 for Reno biodiversity research and conservation in Nevada, $400,000 for the Montana Water Center wild fish habitat initiative, and $100,000 for landowner assistance at the Fairfield Marsh Waterfowl Production Area in Wisconsin. For project planning, there is an increase of $250,000 for Middle Rio Grande/Bosque research and a decrease of $500,000 for the CALFED program. In coastal programs, there are increases of $1,000,000 for the Cook Inlet Aquaculture Association king salmon program in Alaska and $200,000 for the Regional Aquaculture Association king salmon program in Alaska. There is also an increase of $9,000 for the environmental contaminants program. Cormorant work at the National Aquaculture Center in Arkansas and alternative habitat and food sources for Idaho terns are addressed in the migratory bird program.

In refuge operations and maintenance, there are decreases of $700,000 for refuge maintenance and $1,000,000 for the natural resource challenge program. There are no refuge-specific earmarks. Ohio River Islands NWR, WV equipment replacement and Canaan Valley NWR, WV maintenance are addressed in the construction account.

In migratory bird management, there are increases of $575,000 to reduce seabird bycatch in Alaska, $1,000,000 for the Canada geese depredation program, $200,000 for the National Aquaculture Center in Arkansas to address cormorant depredation problems, and $250,000 to address alternative habitat and food sources for terns in Idaho. There is also a decrease of $68,000 for joint venture programs, which reflects the elimination of the ''general program activities'' category. The funding level for each joint venture is identical to that shown in the House report.

There are no refuge-specific earmarks for law enforcement. Canaan Valley NWR, WV law enforcement maintenance needs are addressed in the construction account.

Changes to fisheries programs include an increase of $1,500,000 in hatchery operations and maintenance for Leadville NFH, CO trout (alternative 2), and increases in fish and wildlife management of $100,000 for Great Lakes fish and wildlife restoration, $850,000 for wildlife enhancement in Starkville, Mississippi, $100,000 for Yukon River escapement monitoring in Alaska, $200,000 for Yukon River management studies in Alaska, $160,000 for Yukon River public education on the salmon treaty in Alaska, $1,000,000 for Yukon River treaty implementation, $1,270,000 for marine mammal protection in Alaska, $250,000 for whirling disease research in Montana, and $100,000 for salmon and trout recovery work on the Columbia and Snake Rivers by the University of Idaho. Sewer replacement for the White Sulphur Springs NFH, WV is addressed in the construction account. Atlantic salmon recovery is addressed in the Endangered Species Act recovery program.

In general administration, there is an increase of $750,000 for travel and decreases of $1,000,000 for the National Fish and Wildlife Foundation and $825,000 for audits (which are funded under the Office of Inspector General salaries and expenses account). Grants for Atlantic salmon (Gulf of Maine) through the National Fish and Wildlife Foundation are addressed in the Endangered Species Act recovery program.

The managers agree to the following:

1. A total of $29,000,000 for infrastructure improvement is charged against the conservation spending category.

2. $850,000 is allocated to the Service for the Pima County, Arizona, regional multi-species habitat conservation planning effort that will result in Endangered Species Act Section 10 permits and is developed in cooperation with the following entities: the municipalities in Pima County (to include at least the City of Tucson, Town of Marana, and Town of Oro Valley) through a Cooperative Agreement by and among the County and participating municipalities based on the Service's Habitat Conservation Planning Handbook HCP MOU, and with the State of Arizona, Pima County interest groups, and Pima County citizens.

3. The $200,000 increase for wolf monitoring activities in Idaho is to be managed by the Service's Snake River Basin Office in Boise, Idaho.

4. The Service is strongly encouraged to work with the Idaho Office of Species Conservation and Bruneau Hot Springs Snail Conservation Committee in support of the Bruneau Hot Springs snail program, including conservation easement financing and water conservation practices, using appropriate grant programs administered by the Service.

5. The Service should place a high priority on the staffing and planning needs at the Hanford Reach National Monument, WA and on the unmet need for invasive plant control at the Loxahatchee NWR, FL.

6. The additional funds in hatchery operations and maintenance for the Leadville NFH, CO are provided with the expectation that the Department will ensure that the Bureau of Reclamation provides its share of funds for the project, consistent with the Bureau's mitigation responsibility.

7. Work by the Service to mitigate the adverse effects of water resource development projects conducted by other Federal agencies should be performed on a cost reimbursable basis and the Service should receive full and fair compensation for such work.

8. Funding for the wildlife enhancement program in Starkville, Mississippi is provided to assist in the establishment of an educational program to assist private landowners. There is no commitment to future funding.

9. Of the $2,246,000 provided for the continuation of activities begun in fiscal year 1997 to combat whirling disease and related fish health issues, $700,000 is for the National Partnership on the Management of Wild and Native Cold Water Fisheries, $250,000 is for the purpose of resistant trout research to be coordinated through the Whirling Disease Foundation, and $1,296,000 is to continue the National Wild Fish Health Survey, to expand whirling disease investigations, and to recruit and train health professionals.

10. The U.S. Army Corps of Engineers is currently conducting a major review of different approaches to preserving the Meadowlands wetlands area in northern New Jersey. The managers understand that the Service has no plan to establish a new National Wildlife Refuge System unit in this area but believes that the Service can be a helpful partner in this review by adding its unique expertise on the elements of the study that pertain to conservation of wildlife, particularly migratory birds. The managers have deleted without prejudice the earmark in the Senate bill for a separate U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service Meadowlands study. Instead, the managers direct the Service to provide in-depth advice and consultation to the Corps to ensure that the study reflects the most appropriate recommendations for the support of wildlife in any future Meadowlands plans. The managers believe this will involve a substantial commitment of Fish and Wildlife Service resources to the Corps' effort, approximately equal to the $140,000 specified in the Senate bill.

11. The Service is encouraged to work with Marion County, Oregon and other stakeholders to address the long-term preservation of critical wetlands and wildlife habitat in the Lake Labish Basin.

The managers have agreed to a technical change to the conservation spending category bill language as proposed by the Senate, and a technical change as proposed by the House on merging prior year funds for infrastructure improvement under the conservation spending category.

The House proposed bill language designating specific amounts for the endangered species listing program and for critical habitat designations has been modified to adopt the Senate funding level for the listing program and to specify that the critical habitat designation limitation is exclusive of funds needed for litigation support.

Senate proposed earmarks for a study of the Hackensack Meadowlands in New Jersey, for Atlantic salmon grants in Maine, and for University of Idaho research on salmon and trout recovery are not retained in statutory language. Each of these items is addressed above.

The managers are concerned that the Service's construction program is not based on a sound strategic plan that clearly identifies priorities for the construction of headquarters, maintenance, visitor, and education facilities. For the past few years, construction budget requests have been inadequate and limited, almost exclusively, to health and safety-related projects. As a result, construction priorities outside that narrow scope have been set by the Congress. Management personnel within the Service have taken advantage of Congressional earmarks by attempting to convert a large number of Congressionally earmarked projects, including basic repair projects, into proposals for large, expensive visitor and education centers. The managers believe that the Service needs to take control of the priority setting process for construction and to set fair and reasonable priorities for construction outside the health and safety arena. Further, funding for the highest priority refuge and hatchery headquarters, visitor/education center construction projects, and visitor contact stations should be justified and requested in annual budget submissions.

The managers expect the Service to focus on providing on-the-ground refuge experiences for visitors and modest visitor/education centers and visitor contact stations. The Service should develop standardized designs for education and visitor centers and for visitor contact stations. The managers suggest that the maximum cost for any visitor center should not exceed $3 million unless there are extreme, extenuating circumstances, such as the high cost of materials transport and construction in Alaska. The managers expect the Service to treat the maximum amount as a true ceiling and not as the amount that every visitor center will receive. Also, visitor contact stations should have a much lower maximum funding level.

The managers expect the Service to pursue cost sharing, including in-kind services and contributions, in establishing priorities for construction. Further, the size of visitor centers and headquarters buildings should be related to current visitation and currently established ''minimum staffing levels'' and not based on comprehensive conservation plan or other projections. The guidelines and specifications developed by the Service should address size and function, sustainability, energy efficiency, people flow, and operating costs. The managers also expect the Service to develop unified outreach materials for visitor facilities.

The Service should report to the House and Senate Committees on Appropriations no later than February 1, 2002, on its priority setting and evaluation process for construction projects. Supervisory and management personnel within the Service should be held accountable for implementing Service construction priorities and should be clearly directed to refrain from operating as ''free agents'' in support of specific construction proposals outside that process.

Finally, the managers caution the Service that its refuge-specific comprehensive conservation plans are raising unrealistic expectations, both within and outside the Service, with respect to construction, land acquisition, and operations and maintenance funding availability. The managers expect the Service to place a clear and realistic statement in the front of each comprehensive conservation plan stating that such plans detail program planning levels that are substantially above current budget allocations and, as such, are for Service strategic planning and program prioritization purposes only. Such plans do not constitute a commitment for refuge boundary expansions, staffing increases, or funding for future refuge-specific land acquisitions, construction projects or operational and maintenance increases.

The managers agree to the following:

1. The funds provided for the Northwest Power Planning Area are for construction of fish screens, fish passage devices, and related features, pursuant to Public Law 106–502.

2. No funds are provided for an administrative center and visitor facility at Pelican Island NWR, FL. The Service should identify a site for, and justify the cost of, such a facility in future budget requests.

3. The Crusoe Conservation Center at the Montezuma NWR, NY is being funded largely with State and local funding from the State of New York, the local school district, Ducks Unlimited, and the Audubon Society. The managers encourage the Service to pursue such cost sharing for construction projects on other refuges.

4. The Service should pursue potential cost-sharing arrangements for construction of the Waccamaw NWR, SC visitor and education center.

5. No funds are included for planning and design of a research facility at the Sevilleta NWR, NM. The Service should consider such a facility in the context of its construction priorities for fiscal year 2003.

6. Further funding for barn rehabilitation at John Hay NWR, NH, if needed, should be provided from other sources such as historic preservation groups.

LAND ACQUISITION

The conference agreement provides $99,135,000 for land acquisition instead of $104,401,000 as proposed by the House and $108,401,000 as proposed by the Senate. Funds should be distributed as follows:

The funds included for the Great Salt Pond NWR, RI are subject to authorization.

The managers direct the Service to make land acquisition requests for individual refuge units, rather than the current practice of making requests at the refuge complex level.

None of the funding provided for land acquisition shall be used to acquire land for the placement of a visitor/interpretive center, without specifically identifying this purpose in the budget justification for both the land acquisition and construction accounts.

The managers have included bill language authorizing the purchase of common stock of Yauhannah Properties, Inc. The managers understand that the Yauhannah Properties, Inc. sole holding is property within the boundary of the Waccamaw National Wildlife Refuge, and they are only making the property available through the sale of common stock. Therefore, the managers are aware that it may be necessary for the Service to acquire this parcel by purchasing the common stock. The managers note that this purchase presents a number of complexities outside the Service's expertise, including potential tax implications. The managers expect that the Service should not assume any Federal, State, or other jurisdiction tax liability by acquiring this property through the purchase of common stock. The managers also expect that the purchase of common stock should only occur if the United States does not assume any material unanticipated liabilities or assume any additional liability or expense than it would otherwise assume if the underlying property were acquired.

The managers continue to be concerned about the Service's land acquisition budgeting and its land acquisition policy. In response to continuing oversight by the Appropriations Committees, the Service has developed a proposal to streamline staffing and to reform its approach to land acquisition budgeting and program implementation. The managers expect the Service to implement its proposal to reduce staffing from the current FTE level of 198 to 156 FTEs by October 1, 2003. The Service should make much greater use of contract resources for appraisals, cartography and surveying associated with land acquisition. The practice of refuge personnel and endangered species personnel charging costs to land acquisition should be terminated unless there are reimbursable agreements in place.

The managers have agreed to bill language to permit the limited use of project funding for overhead cost allocation consistent with the Service's cost allocation methodology during fiscal year 2002 only. The maximum amount that can be assessed against all land acquisition projects in fiscal year 2002 is $2,500,000 and the managers urge the Service to use savings from staffing attrition and other streamlining efforts to reduce, to the greatest extent possible, the amount assessed to a number well below the maximum allowable level.

The managers expect the Service to identify clearly its land acquisition planning requirements in the fiscal year 2003 and future budget requests and to justify fully those requirements as a separate line item in the land acquisition or resource management account. Likewise, any overhead cost allocation should be minimized and justified fully as a separate ''cost allocation methodology'' line item in the land acquisition account.

The managers expect the Service to report semi-annually on progress in implementing its land acquisition streamlining proposal and to achieve the October 1, 2003 staffing goals sooner than that date to the maximum extent practicable. The first progress report is due no later than February 1, 2002. Also, the managers strongly support the policy requiring Director approval of any refuge boundary expansion and expect the Service to justify any such approvals in the semi-annual report.

Land acquisition reform should be incorporated as a critical performance element in the Service's supervisory performance standards at the highest levels in headquarters, regional offices and the field. This performance element should be taken very seriously within the Service and the semi-annual reports to the House and Senate Committees on Appropriations should address specifically management performance on this element. The managers remind the Service that land acquisition reform should not be limited to implementing the Service's streamlining proposal. It should also apply to the individual manager's responsibility to adhere to the Service's land acquisition prioritization process and not operate as a ''free agent'' in support of specific land acquisition proposals outside that process.

Finally, the managers caution the Service that its refuge-specific comprehensive conservation plans are raising unrealistic expectations, both within and outside the Service, with respect to future land acquisition, construction, and operations and maintenance funding availability. The managers expect the Service to place a clear and realistic statement in the front of each comprehensive conservation plan stating that such plans detail program planning levels that are substantially above current budget allocations and, as such, are for Service strategic planning and program prioritization purposes only. Such plans do not constitute a commitment for refuge boundary expansions, staffing increases, or funding for future refuge-specific land acquisitions, construction projects or operational and maintenance increases.

LANDOWNER INCENTIVE PROGRAM

The conference agreement provides $40,000,000 for the landowner incentive program instead of $50,000,000 as proposed by both the House and the Senate.

STEWARDSHIP GRANTS

The conference agreement provides $10,000,000 for stewardship grants as proposed by both the House and the Senate.

COOPERATIVE ENDANGERED SPECIES CONSERVATION FUND

The conference agreement provides $96,235,000 for the cooperative endangered species conservation fund instead of $107,000,000 as proposed by the House and $91,000,000 as proposed by the Senate. Changes to the House level include a decrease of $12,000,000 for habitat conservation plan land acquisition and an increase of $1,235,000 for program administration.

NATIONAL WILDLIFE REFUGE FUND

The conference agreement provides $14,414,000 for the national wildlife refuge fund as proposed by the Senate instead of $16,414,000 as proposed by the House. None of these funds are charged against the conservation spending category.

NORTH AMERICAN WETLANDS CONSERVATION FUND

The conference agreement provides $43,500,000 for the North American wetlands conservation fund instead of $45,000,000 as proposed by the House and $42,000,000 as proposed by the Senate. Decreases to the House level include $1,440,000 for wetlands conservation grants and $60,000 for program administration.

The managers understand that the Caddo Lake Institute in partnership with the Division of International Conservation and the National Wetlands Research Center in Lafayette, Louisiana are interested in pursuing a RAMSAR-based wetlands science, site management and education program. The managers strongly encourage the Service to work with these groups to explore the possibility of funding such an activity through a North American Wetlands Conservation Act grant or another Service program.

The managers have agreed to bill language, as proposed by the House, limiting increased grant funding above the fiscal year 2001 level to projects in the United States. The Senate had no similar provision.

NEOTROPICAL MIGRATORY BIRD CONSERVATION

The conference agreement provides $3,000,000 for the neotropical migratory bird conservation program instead of $5,000,000 as proposed by the House and no funding as proposed by the Senate. None of these funds are charged against the conservation spending category.

The managers expect the program to be administered by the division of bird habitat conservation but the Service should incorporate international program staff expertise into the oversight and administration of the program.

MULTINATIONAL SPECIES CONSERVATION FUND

The conference agreement provides $4,000,000 for the multinational species conservation fund as proposed by both the House and the Senate.

The managers have agreed to bill language, as proposed by the House, specifying the public law citations for the Asian elephant and the rhino and tiger funds.

STATE WILDLIFE GRANTS

(INCLUDING RESCISSION OF FUNDS)

The conference agreement provides $85,000,000 for State wildlife grants in fiscal year 2002 instead of $100,000,000 as proposed by both the House and the Senate. Within this amount, $5,000,000 is for a competitive grant program for Indian tribes. The agreement also provides for the rescission of $25,000,000 from the fiscal year 2001 appropriation rather than a rescission of $49,890,000 as proposed by the Senate and no rescission as proposed by the House.

The managers agree to the clarification of the ''full array'' of wildlife requirement for planning contained in the House report.

The managers have agreed to the distribution formula in bill language proposed by the Senate rather than the formula proposed by the House. The managers have also agreed to a technical change to the conservation spending category bill language proposed by the Senate.

TRIBAL WILDLIFE GRANTS

The conference agreement provides no funding under this heading for tribal wildlife grants; however, $5,000,000 is earmarked under the State wildlife grant program for this purpose.

NATIONAL PARK SERVICE

OPERATION OF THE NATIONAL PARK SYSTEM

The conference agreement provides $1,476,977,000 for the operation of the National park system instead of $1,480,336,000 as proposed by the House and $1,473,128,000 as proposed by the Senate. Of this amount, $2,000,000 for the Youth Conservation Corps program is derived from the conservation spending category.

The agreement provides $318,827,000 for resource stewardship as proposed by the House instead of $317,996,000 as proposed by the Senate. The agreement provides $297,543,000 for visitor services as proposed by the House instead of $298,343,000 as proposed by the Senate.

The agreement provides $481,088,000 for maintenance instead of $483,197,000 as proposed by the House and $478,701,000 as proposed by the Senate. Changes to the House level include increases totaling $600,000 for the New River Gorge National River to hire local crews to improve visitor access and facilities, remove structures posing hazards to visitors, and provide technical support and maintenance for the parkway. There is a reduction of $2,709,000 for the repair and rehabilitation program. Within the total for repair and rehabilitation the following projects should be funded: $675,000 for the Great Smoky Mountains National Park including $375,000 to repair the historic log cabins and a $300,000 general increase for maintenance needs, $400,000 for the George Washington Memorial Parkway, $175,000 for the Klondike Goldrush National Historic Park, and $400,000 for the Indiana Dunes National Lakeshore.

The conference agreement provides $272,921,000 for park support instead of $271,371,000 as proposed by the House and $271,490,000 as proposed by the Senate. Changes to the House level include increases of $200,000 for Wild and Scenic Partnership Rivers, $2,000,000 for Lewis and Clark Challenge Cost Share program grants and a decrease of $650,000 for financial audits, which have been funded under the Inspector General account. The entire $200,000 increase for Wild and Scenic Partnerships Rivers should be allocated directly to the eight partnership rivers through the Northeast Regional Office. The funds should be equally divided among the areas. The managers direct that no overhead costs may be charged to this money including the hiring of new staff. Any technical assistance should be provided by the existing rivers, trails and conservation assistance regional staff.

The agreement provides $104,598,000 for external administrative costs as proposed by the Senate instead of $107,398,000 as proposed by the House. The change to the House level is a reduction of $2,800,000 for bandwidth needs.

Following enactment of this Act, the National Park Service should make the necessary adjustments to align the additional operation funds for the purposes approved by the House and Senate Committees on Appropriations with the proper budget subactivities.

The managers remain supportive of the parks and programs of the Service. Each year, efforts are made to provide additional operational increases, over and above the request, to keep pace with the growing demands on the system and the Service. While some additional hiring may be necessary, the managers strongly encourage the Service to consider carefully the outyear implications of hiring decisions being made with available funds. Inflationary adjustments, pay cost requirements, and other dollars necessary to support employees grow over time. At a time of budget uncertainty, NPS managers should be cautious in committing to the hiring of additional personnel that may not be sustainable over time if budget increases are not forthcoming in future years.

The managers reinforce the direction in the House report regarding the cost and size of visitor centers, heritage centers and environmental education centers. Nearly five years ago, the Service was cautioned to be more realistic about the development of General Management Plans, which, in many cases, have become unrealistic documents which tend to include expensive, oversized buildings and other projects that are not essential or central to the mission of the park. In many instances, superintendents, working outside the National Park Service's budget process, put forward proposals for visitor centers that are oversized and do not take into account the location, current visitation and staffing levels of the specific unit. These projects often compete directly against backlog maintenance projects and other construction priority needs of the Service.

The managers direct the Director to take these repeated concerns seriously and prepare a response by February 1, 2002, which proposes a new National policy regarding the preparation of General Management Plans, addresses the issue of oversized structures, establishes appropriate scope for new proposed facilities, and establishes cost and planning parameters to be followed by all parks.

The managers expect the Director and the Regional Directors to be familiar with the scope of projects proposed, and to withhold approval of plans and projects that are not consistent with the policy to be articulated. This applies to proposals that are being officially considered through the budget process and proposals that are being considered independently. The managers understand that lines of authority flow from the Director through the Regional Directors to the parks, and greater discipline must be imposed in complying with established policy.

The managers also suggest that there should be a priority process for proposing new visitor facilities, when needed, and that the Service consider seriously the inclusion of this type of facility in the budget process when it meets a priority need of the Park System. The managers are concerned that priority systems for line-item construction which rely solely on backlog maintenance as a determining factor for funding will exacerbate the trend towards bypassing the established budget process for visitor services facilities. The National Park Service and the Department of the Interior are encouraged to agree on one common priority system that reflects the breadth of the Service's mission, with a strong emphasis on addressing backlog issues while responding to the emerging challenges facing the Service.

The managers have agreed to the Senate bill language providing two-year availability for maintenance, repair or rehabilitation projects, an automated facility management software system, and comprehensive facility condition assessments.

The managers have retained language, proposed by the House, which precludes the Service from establishing a new associate director position for business practices and partnerships. The managers agree that the Service needs to enhance its capacities in these areas, particularly with regard to strategic direction in the areas of concessions and fee management. Rather than reorganizing and creating more positions, at a time when the Administration is requiring agencies to review their workforces and streamline their organizations, the managers expect the Service to focus on increasing the technical and financial expertise needed to improve and protect the financial interests of parks on behalf of the taxpayers. Not all of these skills need to be hired on a permanent basis. Contracts and consultants should be used as appropriate. In filling positions in the concessions and fee areas, the managers expect the Service to abandon the traditional position descriptions and job screening criteria, and recruit for new employees who possess the necessary financial and strategic backgrounds. The managers have supported most of the business plans developed to date, and recommend that the types of skills used in that project be put to greater use within the National Park Service.

The managers have agreed to modify the Senate language regarding the Lewis and Clark Challenge Cost Share program to limit single awards to no more than $250,000 instead of $100,000 as proposed by the Senate. The managers also want to make clear that the competitive funds may be used for signature events, planning, visitor services and safety information.

The managers are aware of work that has been done at Glacier National Park to make several boat docks and trails accessible to park visitors with disabilities. The managers applaud these efforts, and urge the Service to allocate the funds necessary to complete similar work at the heavily used dock at Lake McDonald Lodge.

The managers commend the Service for beginning to include the role of slavery in its interpretations at Civil War Battlefields and Monuments along with other factors such as State sovereignty rights, economics including trade and tariffs, and broader cultural differences. The managers encourage the Service to continue to diversify and expand its interpretations so that all of these complex factors can be better understood.

The managers are supportive of efforts by the Service to expand diversity, not only in the workforce but also in the types of parks that comprise the system and in the outreach that is done to attract a broader spectrum of visitors to the resources of the Service. The managers are supportive of the cultural resources diversity initiative and encourage the Service to build on the successes of this effort in support of greater progress across all programs. The managers direct the Service to have an interdisciplinary team representing headquarters and the field prepare a comprehensive report on its various diversity initiatives, especially as they affect visitation and employment, and report back to the Committees on these findings by March 31, 2002. The report should incorporate those aspects of the Service's diversity action plan, which are targeted at improving performance, as well as the Director's plan for communicating internally and externally to the Service on the importance of these issues. The report should then be updated annually. The Service is encouraged to pursue opportunities to extend its outreach efforts in ways that do not require increased funding.

The managers are aware of efforts by the Department of the Interior to work with State and local authorities to prepare land use plans for the former Bureau of Mines property near Fort Snelling, Minnesota. The managers have deferred consideration of funding for this project pending conclusion of these discussions and presentation to the Committee of a land use plan which clarifies the total cost of the project, the Federal share of such costs, and more precise details regarding the role to be played by the Federal government. The managers are hopeful that a formal proposal can be considered prior to conference on the fiscal year 2003 bill.

UNITED STATES PARK POLICE

The conference agreement provides $65,260,000 for the United States Park Police as proposed by the House, instead of $66,106,000 as proposed by the Senate.

The managers have been concerned for several years about fiscal management and accountability of the U.S. Park Police. As a result, the Committees directed the National Academy of Public Administration (NAPA) to conduct a review of the USPP's goals, mission, financial management and accountability as well as its staffing, equipment, and other needs. The Academy completed its review in August and made extensive recommendations on needed improvements.

The managers direct the Department, in cooperation with the National Park Service and the United States Park Police, to develop a detailed plan to implement the comprehensive recommendations of NAPA described in the August 2001 report. The Department should forward its implementation plan to the House and Senate Committees on Appropriations no later than December 15, 2001.

NATIONAL RECREATION AND PRESERVATION

The conference agreement provides $66,159,000 for National recreation and preservation instead of $51,804,000 as proposed by the House and $66,287,000 as proposed by the Senate. The agreement provides $549,000 for recreation programs as proposed by the House instead of $555,000 as proposed by the Senate.

The agreement provides $10,930,000 for natural programs as proposed by the House instead of $11,595,000 as proposed by the Senate. Within the amount provided for the Rivers and Trails Conservation Assistance program, $250,000 is earmarked for work establishing a 740-mile Northern Forest Canoe Trail through the States of Vermont, New York, Maine, and New Hampshire. The managers urge the program to give priority consideration to the Eightmile River, the Washington-Rochambeau National Historic Trail and Clark County, Nevada. The managers are concerned with National Park Service decisions to continue Rivers and Trails Conservation Assistance earmarks as permanent increases to base funding. If the National Park Service wishes to continue an earmark it should be identified as a continuing project in the budget justification.

The agreement provides $20,769,000 for cultural programs instead of $20,019,000 as proposed by the House and $20,451,000 as proposed by the Senate. Changes to the House level include an increase of $250,000 for the Heritage Education Model and $500,000 for the newly authorized Underground Railroad grant program, of which $250,000 is for a grant to the Underground Railroad Coalition of Delaware. This program should be managed by the same grants staff as the Underground Railroad technical assistance program. This entire amount should be used for grants. The $250,000 earmarked in the House report to continue development of a model Heritage Education Initiative is in cooperation with Northwestern State University of Louisiana. Within available funds, the managers direct that $300,000 be available for Heritage Preservation, Inc.

The conference agreement provides $1,718,000 for international park affairs as proposed by the House instead of $1,732,000 as proposed by the Senate.

The agreement provides $397,000 for environmental compliance and review as proposed by the House instead of $401,000 as proposed by the Senate. Also provided is $1,582,000 for grant administration as proposed by the House instead of $1,605,000 as proposed by the Senate.

The conference agreement provides $13,209,000 for heritage partnership programs instead of $12,458,000 as proposed by the House and $13,368,000 as proposed by the Senate. This total includes $13,092,000 for individual heritage areas and $117,000 for administrative support. Funds are to be distributed as follows:

The conference agreement provides $17,005,000 for statutory or contractual aid instead of $4,151,000 as proposed by the House and $16,580,000 as proposed by the Senate. The funds are to be distributed as follows:

URBAN PARK AND RECREATION FUND

The conference agreement provides $74,500,000 for the historic preservation fund instead of $77,000,000 as proposed by the House and $74,000,000 as proposed by the Senate. The change to the House is a reduction of $2,500,000 for a grant to the National Trust for Historic Preservation for its historic sites program.

Included in the total is $30,000,000 to continue the Save America's Treasures program. Save America's Treasures funds are subject to a fifty percent cost share, and no single project may receive more than one grant from this program. The managers have not included the $4,972,000 for utilities and campground replacement at Acadia National Park because the funds cannot be obligated until 2003. However, the managers are strongly supportive of this project and intend to provide these funds in fiscal year 2003. The managers have included $680,000 to initiate planning for a visitor center at Arches National Park in Utah. The Service is directed to complete this project for $6,800,000 including all design, construction and exhibits. The funds provided for a memorial commemorating President John Adams are for planning and design, in cooperation with non-Federal partners.

The managers have included $500,000 in planning to complete an environmental assessment for proposed visitor education centers at Assateague Island National Seashore. The managers are aware of proposals for two separate facilities that would be constructed in close proximity to one another at this location. The park has advocated for a new 7,000 square foot Barrier Island Education Center; and the State of Maryland, in partnership with the park, has proposed an 11,000 square foot Coastal Ecology Learning Center. The managers are concerned about the potential duplication of efforts in these proposed facilities, as well as both the construction and operational costs. The preliminary cost estimate for the proposed park facility alone is $9,500,000. The managers strongly encourage the park and its partners to develop a comprehensive program that addresses and prioritizes the proposed program requirements and reduces the overall scope and cost of the consolidated project. Combining these two efforts into one facility will save both Federal and State resources. The managers expect the Service to report to the House and Senate Committees on Appropriations prior to the obligation of any funds for construction of this project. This is not a commitment to fund this project in the future.

Although the conference agreement contains no specific funding for the Stiltsville project in Biscayne National Park, as soon as the Service assumes direct responsibility for the structures the managers expect the Service to allocate such repair and rehabilitation funds as are necessary to maintain properly the structures in a manner consistent with the management policy that is adopted.

The managers have included $775,000 for the Highlands Center in the Cape Cod National Seashore to accomplish core utility system replacement at the closed North Truro Air Force Station. The potable water and fire suppression systems will be repaired and the septic facilities will be replaced to prepare for the conversion of the station into the Highlands Center. The Center is a cooperative effort between the National Park Service and other public and private groups and will serve as the focal point for environmental sciences, traditional Cape Cod culture, and the arts for the public on Cape Cod. The total Federal investment for infrastructure improvements will be $2,500,000; the balance will be raised through private sources.

The managers have agreed to provide $1,000,000 towards the construction of a music center at Fisher Peak in the Blue Ridge Parkway. The managers direct that the $500,000 in unobligated balances from the Fisher Peak amphitheater funding, appropriated by the Committees in fiscal year 1998, be reprogrammed to this project. These funds complete the National Park Service commitment to this project.

Both the House and Senate bills included $6,000,000 for stabilization of the Many Glacier Hotel at Glacier National Park. The managers have agreed to reallocate $1,500,000 of these funds to complete the wastewater treatment system at Lake McDonald, the cost of which is higher than original estimates due to design modifications required to comply with State and Federal treatment requirements. The remaining $4,500,000 provided for Many Glacier stabilization are sufficient to complete the most urgently needed repairs. The managers note that this reallocation of funds will have no impact on the expected ability of the Hotel to open for the 2002 season, and will in no way enhance the concessionaire's possessory interest in the Hotel. The managers encourage the Service to continue working with interested parties to resolve the question of possessory interest, and to address other issues that require resolution in order to ensure the restoration and continued operation of the Hotel.

The managers have included $2,000,000 for the Downeast Heritage Center in Maine. This completes the Federal commitment to this project. The managers have provided $700,000 for restoration work at Fort Washington Park in Maryland. The managers direct that the balance of the funds to complete this project be provided from unobligated 2001 funds available to the park.

Included in the conference report is $4,130,000 to complete the Jacob Riis Park bathhouse facilities at Gateway NRA in New York. The conference report includes $200,000 for a feasibility study at Gateway NRA that should: (1) evaluate the demand for a year-round swimming pool at Jacob Riis Park; (2) determine the costs of constructing and operating such a facility; (3) identify viable funding options for the project (including concessions, third party contributions, partnerships, leasing opportunities etc.); and (4) assess the economic impact of alternative development sites at Riis Park. The managers remind the Service that funding for the feasibility study is not a commitment for future construction.

The managers have included $795,000 in planning for improvements associated with the upcoming 400th anniversary of the settlement at Jamestown, VA. These funds are to be used to complete the development concept plan and environmental impact statement initiated with funding provided in fiscal year 2001, and to conduct planning for the proposed collections storage building for the NPS collection and the associated access road. None of the funds are to be used to initiate planning associated with demolition or rehabilitation of the existing visitor center nor with planning for any other new facilities, which might be envisioned for Jamestown. The Service should report to the House and Senate Committees on Appropriations by April 1, 2002 on the private fundraising effort.

The managers have included $500,000 for the planning and design of a visitor learning center at Great Basin National Park, NV. The total Federal share for the center is not to exceed $4,200,000, including the planning and design funds.

The conference report includes $1,500,000 for the construction of the Morris Thomson Visitor and Native Cultural Center in Alaska. It is the intent of the managers that the National Park Service commitment to this project will not exceed $10,000,000 including planning, construction, furnishings and exhibits.

The managers have included $600,000 to complete planning at Morristown NHP in New Jersey. A total of $3,200,000 will be required in fiscal year 2003 to complete the Federal share of this project.

Also included is $350,000 to develop a concept plan for the National Center for the American Revolution. This funding is not a guarantee of a future Federal commitment, and it is the intent of the managers that the Center be mostly funded through private sources.

The $300,000 included for a Niagara River and Gorge special resource study is subject to authorization. The managers have included $5,000,000 for the Palace of the Governors. This completes the Federal commitment to this project. The conference agreement provides $3,062,000 to complete the Shiloh NMP visitor facility.

The conference agreement provides $1,000,000 for planning the rehabilitation of Moton Field at the Tuskegee Airmen National Historic Site. Before making these funds available for obligation, the managers direct the Service to consult with the House and Senate Committees on Appropriations in order to define better the overall scope, cost and timing of the project.

The managers note that the $1,500,000 appropriation for preservation of the barracks at the Vancouver National Historic Reserve exceeds the currently authorized amount. Further appropriations for this project will not be considered unless the authorization is increased.

The managers have included $250,000 to complete the Wilson's Creek National Battlefield. This completes federal funding for this project.

The managers direct the National Park Service to contract with the National Academy of Public Administration to conduct a review of how effectively the Service has implemented the recommendations of the Academy's 1998 report on reforms to the Service's construction program, including the Denver Service Center operations.

The managers have consolidated the predesign, supplementary services, and planning activities into one activity. The managers understand that the National Park Service will still track spending in each of these categories separately to ensure that the NAPA guidelines are followed. This consolidation will not affect the planning requirements of projects that will be worked on, but rather, contribute to the appropriate accounting of funds in support of projects appropriated or scheduled in the five year construction plan, while allowing sufficient flexibility to direct funds to the appropriate planning category.

The managers urge the NPS to include sufficient funds in the fiscal year 2003 budget request for necessary repairs and improvement of facilities at the Wright Brothers National Memorial in North Carolina in preparation for the First Flight Centennial Celebration.

Within the amount provided for Cuyahoga National Park, the managers have provided $200,000 for a platform and station at the south terminus of the Cuyahoga Valley Scenic Railroad. Twenty-four miles of the railroad run through the national park and addition of the platform and station will enhance the experience of park visitors.

LAND AND WATER CONSERVATION FUND

The managers agree to the following revision to the reprogramming guidelines for the National Park Service only. Lands shall not be acquired for more than the approved appraised value (as addressed in section 301(3) of Public Law 91–646) except for condemnations and declarations of taking and tracts with an appraised value of $500,000 or less, unless such acquisitions are submitted to the Committees on Appropriations for approval in compliance with established procedures.

The managers have not provided funding for Fuez conservation easements at the Grand Teton NP, as proposed by the Senate. Instead, the managers have provided funding for the Fuez conservation easements in the Forest Service land acquisition account under the Bridger-Teton NF.

The managers have provided $1,200,000 for the acquisition of the Weiler property at Denali NP. The National Park Service is directed to use the Bureau of Land Management as the appraiser of the property. The appraisal shall take into consideration the value of surface and subsurface rights, mineral rights, and any other development rights attendant with the property in accordance with applicable appraisal standards.

The funds included for Cumberland Gap NHP (Fern Lake), Moccasion Bend NHS, Puuhonua o Honaunau NHP and Vicksburg NMP are subject to authorization.

The conference agreement provides $1,000,000 for the Ebey's Landing National Historical Reserve. The managers direct that this sum, together with any unexpended funds from the fiscal year 2001 appropriation for Ebey's Landing, shall first be used to complete the purchase of the Pratt Estate properties. If any funds remain after the Pratt Estate properties have been acquired by the National Park Service, they may be used for acquisition of such other properties as the Service finds desirable.

The funds included for Greenbelt Park are subject to a non-Federal match.

The managers direct that $400,000 of the unobligated $2,400,000 currently available at the Petroglyph NM be used to conduct a boundary survey of that monument. The managers understand that this may ultimately mean that additional funds are required to complete acquisitions at Petroglyph NM.

ADMINISTRATIVE PROVISIONS

The managers have agreed to language contained in the House bill, which allows the Service to convey a leasehold or freehold interest in Cuyahoga NP, OH to allow for the development of utilities and parking needed by Everett Church within the national park.

UNITED STATES GEOLOGICAL SURVEY

SURVEYS, INVESTIGATIONS, AND RESEARCH

The conference agreement provides $914,002,000 for surveys, investigations, and research instead of $900,489,000 as proposed by the House and $892,474,000 as proposed by the Senate. Within this amount, $25,000,000 is from the conservation spending category.

Changes to the House for the national mapping programs include increases of $3,000,000 for Landsat 5 operations, $300,000 for the civil applications program, and $300,000 for urban dynamics, and a decrease of $996,000 for internet access.

Changes to the House for geology programs include increases of $1,000,000 for volcanic hazard equipment in Shemya, Alaska, $1,500,000 for the minerals at risk program, $500,000 for coastal erosion in North Carolina, $500,000 for land subsidence in Louisiana, $299,000 for Lake Mead studies, $450,000 for geologic mapping for Lake Mojave, and $474,000 for Yukon Flats geology surveys, and a decrease of $100,000 for the advanced seismic network.

Changes to the House for water resources include increases of $200,000 for a Berkley Pit study in Montana, $299,000 for the Lake Champlain toxic study, $499,000 for Hawaiian water monitoring, $5,000 for the Southern Maryland aquifer study, and $195,000 for the Noyes Slough study in Alaska, and decreases of $596,000 for the National Water Quality Assessment program, and $296,000 for water information and delivery.

The managers concur with the House direction to contract with the National Academy of Sciences to examine water resources research funded by all Federal agencies and by significant non-Federal organizations. Based on information that the managers have received, it appears that water resources research is not well coordinated. The managers therefore direct that the Academy primarily consider the level and allocation of resources that are currently deployed in water research programs, both Federal and non-Federal, and provide recommendations for a national research program that maximizes the efficiency and effectiveness of existing programs. While the primary focus of this study deals with the existing research agenda, the managers would like an answer to the question of whether the Nation is making an adequate level of investment in water resources research.

Increases above the House for biological research include $400,000 for the Leetown science center, $300,000 for the Columbia environmental research center for pallid sturgeon studies, $250,000 for Chesapeake Bay terrapin research, $500,000 for a NBII Hawaii node, $180,000 for a Yukon River chum salmon study, $500,000 for biological information management and delivery, $50,000 for an Atlantic Salmon restoration study at the Tunison laboratory, and $748,000 for the continuation of the Mark Twain National Forest mining study to be accomplished in cooperation with the water resources division and the Forest Service.

Changes to the House for facilities include increases of $2,000,000 for phase one of the Leetown research center expansion, and $2,250,000 for the Center for Coastal Geology in Florida, and decreases of $300,000 for Leetown research center design and $898,000 for uncontrollable costs.

The funding provided for the construction of the Center for Coastal Geology in St. Petersburg, Florida is for a cooperative effort between the Survey and the St. Petersburg Downtown Partnership. The Partnership is providing a two-to-one match for the costs of constructing this science facility.

MINERALS MANAGEMENT SERVICE

ROYALTY AND OFFSHORE MINERALS MANAGEMENT

The conference agreement provides $150,667,000 for royalty and offshore minerals management instead of $149,867,000 as proposed by the House and $151,933,000 as proposed by the Senate.

Changes to the House for royalty and offshore minerals management include increases of $800,000 for the Center for Marine Resources, and $800,000 for the Marine Mineral Technology Center in Alaska, and a decrease of $800,000 as a transfer to the Inspector General for Bureau audits.

The managers have again provided $1,400,000 to the Offshore Technology Research Center to perform research for MMS through the cooperative agreement dated June 18, 1999.

The managers have agreed to the Senate proposed language for the royalty-in-kind program instead of the House language. The House language requiring that revenues be equal to or greater than royalty-in-value as determined by the regulations of March 15, 2000 has been dropped.

OIL SPILL RESEARCH

The conference agreement provides $6,105,000 for oil spill research as proposed by the House instead of $6,118,000 as proposed by the Senate.

OFFICE OF SURFACE MINING RECLAMATION AND ENFORCEMENT

REGULATION AND TECHNOLOGY

The conference agreement provides $102,800,000 for regulation and technology instead of $102,900,000 as proposed by the House and $102,144,000 as proposed by the Senate. Funding for the activities should follow the House recommendation except that the conference agreement reduces executive direction funding by $100,000 as proposed by the Senate; this transfers funds for external audits to the Inspector General's office. The Senate proposal to include $98,000 for fixed costs is not included. An additional $275,000 is estimated to be available for use from performance bond forfeitures.

ABANDONED MINE RECLAMATION FUND

The conference agreement provides $203,455,000 for the abandoned mine reclamation fund instead of $203,554,000 as proposed by the House and $203,171,000 as proposed by the Senate. Funding for the activities should follow the House recommendation except that the conference agreement reduces executive direction funding by $99,000 as proposed by the Senate; this transfers funds for external audits to the Inspector General's office. The Senate proposal to include $57,000 for fixed costs is not included. The managers have also included the House proposed bill language for minimum program States and the Senate proposed bill language continuing language carried in previous years dealing with certain aspects of the State of Maryland program.

BUREAU OF INDIAN AFFAIRS

OPERATION OF INDIAN PROGRAMS

The conference agreement provides $1,799,809,000 for the operation of Indian programs instead of $1,790,781,000 as proposed by the House and $1,804,322,000 as proposed by the Senate.

There is a decrease below the House for tribal priority allocations of $1,675,000 for self-governance compacts.

Changes to the House level for other recurring programs include increases of $2,000,000 for tribally controlled community colleges, $500,000 for Washington shellfish, and $150,000 for the Nez Perce rare species program, and a decrease of $45,000 for tribal management and development programs. None of the funds for Washington shellfish can be used to support access onto private lands by tribal fishers for their harvest purposes.

Increases above the House for non-recurring programs include $1,700,000 for the distance learning program in Montana, $500,000 for the Cheiron Foundation physician training program for rural and underserved education and outreach, $500,000 for a rural Alaska fire program, $350,000 for oil and gas permitting for the Uintah and Ouray agency, $400,000 for the tribal guiding program in Alaska, $326,000 for Cheyenne River Sioux prairie management, and $146,000 for Alaska legal services.

The managers believe that the aim of the Cheiron Foundation to utilize distance learning technology to train physicians' assistants and nurses to serve Native American communities is extremely promising. The managers expect the Foundation to focus the funding provided from this account on the aspects of the project that will bring the most benefit to Native American students and tribal communities, while pursuing other sources of funding to enhance the overall project.

There is an increase above the House for central office operations of $1,000 for general administration/policy.

Increases above the House for special programs and pooled overhead include $250,000 for enhancements to the Pomo Indian exhibits at the Grace Hudson Museum in Ukiah, California, $250,000 for the Alaska market access program, $509,000 for the United Tribes Technical College, $250,000 for the United Sioux Tribe Development Corporation, $100,000 for the Ponca Tribe development plan, $1,200,000 for the Crownpoint Institute,

$1,000,000 for the Yuut Elitnauviate, and $1,000,000 for an Alaska native aviation training program. The Bureau is directed to report to the Committees regularly regarding the expenditure of the funds provided for the native aviation training program and development of the program, including the partners involved, the number of pilots to be trained, out-year financing alternatives and other pertinent information.

The managers are concerned that the Bureau has shown little progress in addressing the land issues of the Canoncito Band of Navajos. The managers direct the Bureau to accelerate its efforts to open, at least, a part time office at Canoncito, New Mexico.

CONSTRUCTION

The conference agreement provides $357,132,000 for construction as proposed by the House instead of $360,132,000 as proposed by the Senate. The managers have not provided $3,000,000 for the tribal school construction demonstration program as proposed by the Senate. The managers support the goal of this demonstration program and have been approached by a number of tribes regarding additional funding following the demonstration's success in removing schools from the BIA priority list. While budgetary constraints have forced the managers to adopt the House proposal, the managers recommend that the Bureau of Indian Affairs continue the demonstration project as part of the President's fiscal year 2003 budget request.

INDIAN LAND AND WATER CLAIM SETTLEMENTS AND MISCELLANEOUS PAYMENTS TO INDIANS

The conference agreement provides $60,949,000 for Indian land and water claim settlements and miscellaneous payments to Indians as proposed by the House and the Senate.

INDIAN GUARANTEED LOAN PROGRAM ACCOUNT

The conference agreement provides $4,986,000 for the Indian guaranteed loan program as proposed by the House and the Senate.

DEPARTMENTAL OFFICES

INSULAR AFFAIRS

ASSISTANCE TO TERRITORIES

The conference agreement provides $78,950,000 for assistance to territories instead of $72,289,000 as proposed by the House and $76,450,000 as proposed by the Senate. The managers have agreed to Compact impact assistance funding increases above the levels proposed by the House of $4,000,000 for Hawaii and $1,000,000 each for Guam and the Commonwealth of the Northern Mariana Islands. The managers acknowledge the May 30, 2001, letter and report by the Secretary of the Interior concerning compact impact and therefore the Administration is encouraged to see that negotiations on the continuation of the Compacts are concluded in a timely fashion and to provide for future compact impact payments out of the available mandatory compact payments. The managers agree that the Secretary should ensure that representatives of Hawaii are consulted during the upcoming Compact renegotiations process so the impact to Hawaii of mitigating citizens from the freely associated states is appropriately considered. The conference agreement also includes the $200,000 for a utility privatization study in the U.S. Virgin Islands as proposed by the House, and the full funding level and bill language proposed by the Senate for the U.S. Virgin Islands FEMA loan repayment. The conference agreement retains the House proposed bill language concerning compensation for American Samoa High Court Justices and the House proposed report language concerning potential withholding of American Samoa operations funding.

COMPACT OF FREE ASSOCIATION

The conference agreement provides $23,245,000 for the Compact of Free Association as proposed by both the House and the Senate.

DEPARTMENTAL MANAGEMENT

SALARIES AND EXPENSES

The conference agreement provides $67,741,000 for salaries and expenses for departmental management, instead of $55,177,000 as proposed by the House and $67,541,000 as proposed by the Senate. Funds should be distributed as follows:

Departmental direction	$12,964,000
Management and coordination	24,905,000
Hearings and appeals	8,559,000
Central services	20,425,000
Bureau of Mines workers compensation/unemployment	888,000
Total	67,741,000

The managers concur with the concerns expressed in the Senate report regarding the capability, capacity, accuracy and security of departmental information systems. The managers are particularly concerned about information security weaknesses that have been identified by both the Inspector General and the General Accounting Office, and believe the Department should take immediate steps to address these weaknesses. The most efficient and effective means of improving information security will likely be through department-wide solutions, but individual program managers should also work in conjunction with the Department's Chief Information Officer to develop short and long term plans to address vulnerabilities that have been identified. Program managers must also be held accountable for ensuring that computer security is adequately implemented within their areas of responsibility. Methods to establish this accountability should include performance reviews, administrative sanctions for non-compliance, or adjustments in program funding if necessary.

The managers direct the Department of the Interior to study the viability of establishing an Enterprise Management Center to facilitate the Department's objective for budget and performance integration using financial information technology within the bureaus. As part of the review, the Department should consider which bureaus might benefit from being part of an initial pilot project. The managers expect this report to be forwarded to the House and Senate Committees on Appropriations by March 1, 2002.

The managers note that they have received numerous budget requests and reprogramming requests from the Federal land management agencies to purchase updated wireless communication infrastructure. In light of the Federal Communication Commission's ongoing review of spectrum allocations for wireless technologies, and the Government Accounting Office's current compilation of information for reports to Congress on this subject, the managers are concerned that substantial investments in wireless technologies may become obsolete due to imminent policy decisions regarding spectrum reallocation. The managers urge the agencies, whenever possible, to purchase equipment that can be reprogrammed to meet future spectrum allocations, and to purchase equipment that does not interfere with current emergency radio and GPS based systems.

OFFICE OF THE SOLICITOR

SALARIES AND EXPENSES

The conference agreement provides $45,000,000 for salaries and expenses of the Office of the Solicitor as proposed by the House instead of $44,074,000 as proposed by the Senate. Funds should be distributed as follows:

Legal services	$37,276,000
General administration	7,724,000
Total	45,000,000

OFFICE OF INSPECTOR GENERAL

SALARIES AND EXPENSES

The conference agreement provides $34,302,000 as proposed by the Senate instead of $30,490,000 as proposed by the House. Funds should be distributed as follows:

Audit	$18,680,000
Investigations	6,763,000
Policy & Management	7,402,000
Program Integrity	1,457,000
Total	34,302,000

OFFICE OF SPECIAL TRUSTEE FOR AMERICAN INDIANS

FEDERAL TRUST PROGRAMS

The conference agreement provides $99,224,000 for Federal trust programs as proposed by the House and Senate.

The managers wish to clarify the language included in the House report with respect to funding for an historical accounting. The managers note that both the House and Senate have provided the funds requested by the Administration for an historical accounting. However, the managers remain very concerned about the costs associated with such an accounting. Therefore, these funds may not be allocated prior to the report requested by the Committees detailing the methods and costs associated with an historical accounting.

The managers reiterate the position that they will not appropriate hundreds of millions of dollars for an historical accounting that provides funds for a protracted reconciliation process whose outcome is unlikely to be successful. If the Department, working with the plaintiffs and the Court, cannot find a cost effective method for an historical accounting, the Congress may have to consider a legislative remedy to resolve this and other litigation related issues.

INDIAN LAND CONSOLIDATION

The conference agreement provides $10,980,000 for Indian land consolidation programs as proposed by the House and the Senate.

NATURAL RESOURCE DAMAGE ASSESSMENT AND RESTORATION

NATURAL RESOURCE DAMAGE ASSESSMENT FUND

The conference agreement provides $5,497,000 for the natural resource damage assessment fund as proposed by the House instead of $5,872,000 as proposed by the Senate. The managers agree that, to the extent a national data management system is needed, funding for such a system should be addressed within the context of the fiscal year 2003 budget.

GENERAL PROVISIONS, DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR

The conference agreement includes sections 101, 103 through 106, and 108 through 111, which were identical in both the House and the Senate bills.

The conference agreement includes sections 113, 115, 116, 118, 121, 122, 123, 124, 125, and 126, which contained identical text in both the House and Senate bills, but the section numbers were different in the Senate bill.

Section 102 retains the text of section 102 as proposed by the Senate. Section 102 as proposed by the House had identical language as the Senate except for a grammatical difference of not spelling out ''thirty days''.

Section 107 retains the text of Senate section 107, which prohibits the Department of the Interior from using funds to conduct offshore preleasing, leasing and related activities in those areas under the June 12, 1998, moratorium. House section 107 had identical language except for omitting the term ''preleasing''.

Section 112 retains the language of House section 112 that prohibits the National Park Service from developing a reduced entrance fee program to accommodate non-local travel through a unit of the Park system. The Senate had no similar provision.

Section 114 modifies language proposed by the House and by the Senate (in section 113 of the Senate bill) dealing with grazing on BLM lands. The modification extends traditional grazing use on Federal lands managed by the National Park Service at Lake Roosevelt National Recreation Area in eastern Washington.

Section 117 retains the language of House section 117 continuing a provision carried in previous years placing a limitation on establishment of a Kankakee NWR in Indiana and Illinois that is inconsistent with the U.S. Army Corp of Engineers' efforts to control flooding and siltation. The Senate had no similar provision. The managers understand that this issue will be resolved shortly and this provision will not be carried in future years.

Section 119 retains the text of House section 119, which provides for the protection of lands at Huron Cemetery, KS. Section 117 as proposed by the Senate has identical text, with the exception of a difference in the use of punctuation.

Section 120 retains the text of section 120 as proposed by the House which continues a provision carried last year prohibiting the study or implementation of a plan to drain Lake Powell, or to reduce the water below that required to operate Glen Canyon Dam. The Senate had no similar provision.

Section 127 retains the text of section 124 as proposed by the Senate, which authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to use helicopters or motor vehicles to capture and transport horses and burros at the Sheldon and Hart NWRs. The House had no similar provision.

Section 128 modifies the text of section 126 as proposed by the Senate clarifying that the lands taken into trust for the Lytton Rancheria of California are still subject to all of the provisions of Public Law 100–497 and, in particular with respect to Class III gaming, the compact provisions of section 2710(d) or any relevant Class III gaming procedures. The managers further recognize that nothing in section 819 of Public Law 106–568 should be construed as permitting off reservation gaming by Indian tribes except in compliance with all relevant provisions of Public Law 100–497.

Section 129 retains the text of section 127 as proposed by the Senate, which renames Moore's Landing at the Cape Romain NWR in South Carolina as ''Garris Landing.'' The House had no similar provision.

Section 130 makes technical modifications to language proposed by the Senate in section 130 regarding cruise ship entries at Glacier Bay National Park and Preserve.

Section 131 retains the text of Senate section 131, which prevents the use of funds for the transfer of land on South Fox Island, Michigan without Congressional approval. The House had no similar provision. This section allows the Department of the Interior to continue working on processes pursuant to NEPA, including preparation of an EIS on the proposed land exchange, analysis of the State's proposal and a range of alternatives, and consideration of public input. Absent a showing that the agencies have not complied with NEPA, the managers, at this time, do not intend to include this or similar restrictions next year. This language affects current regulatory and legal processes, which are sufficient to protect the environment and the public's interests, by unnecessarily preventing the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service and the National Park Service from releasing a record of decision on the proposed land exchange until Congress passes a law authorizing the exchange.

Section 132 includes language, agreed to in previous years, authorizing the transfer of Federal land acquisition funds for Brandywine Battlefield, Mississippi National River and Recreational Area, Shenandoah Valley National Historic District, and Ice Age National Scenic Trail.

Section 133 makes a technical change to Public Law 106–568 regarding land transfer boundaries.

Section 134 clarifies that the Secretary of the Interior has the authority to determine whether Indian lands constitute a reservation. Nothing in this section shall be construed to permit gaming on the lands described in section 123 of Public Law 106–291.

Section 135 makes a technical correction to the Black Rock Desert-High Rock Canyon Emigrant Trails National Conservation Area Act, Public Law 106–554.

The conference agreement does not include language proposed by the Senate in section 125 permitting the transfer of funds between State grant programs managed by the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service and the National Park Service.

The conference agreement does not include the text of Senate section 128, which prevents the use of funds for mineral leasing and related activities in national monuments. This issue is addressed in Title III where the House language addressing this issue is retained.

The conference agreement does not include language proposed by the Senate in section 129 that would have expanded the special resource study area for Loess Hills in Iowa, or in section 132 dealing with the Pechanga Band of Indians, or in section 133 regarding Coastal Impact Assistance.

TITLE II—RELATED AGENCIES

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE FOREST SERVICE

FOREST AND RANGELAND RESEARCH

The conference agreement provides $241,304,000 for forest and rangeland research instead of $236,979,000 as proposed by the House and $242,822,000 as proposed by the Senate. Changes from the House bill include $475,000 for the Forest Products Lab lumber salvage research, WI, $500,000 for the Center for Bottomlands research, MS, $175,000 for applied research in the hardwood region of Pennsylvania and nearby areas, and $4,000,000 for Forest Inventory and Analysis (FIA). The conference agreement does not include the House proposed increase of $1,250,000 above the request for FIA and the managers agree that the Forest Service should not follow the House report instructions concerning the FIA program under this heading or under the national forest system heading. The conference agreement does not include the Senate proposal to add funds for fixed costs but it does include the Senate proposed general reduction below the House of $175,000. The conference agreement includes the House proposed increases for Bent Creek, NC, urban forestry research at Syracuse, NY, and Davis, CA, and Coweeta watershed research, NC. The conference agreement provides that the Northeastern States Research Cooperative, as authorized in Public Law 105–185, receive $2,000,000, $600,000 above the request. Of this amount, $1,000,000 should go to ecosystem research at the Hubbard Brook Project of the Forest Service Northeastern research station, NH, and $1,000,000 should go to the Vermont George Aiken School of Natural Resources for collaborative research with Forest Service scientists and other cooperators on economic development, forest management, and forest product research. The managers direct the Forest Service to maintain the research related presence at the former Intermountain Research Station at, or above, the current level, including the position of Assistant Station Director.

STATE AND PRIVATE FORESTRY

The conference agreement provides $291,221,000 for State and private forestry instead of $277,771,000 as proposed by the House and $287,331,000 as proposed by the Senate. These funds include $101,000,000 within the conservation spending category for forest legacy, and urban and community forestry as proposed by the Senate instead of $104,000,000 as proposed by the House.

The conference agreement provides $43,304,000 for Federal lands forest health management as proposed by the House, $25,000,000 for cooperative lands forest health management as proposed by the Senate, $25,310,000 for State fire assistance as proposed by the House, and $5,053,000 for volunteer fire assistance as proposed by both the House and the Senate. The conference agreement also includes additional funds for State fire and volunteer fire assistance as part of the national fire plan funding within the wildland fire management account.

The conference agreement includes $33,171,000 for forest stewardship instead of $32,941,000 as proposed by the House and $33,268,000 as proposed by the Senate. The only change from the House proposal for forest stewardship is the addition of $230,000 for the Chesapeake Bay program as proposed by the Senate. The conference agreement also includes $3,000,000 for the stewardship incentives program instead of $8,000,000 as proposed by the House. This allocation is not derived from the conservation spending category as proposed by the House. The managers direct the Forest Service to target the stewardship incentives program funds for non-Federal forestlands impacted by, or at immediate risk from, major forest pests such as gypsy moth and the southern pine beetle. The managers intend the stewardship incentives program to be administered by the Forest Service with cost-share payments to landowners to be provided by the State foresters or an equivalent State official.

The conference agreement includes $65,000,000 for the forest legacy program as proposed by the Senate instead of $60,000,000 as proposed by the House. This allocation is derived from the conservation spending category. The conference agreement provides specific funding levels for high priority projects and also provides $22,135,000 for the Forest Service to allocate to other projects and to cover the costs of Forest Service technical assistance, program administration, and State needs assessments and planning. The conference agreement has modified bill language proposed by the House and the Senate concerning approval of the Forest Service project selection. The conference agreement now requires the Forest Service to notify the House and Senate Committees on Appropriations in advance of undertaking specific forest legacy projects. The managers note the recent revision to the Puerto Rico forest legacy program standards and accordingly direct the Forest Service not to follow the House direction concerning this program in Puerto Rico. The conference agreement includes the following distribution of funds for the forest legacy program:

The conference agreement includes $36,000,000 for the urban and community forestry program as proposed by both the House and the Senate. This allocation is derived from the conservation spending category. The managers agree to the House proposal for this activity plus $50,000 for the West Virginia partnership coordinator, $350,000 for the Chicago, IL wilderness program, and $200,000 for the Cook County forest preserve, IL. The managers agree to the Senate proposed $600,000 general decrease. The managers are aware of Treepeople's proposed Center for Community Forestry in Los Angeles, CA, and its value as a national resource. The managers encourage the Forest Service to consider supporting this important urban forestry program. The managers encourage the Forest Service to participate in developing living memorials using trees that will recognize the tragic losses that occurred on September 11, 2001 in New York City, the Pentagon area, and southwest Pennsylvania.

The conference agreement includes the following distribution of funds for the economic action programs:

The conference agreement includes the bill language proposed by the Senate concerning a direct lump sum payment to the Kake Tribal Corporation, AK, but the funding total is $4,500,000. The managers understand that this is the final year of funding for kilns in Alaska. The Forest Service shall follow Senate instructions concerning the distribution of funds for the Ketchikan public utilities right-of-way clearing project. The managers have provided $500,000 for the Tahoe Regional Planning Authority and the South Lake Tahoe public utility to conduct the study of MTBE contamination authorized in the Lake Tahoe Restoration Act. The managers stress that subsequent funding to remedy this MTBE problem is not authorized by that Act and must come from sources other than Interior and related agencies appropriations acts, such as within the Environmental Protection Agency funding. The Cradle of Forestry conservation education funds include $100,000 for activities at the Cradle of Forestry in America in the Pisgah National Forest and $150,000 for the Education and Research Consortium of North Carolina to continue its cooperative environmental education activities with the Cradle of Forestry in the Pisgah National Forest.

The conference agreement includes $9,425,000 for Pacific Northwest Assistance instead of $9,200,000 as proposed by the House and $9,625,000 as proposed by the Senate. This funding includes House-proposed allocations plus an additional $225,000 for the base program. The conference agreement includes $5,015,000 for forest resource information and analysis as proposed by the Senate; the Forest Service should follow Senate directions concerning this program. The conference agreement also includes $5,263,000 for the international forestry program.

NATIONAL FOREST SYSTEM

The conference agreement provides $1,331,439,000 for the National forest system instead of $1,320,445,000 as proposed by the House and $1,324,491,000 as proposed by the Senate. Funds should be distributed as follows:

Land management planning	$70,358,000
Inventory and monitoring	173,266,000
Recreation, heritage & wilderness	245,500,000
Wildlife & fish habitat management	131,847,000
Grazing management	34,775,000
Forest products	266,340,000
Vegetation & watershed management	190,113,000
Minerals and geology management	48,956,000
Landownership management	88,434,000
Law enforcement operations	79,000,000
Valles Caldera National Preserve, NM	2,800,000

The following discussion describes funding changes from the House passed bill. The inventory and monitoring activity does not include the funding for the Lake Tahoe basin watershed assessment. The wildlife and fish habitat management activity does not include any funds, as proposed by the Senate, for the State of Alaska to conduct monitoring on the Tongass National Forest. The recreation, heritage and wilderness activity has a general program increase of $3,500,000 and it does not include a special allocation for the fee demo program revolving account, although this could be pursued at agency discretion. Funds for national scenic trails operations and Pacific Crest Trail maintenance are not included in the recreation activity but have been transferred to the capital improvement and maintenance appropriation account. Wildlife and fish habitat management includes $200,000 for work on the Batten Kill River, VT as proposed by the Senate and a general program reduction of $400,000. The grazing management activity is funded at the Senate proposed level. Changes from the House in the vegetation and watershed management activity include, for the Lake Tahoe basin, increases of $150,000 for watershed improvement activities, $400,000 for adaptive management, and $450,000 for the management of urban lots. The managers allow the Forest Service, upon notification of the House and Senate Committees on Appropriations, to reprogram national forest system funds within the Lake Tahoe basin.

The conference agreement also includes $200,000 for Dakota Prairie grasslands weed control. The Forest Service should maintain the noxious weed program at the Okanogan National Forest, WA, at $300,000 as in fiscal year 2001. The managers revise the House direction concerning the full time lands team working on the Pacific Crest Trail to direct the full time team to continue its functions but allow work on other high priority land projects as well as the Pacific Crest Trail. Funding for the law enforcement activity includes a general increase of $2,000,000. The managers have not agreed to the Senate proposal to provide $200,000 for the Southwest strategy. The managers direct the report required by both the House and the Senate concerning the budget formulation and execution system be due March 15, 2002.

The managers direct the Forest Service, in their completion of the Chugach National Forest and land resource management plan, to analyze the impact that restrictions proposed within the plan regarding mechanical fuel treatments and forest access will have on the level of prescribed burning and the implementation of the national fire plan on the Chugach National Forest. The managers direct that this analysis be completed before the release of the Chugach forest plan and that it shall be included in the plan.

The managers understand that the budget request for land management planning included $2,500,000 for the Chippewa and Superior National Forests, MN, to continue work on forest plans. The managers expect such funds shall be used to continue work in an expeditious manner.

Funding for the newly established Valles Caldera National Preserve, NM, is increased by $1,789,000 above the House level; much of this increase is for one-time infrastructure improvements to facilitate public access to this unique part of the national forest system. The managers expect the Valles Caldera directors to use these funds efficiently; they should begin the revenue generating activities authorized for this area and submit to the House and Senate Committees on Appropriations a plan and schedule, including cost estimates, for its management that is consistent with National funding priorities. The conference agreement does not include the general reduction to the national forest system account adopted in House floor action.

The managers have revised House report language concerning the management of urban lots in the Lake Tahoe basin. The managers note that the Forest Service faces significant challenges in order to manage and care for urban properties. The intensive effort required for management of these properties must be evaluated in light of the need for the agency to manage the large portions of the basin under its jurisdiction. The managers request that the Forest Service report to the House and Senate Committees on Appropriations no later than October 1, 2003 on the adaptive management practices that are suitable for urban lots acquired under the Santini-Burton program in the Lake Tahoe basin, and make recommendations as to those practices that are most effective in meeting the goals of the Lake Tahoe Restoration Act (P.L. 106–506). The managers expect that this analysis will consider the role and function of urban lots relative to water quality and watershed protection, biological diversity, recreation, public access, and forest vegetation management for wildfire control. The managers expect the Forest Service and partners in the basin to evaluate alternatives to continued urban lot purchases and to develop alternative methods of managing Federal urban lots, and to implement monitoring and research regarding the function that the lots play in supporting ecological integrity in the basin.

The conference agreement provides $1,560,349,000 for wildland fire management instead of $1,402,305,000 as proposed by the House and $1,280,594,000 as proposed by the Senate. The managers note that this funding total includes $346,000,000 in contingent emergency appropriations instead of $165,000,000 as proposed by the Senate and no emergency funding proposed by the House, and that $200,000,000 is to pay back emergency wildfire expenditures of fiscal year 2001. This emergency funding should be used to repay sums previously advanced for fiscal year 2001 wildfire emergencies as well as to fund various components of the national fire plan as discussed below.

The managers believe that the full, integrated national fire plan effort needs to be sustained in future years in order to reduce the risks of catastrophic fire in many areas of the Nation. The managers note that the Administration, working along with governors and local communities, have submitted a framework for a ten-year national fire plan. However, after reviewing the plan, the managers are concerned that the plan does not lay-out clear funding requirements for various aspects of this important endeavor. Therefore, the managers direct the Secretaries of Agriculture and the Interior to provide to the House and Senate Committees on Appropriations by March 15, 2002, an updated fire plan that includes detailed schedules of activities and funding requirements. The managers understand that funding requirements for wildfire activities include considerable year-to-year uncertainty depending on weather and fire circumstances and therefore the managers view the funding requirements for the national fire plan as being an iterative process, which requires annual updates. The managers direct the Departments of the Interior and Agriculture to continue to work together to formulate complementary budget requests that reflect the same principles and a similar budget organization and submit a cross-cutting budget request to the Committees, which covers all federal wildfire responsibilities. The managers expect the Forest Service to emphasize the use of cooperative agreements and grants to a wide-range of interests to help meet the national fire plan goals and objectives on all lands, including information compilation and analysis, public education, and applied research. In addition, the managers expect the agencies to seek the advice of governors, and local and tribal government representatives in setting priorities for fuels treatments, burned area rehabilitation, and public outreach and education.

Wildfire preparedness

The conference agreement includes $622,618,000 for preparedness as proposed by the Senate instead of $616,618,000 as proposed by the House. The $6,000,000 in fire technology development included within the Senate proposal for preparedness has been transferred to the other fire operations activity and base funding for preparedness has been increased accordingly. The managers reiterate the House direction concerning the need for completed fire plans for all forest service units and the managers direct that a schedule for this implementation be included in the next budget request. The managers also remain concerned about the variation in methods by which the departments calculate wildfire fighting readiness and how the departments plan their distribution of firefighting resources to attain efficiency. The managers direct the Secretaries of Agriculture and the Interior to develop and implement a coordinated and common system for calculating readiness which includes provisions for working with the shared fire fighting resources of the States and other cooperators and considers values of various resources on both Federal and other lands.

The conference agreement includes $521,321,000 for wildfire suppression activities instead of $321,321,000 proposed by both the House and Senate. This includes $255,321,000 for non-emergency wildfire suppression activities instead of $321,321,000 proposed by the House and $221,321,000 as proposed by the Senate. The agreement also includes $266,000,000 in emergency wildfire suppression funding instead of no emergency funding proposed by the House and $100,000,000 as proposed by the Senate. The managers direct the Forest Service to use $200,000,000 in emergency contingency funding to repay funds advanced for emergency wildfire suppression activities in fiscal year 2001 from other activities, trust funds, and other appropriation accounts.

The managers are very concerned about fire fighter safety issues in light of the tragic Thirty Mile fire in northern Washington. The managers direct the Forest Service to continue development and testing of a new fire shelter for the protection and safety of fire fighters. The testing shall include products being advanced by private industry. The Forest Service should submit a report to the House and Senate Committees on Appropriations on the results of these tests by September 30, 2002.

The managers are concerned about fire suppression costs during major incidents and therefore the Forest Service and the Department of the Interior are directed to contract for a thorough, independent review of wildfire suppression costs and strategies. The Departments should equally share the cost of the review and a preliminary report should be issued by May 31, 2002, and the final report be delivered to the House and Senate Committees on Appropriations by September 30, 2002.

The managers note that even after enactment of this bill the KV reforestation trust fund will lack $320,000,000, which has not been repaid but which was advanced for emergency wildfires during previous years. The Administration should strive to repay these funds.

Other wildfire operations

The conference agreement includes $416,410,000 for other fire operation activities instead of $464,366,000 as proposed by the House and $336,655,000 as proposed by the Senate. Of this allocation, $80,000,000 is designated as emergency funds instead of $65,000,000 as proposed by the Senate. The allocation of this funding is as follows:

	Non-emergency	Emergency	Total
Hazardous Fuels	$209,010,000		$209,010,000
Fire Facilities	10,376,000	$10,000,000	20,376,000
Rehabilitation	3,668,000	59,000,000	62,668,000
Research & Development	22,265,000	5,000,000	27,265,000
Joint Fire Science	8,000,000		8,000,000
Forest Health Management	11,974,000		11,974,000
Economic Action	12,472,000		12,472,000
State fire assistance	50,383,000	6,000,000	56,383,000
Volunteer fire assistance	8,262,000		8,262,000
Total other wildfire operations	336,410,000	80,000,000	416,410,000

The conference agreement includes $209,010,000 for hazardous fuels treatments as proposed by the Senate instead of $227,010,000 as proposed by the House. The managers expect the Forest Service to ensure that fuels treatments are accomplished quickly and in an environmentally sound manner. In conducting treatments, local contract personnel are to be used wherever practical and efficient. The managers expect the agency to show planned and actual funding and accomplishments for fuels management activities in future budget requests to the Congress. The managers understand that actual amounts may differ from planned levels. The managers expect the agencies to work closely with States and local communities in implementing this program in an effective and efficient manner.

The managers have not included bill language proposed by the Senate, which required that the Forest Service spend no less than $125,000,000 on hazardous fuels reduction projects in the wildland-urban interface. Instead, the managers expect that the Forest Service will expend this amount, as stated in the budget request, on projects in the wildland-urban interface. If the agency does not attain such levels, it shall promptly notify the House and Senate Committees on Appropriations and provide a report explaining why the Forest Service was unable to expend such sums. The managers continue to believe that an emphasis on fuels reduction work in the wildland-urban interface is critical to protecting the safety of rural communities.

The managers have included bill language proposed by the Senate providing that up to $15,000,000 in available funds may be used on adjacent, non-Federal lands to reduce hazardous fuels. The managers have not included bill language proposed by the Senate concerning resource management and access issues on the Chugach National Forest, AK. Instead, the managers have included direction under the national forest system heading regarding the upcoming Chugach National Forest plan. The conference agreement includes the Senate proposal to provide $5,000,000 for authorized Community Forest Restoration Act activities. The managers have not provided Forest Service funds for the Ecological Research Institute and its activities at Mt. Trumbull. This issue is addressed under the Bureau of Land Management. The conference agreement also includes hazardous fuels funding of $16,000,000 for the Quincy Library group activities, CA and $2,000,000 for the Lake Tahoe Basin as indicated by the House, which is $500,000 above the request.

The managers direct the Forest Service to provide technical assistance to the Tule River Tribal Reservation with its ground fuels mitigation program, the acquisition of appropriate fire suppression equipment, and the training of a tribal hot-shot crew.

The conference agreement includes $20,376,000 for wildfire management facilities as proposed by the Senate instead of $38,000,000 as proposed by the House. Of these funds, $10,000,000 are available as emergency funds.

The conference agreement includes $62,668,000 for rehabilitation and restoration activities, including $59,000,000 as emergency funds, instead of $81,000,000 as proposed by the House and $3,913,000 as proposed by the Senate. The managers have provided this funding to continue work on the many areas impacted by the year 2000 fires as well as more recent events. The managers direct the departments to continue to implement the long-term program to manage and supply native plant materials for use in various Federal land management restoration and rehabilitation needs directed for fiscal year 2001.

The conference agreement includes $27,265,000 for research and development activities as proposed by the House; $5,000,000 of these funds are designated for emergency needs. The research and development allocation consolidates funds, which were requested within both the preparedness and fire operations activities. It is vital that activities related to wildfire management and natural resource management have a firm scientific basis. To this end, the managers have also included $8,000,000 for the joint fire science program as proposed by the House instead of $4,000,000 as proposed by the Senate. The joint fire program is matched with similar funding within the Department of the Interior and this program should continue the direction it has taken in fiscal year 2001. The managers have designated $1,000,000 within the available, non-emergency research and development funds for cooperative research and technology development for the University of Montana National Center for Landscape Fire Analysis. This replaces designations for this project in the House and Senate recommended bills.

The managers note that devastating windstorms have caused great damage on the Superior and Chippewa National Forests, MN. The budget request for wildland fire management included $8,000,000 to continue efforts to reduce the fuels accumulation, continue reforestation, and rehabilitate the wilderness and non-wilderness areas of these forests. The managers expect the scheduled work to be completed expeditiously with these funds.

The managers have included $56,383,000 for State fire assistance instead of $50,383,000 as proposed by both the House and the Senate. Of this total, $6,000,000 is designated as emergency funds and this total includes $5,000,000 for hazardous fuels work in Anchorage, AK instead of $6,000,000 as proposed by the Senate, and $1,000,000 to continue hazardous fuels work in the Kenai Borough, AK, as proposed by the Senate. The Forest Service should follow Senate direction concerning the distribution of these funds. State fire assistance includes support for the FIREWISE program and the use of cost share incentives. The conference agreement includes $12,472,000 for economic action activities associated with the national fire plan as proposed by both the House and the Senate. The managers note that the State and private forestry appropriation includes funds for the small diameter initiative so the House instructions concerning this project need not be followed.

CAPITAL IMPROVEMENT AND MAINTENANCE

The conference agreement provides $546,188,000 for capital improvement and maintenance instead of $535,513,000 as proposed by the House and $541,286,000 as proposed by the Senate. This funding includes $61,000,000 as recommended by the Senate for priority deferred maintenance and infrastructure improvement within the conservation spending category. The conference agreement includes bill language proposed by the Senate concerning a fiscal year 2001 appropriation for improvements at the Hardwood Tree Improvement and Regeneration Center at Purdue University, IN, and language transferring a fiscal year 2001 appropriation for certain recreational facilities near the Allegheny National Forest, PA.

The managers concur with the Senate in providing $2,558,000 for the design, planning, and acquisition of property to support the efficient collocation of the Mystic Ranger District and the Rapid City Research Laboratory in South Dakota. The managers have also included $500,000 for the Hardwood Tree Improvement and Regeneration Center (HTIRC) at Purdue University, IN. The managers emphasize that construction of other facilities on the Black Hills National Forest and further Federal funding for the Hardwood Tree Improvement and Regeneration Center, IN, be proposed in the agency budget justification using the normal process for ranking and prioritizing facility needs. The Forest Service should submit reports detailing all future funding needs for these two projects no later than April 15, 2002. The conference agreement does not provide $2,000,000 for the Pike's Peak Highway as proposed by the Senate due to ongoing litigation directly related to the project.

The managers encourage the Forest Service to establish a suitable memorial for the four brave firefighters who lost their lives July 10, 2001, at the Thirtymile fire near Winthrop, WA.

The managers direct the Forest Service to continue its ongoing work to implement an acquisition program for the Pacific Crest Trail as rapidly as possible, utilizing assistance from the National Park Service, if desirable. Acquisition efforts should focus on properties where access and public service needs are the greatest. A progress report should be submitted to the House and Senate Committees on Appropriations no later than March 1, 2002.

ACQUISITION OF LANDS FOR NATIONAL FORESTS SPECIAL ACTS

The conference agreement provides $1,069,000 for the acquisition of lands for national forests special acts as recommended by both the House and the Senate.

ACQUISITION OF LANDS TO COMPLETE LAND EXCHANGES

The conference agreement provides an indefinite appropriation estimated to be $234,000 for the acquisition of lands to complete land exchanges as proposed by both the House and the Senate.

RANGE BETTERMENT FUND

The conference agreement provides an indefinite appropriation estimated to be $3,290,000 for the range betterment fund as proposed by both the House and the Senate.

GIFTS, DONATIONS AND BEQUESTS FOR FOREST AND RANGELAND RESEARCH

The conference agreement provides $92,000 for gifts, donations and bequests for forest and rangeland research as proposed by both the House and the Senate.

MANAGEMENT OF NATIONAL FOREST LANDS FOR SUBSISTENCE USES

The conference agreement provides $5,488,000 for management of national forest system lands for subsistence uses in Alaska as proposed by both the House and the Senate.

ADMINISTRATIVE PROVISIONS, FOREST SERVICE

The managers have modified bill language proposed by the Senate concerning the use of funds for land exchanges and have included language recommended by the Senate allowing the Forest Service to transfer any funds available to the Forest Service to the wildland fire management account during wildfire emergencies. The conference agreement also includes the House language prohibiting transfers to the USDA working capital funds in excess of the fiscal year 2000 level without advance approval from the House and Senate Committees on Appropriations. The managers have included the Senate proposed funding level for the administrative funds of the National Forest Foundation and the managers have included language expanding the National Forest Foundation board of directors. The conference agreement includes the House proposed bill language concerning the National Fish and Wildlife Foundation. The managers have not included the House proposed bill language concerning the use and reimbursement of detailees who are used for more than 30 days. Instead, the managers direct the Secretary to provide written notification to the House and Senate Committees on Appropriations of any employee to be detailed or assigned from an agency or office funded by this Act to any other agency or office of the Department for more than 60 days if the receiving office is not going to reimburse the donor office for detailee time in excess of 60 days. Such notification should include the name of the employee to be detailed, the location of the detail, the estimated length of the detail, and a justification for the work to be performed during the detail.

The managers have agreed to revise instructions proposed by the House regarding the management of trust funds. In place of items numbered two and three in the House report, the managers agree to the following: (1) the Forest Service is directed to submit a detailed display in all future budget justifications of the anticipated program of work for these funds; (2) the plan shall provide sufficient detail to explain and justify the program of work and expected accomplishments in each region; and (3) the plan shall contain a full explanation of how planned improvement activities contribute to an integrated approach to forest management in conjunction with activities planned to be accomplished with discretionary funds.

DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

CLEAN COAL TECHNOLOGY

(DEFERRAL)

The conference agreement provides for the deferral of $40,000,000 in previously appropriated funds for the clean coal technology program. These funds will become available on October 1, 2002, to complete the remaining projects in this program.

FOSSIL ENERGY RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT

(INCLUDING TRANSFER OF FUNDS)

The conference agreement provides $616,490,000 for fossil energy research and development instead of $579,000,000 as proposed by the House and $604,090,000 as proposed by the Senate. Of the amount provided, $33,700,000 is derived by transfer from previous clean coal technology appropriations as proposed by the Senate. The numerical changes described below are to the House recommended level.

There is a decrease of $33,700,000 for the clean coal power initiative, which reflects the transfer of previously appropriated funds in that amount from the clean coal technology account. This transfer should not interfere with the timely completion of the remaining, unfinished clean coal technology projects. The funding provided for the clean coal power initiative in fiscal year 2002 is $150,000,000.

In the innovations for existing plants activity, there is an increase of $1,000,000 for materials research as part of the vision 21 program. This increase originally was proposed by the Senate under the advanced research account. Guidance on its use is provided below.

In advanced systems, increases include $3,000,000 for ITM oxygen research as part of the integrated gasification combined cycle program, $3,000,000 for vision 21 advanced combustion systems as part of the pressurized fluidized bed program, and $3,000,000 for syngas applications in the advanced turbine systems program. There is also a decrease of $3,000,000 in general program activities in the turbine program.

In distributed generation, increases include $2,000,000 for electro-chemical engineering in the advanced research program, $2,000,000 for systems development in the molten carbonate fuel cells program, and $6,000,000 for the solid-state energy conversion alliance in the innovative concepts program.

In transportation fuels and chemicals, there is an increase of $2,000,000 for the La Porte facility in Texas. The managers expect the Department to continue existing projects in the ultra clean fuels program. There is also an increase of $1,000,000 in the ultra clean fuels program for a clean diesel fuel program at the University of Alaska.

In solid fuels and feedstocks, there is an increase of $3,000,000 for advanced separation technology.

In advanced fuels research, there are increases of $500,000 for C–1 chemistry and $1,700,000 in advanced concepts for advanced products from coal, and a decrease of $1,000,000 for advanced separation technology (which is addressed above under solid fuels and feedstocks).

In advanced research, there is an increase of $2,000,000 in the technology crosscut program for the Computational Center of Excellence at the National Energy Technology Laboratory.

For natural gas technologies, there is an increase of $950,000 in exploration and production for coalbed methane water filtration research and increases in infrastructure programs of $1,000,000 for infrastructure technology and $1,000,000 for storage technology. There is also an increase of $2,000,000 in emerging processing technology for the coal mine methane program.

For oil technology, there is an increase of $3,000,000 in exploration and production for arctic research by the Office of Arctic Energy in Alaska and a decrease of $1,000,000 for the Oil Prime program in advanced research. There is also a decrease of $1,000,000 in the reservoir life extension program for reservoir field demonstrations.

In cooperative research and development, there is an increase of $2,240,000 for existing programs. Arctic technology research is addressed in the oil technology program above.

In general plant projects, there is a decrease of $900,000 in general plant projects for the National Energy Technology Laboratory and an increase of $11,000,000 for the first year of a 7-year program to upgrade the infrastructure at the National Energy Technology Laboratory. This upgrade is discussed in more detail below.

Finally, there is a decrease of $6,000,000, which reflects the one-time use of unobligated prior year funds that are available from a coal project that has been substantially reworked, with resultant cost savings. This amount should be restored to the base program in fiscal year 2003.

The managers are very supportive of the clean coal power initiative and expect the Department to ensure that the program is based on competitively awarded government-industry partnerships that demonstrate technologies that can strengthen electricity reliability for the Nation in an environmentally clean manner. The managers agree that industry will be required to provide at least 50 percent of each project's cost and that all projects must use U.S. coals, which must constitute at least 75 percent of the fuel. Further, all co-production projects must provide at least half of their output in the form of electricity.

The managers expect the Department to ensure that the solicitation for proposals is open to technologies that will: (1) reduce emissions of criteria pollutants (including mercury) from both existing and new plants, including management of plant byproducts; (2) improve the generation efficiencies of existing and new plants through such technologies as coal gasification; and/or (3) cost-effectively manage carbon emissions.

The managers agree to the following:

1. The $1,000,000 in the innovations for existing plants program for vision 21/materials is to accelerate the development of advanced alloys and materials for high efficiency, ultra-supercritical steam plants, allowing ultra-supercritical steam conditions to be used in a variety of fuel flexible, highly efficient, zero emission plants.

2. Available funding balances from contract closeouts may be used without reprogramming to minimize disruptions to ongoing research and development projects. Follow-on research areas consistent with plans and schedules developed in cooperation with industry partners, include ultra-supercritical materials, computational and fuels focus areas at the National Energy Technology Laboratory, gas-to-liquids, advanced research on coal-based fuels, solid-state energy conversion alliance (planar solid oxide fuel cells), vision 21/oxygen-based combustion, Wilsonville testing, power plant sensors and controls, carbon dioxide capture and geologic sequestration testing, and oil and gas offshore technology.

3. There is no earmark in the syngas ceramic membrane funding for any specific program. The available funds should be used to continue all existing projects as equitably as possible.

4. The distribution of the increase above the budget request for effective environmental protection programs in the oil technology activity should be consistent with the House recommendation.

5. The funding for risk assessment programs under the oil technology activity assumes that the risk based data management system will continue to be funded at the fiscal year 2001 level.

6. Within the funds provided in oil technology for the Office of Arctic Energy $1,000,000 is to support oxygen transport ceramic membrane research.

7. The Department should review the fuel flexibility for industrial boilers program developed by Pennsylvania State University and consider incorporating follow-on work in this area into the fiscal year 2003 budget priorities.

8. The $2,000,000 increase above the budget request for distributed generation/vision 21 hybrids, included in both the House and Senate recommendations, is for the tubular solid oxide fuel cell program.

9. The increase above the budget request for the solid-state energy conversion alliance under distributed generation/innovative concepts is to be added to the base funding for planar solid oxide fuel cell programs and is to be used to continue existing projects, consistent with program plans developed in cooperation with industry partners. The managers understand that base funding for this program will need to be increased substantially in fiscal year 2003 to keep this program on schedule to meet critical program goals.

10. Of the funds provided for turbine systems, $3,000,000 is for the industry/university consortium.

11. The Department should develop a five-year plan reorienting the turbine program to support vision 21 and focusing on the development of a technology base to increase fuel flexibility (including coal) and efficiency as well as reliability, availability, and maintainability, with low emissions and low life cycle costs. The plan should be submitted to the House and Senate Committees on Appropriations no later than January 15, 2002.

12. In the carbon sequestration program, the Department should continue and expand International Utility Efficiency Partnerships as part of the U.S. Initiative on Joint Implementation.

The conference agreement modifies bill language proposed by the Senate earmarking

$11,000,000 for planning and design of an infrastructure upgrade at the National Energy Technology Laboratory. The modification provides land acquisition authority, which the managers understand will be used on a limited basis. This funding represents the first year of a 7-year improvement plan for the Laboratory and the managers expect the Department to keep this amount in the base budget for each of the next 6 years.

The conference agreement includes bill language proposed by the Senate deriving $33,700,000 by transfer from the clean coal technology program to offset new budget authority in fiscal year 2002. The managers note that this is a one-time transfer and this amount will need to be restored to the Fossil Energy Research and Development base budget in fiscal year 2003.

The conference agreement also modifies language to extend the proposal submission period for the Clean Coal Power Initiative from 90 days to 150 days and to permit the combining of fiscal year 2002 and fiscal year 2003 funds for contract awards made in fiscal year 2003.

ALTERNATIVE FUELS PRODUCTION

(RESCISSION)

The conference agreement provides for the rescission of $2,000,000 in unobligated balances from the alternative fuels production account as proposed by the Senate instead of no rescission as proposed by the House.

NAVAL PETROLEUM AND OIL SHALE RESERVES

The conference agreement provides $17,371,000 for the naval petroleum and oil shale reserves as proposed by both the House and the Senate.

ELK HILLS SCHOOL LANDS FUND

The conference agreement provides $36,000,000 to become available on October 1, 2002, for the Elk Hills school lands fund as proposed by the Senate instead of $36,000,000 to be derived by transfer from unobligated balances in the clean coal technology account as proposed by the House.

ENERGY CONSERVATION

The conference agreement provides $912,805,000 for energy conservation instead of $940,805,000 as proposed by the House and $870,805,000 as proposed by the Senate. The numerical changes described below are to the House recommended level.

In building technology assistance, there are decreases of $19,000,000 for the weatherization assistance program and $17,000,000 for State energy conservation grants. There is also an increase of $1,000,000 for the energy star program.

In industries of the future/crosscutting, there is an increase of $2,000,000 for the innovations and inventions program.

In transportation programs, there is a general increase of $2,000,000 in technology deployment for the clean cities program.

In policy and management, there is an increase of $3,000,000 for the regional support offices.

The managers agree to the following:

1. The increase in funding for the regional support offices is to restore base funding for these important entities. The Department should do a better job of using these offices to manage programs and projects and should not short-fund these offices in future budget requests while protecting funding for headquarters offices in Washington, DC. Funding comparisons (prior year, current year, budget year) and activity descriptions for each regional support office should be included in the annual budget request beginning in fiscal year 2003. The managers encourage the Department to consider shifting resources from headquarters to the regional support offices.

2. Consistent with the policy of fuel neutrality, no funds are earmarked in the Clean Cities program for increasing E–85 fueling capacity. The managers encourage the Department to give careful consideration to proposals that would help increase such capacity, consistent with the goals of the Clean Cities program.

3. Within the funds provided, the managers understand that the Northwest Alliance for Transportation Technologies will be funded at a higher level than in fiscal year 2001.

4. Within the transportation sector hybrid program, the Department should continue 3 contracts through completion of phase I of the advanced power electronics program and should down select to 2 contracts, as planned, prior to funding the next phase of the program.

5. Within the increase provided above the budget request for lightweight materials technology in transportation programs, the Department should foster research aimed at developing lightweight composites for heavy vehicles in conjunction with MSE, Inc.'s High Performance Materials Group.

6. The Department should report to the House and Senate Committees on Appropriations, within twelve months of the date of enactment of this Act, on the technical and economic barriers to the use of fuel cells in transportation, portable power, stationary, and distributed generation applications. The report should include recommendations on program adjustments based on an assessment of the technical, economic, and infrastructure requirements needed for the commercial use of fuel cells for stationary and transportation applications by 2012. Within six months of the date of enactment of this Act, the Department should also provide an interim assessment that describes preliminary findings about the need for public and private cooperative programs to demonstrate the use of fuel cells in commercial scale applications.

The conference agreement earmarks $275,000,000 for energy conservation grant programs instead of $311,000,000 as proposed by the House and $251,000,000 as proposed by the Senate. Within the funds provided, $230,000,000 is further earmarked for weatherization assistance grants instead of $249,000,000 as proposed by the House and $213,000,000 as proposed by the Senate, and $45,000,000 is earmarked for State energy conservation grants instead of $62,000,000 as proposed by the House and $38,000,000 as proposed by the Senate.

No statutory language on cost sharing for weatherization grants is included in the conference agreement but the managers strongly urge the Department to pursue actively such cost sharing from State and local governments and other entities. Detailed cost-sharing information (and the amount of Federal funds provided) should be included for each State or eligible entity in the budget submission for fiscal year 2003 and in future submissions.

The conference agreement includes statutory language requiring that one-half of the funding made available in fiscal year 2002 and thereafter for the energy efficiency science initiative be managed by the fossil energy research and development program. The managers expect the Department to issue a single solicitation for this program that covers both energy conservation and fossil energy programs.

ECONOMIC REGULATION

The conference agreement provides $1,996,000 for economic regulation as proposed by both the House and the Senate.

STRATEGIC PETROLEUM RESERVE

The conference agreement provides $179,009,000 for the strategic petroleum reserve as proposed by the House instead of $169,009,000 as proposed by the Senate.

The conference agreement modifies statutory language contained in both the House and Senate bills, specifying that ''not to exceed'' $8,000,000 is for the Northeast Heating Oil Reserve. If the full $8,000,000 is not needed, the managers encourage the Department to apply any excess funds to the Strategic Petroleum Reserve vapor pressure project to remove excess heat and gas from the oil in the reserve. Funds for this critical project should be continued in the base for each of the next 3 years (at least at the $12 million level provided in fiscal year 2002) so that it can be completed no later than fiscal year 2005.

ENERGY INFORMATION ADMINISTRATION

The conference agreement provides $78,499,000 for the energy information administration as proposed by the House instead of $75,499,000 as proposed by the Senate.

DEPARTMENT OF HEALTH AND HUMAN SERVICES

INDIAN HEALTH SERVICE

INDIAN HEALTH SERVICES

The conference agreement provides $2,389,614,000 for Indian health services instead of $2,390,014,000 as proposed by the House and $2,388,614,000 as proposed by the Senate. The numerical changes described below are to the House recommended level.

For hospital and health clinic programs there are decreases of $500,000 for Joslin diabetes programs and $500,000 for technology upgrades. For Indian health professions there are increases of $50,000 for the InPsych program at the University of North Dakota, $50,000 for the InPsych program at the University of Montana, and $500,000 for the InMed program at the University of North Dakota.

The managers agree to the following:

1. The additional contract health services funding provided for fiscal year 2002 should be distributed following a methodology developed in consultation with the tribes. The managers have received expressions of concern from many different tribes on this issue and ask that the Service base the funding distribution on a methodology that considers the needs of all eligible tribes at the same time as addressing disparities in funding.

2. The Service should continue to follow last year's direction on the level of need funded methodology and the distribution of the Indian health care improvement fund.

The conference agreement provides the House proposed statutory earmarks for contract health services and contract support costs. As in past years, there is no specific earmark for any individual tribe for contract support costs.

The managers have not agreed to statutory language proposed by the House dealing with certain limitations on contract support costs. The managers believe the disparities between BIA and IHS in the funding of contract support costs should be resolved. While there has been some discussion of this issue by the two agencies over the past few years, no resolution to these differences has resulted. The managers urge the Office of Management and Budget to serve as a coordinator for further discussion of the issue with the two agencies, with the goal of resolving existing discrepancies. The Office of Management and Budget should address this issue as part of the fiscal year 2003 budget request.

INDIAN HEALTH FACILITIES

The conference agreement provides $369,487,000 for Indian health facilities instead of $369,795,000 as proposed by the House and $362,854,000 as proposed by the Senate. The changes to the House level are all in the hospital and clinic construction category. The managers agree to the following distribution of facilities construction funds (excluding sanitation facilities):

Project	Conference agreement
Fort Defiance, AZ (hospital and staff quarters)	$27,827,000
Pinon, AZ (clinic infrastructure)	2,600,000

Dental units	1,000,000
Small ambulatory care facilities	10,000,000
Joint ventures	5,000,000

1. The funds provided for the Portland Area AMEX program should remain in the base in fiscal year 2003 for addressing the nationwide need for maintenance funds, and the Service should request an increase to the base maintenance funding in fiscal year 2003 to enable the Service to keep pace with the expanding facilities infrastructure for Federal and tribal facilities, including Alaska village-built clinics.

2. Given the tremendous unmet need for new and replacement hospitals and clinics in Indian country, the managers urge that, beginning in fiscal year 2003, the Department and the Office of Management and Budget establish a recurring base budget for hospital and clinic facilities construction rather than building from a zero-based budget each year. The managers suggest that the base amount for fiscal year 2003 should be at least $90,000,000 (the fiscal year 2002 level plus inflation) and projects should be identified based on the established priority list (including hospitals, clinics, staff quarters, dental units, small ambulatory care facilities, and joint ventures) to total the base funding level.

3. The Service should use balances available from completed construction projects to fund the additional site work and infrastructure needs of the Pinon, AZ clinic and, to the extent available, to fund additional site work and infrastructure at the Red Mesa, AZ clinic.

4. The Service should continue funding for a new drinking water system for the Shoshone-Bannock Tribes of the Fort Hall reservation in Idaho to the extent such project is ranked within the established sanitation facility priority ranking system.

5. Rather than issuing a new solicitation for the small ambulatory grant program in fiscal year 2002, the Service should fund high priority, unfunded projects from the ranked order list generated from the fiscal year 2001 application process.

6. The Service should establish a reasonably low maximum funding threshold for the small ambulatory grant program so that several projects can be funded under that program each fiscal year. The maximum amount should not be construed as the amount available for each project, and the managers expect that most projects will be funded well below the maximum funding threshold.

7. The Service should ensure, in evaluating joint venture proposals, that any needed staff quarters are included in tribal construction proposals and that the cost of staff quarters construction and all related costs are funded by the tribe. Once constructed, staff quarters should be self-supporting from revenues generated from rental fees. The Service should not be responsible for any construction or subsequent operating costs for staff quarters that are associated with a joint venture.

The conference agreement includes statutory language that modifies the Senate proposed language on the Bethel, AK hospital staff quarters construction project. The modification permits the use of funds for staff quarters construction for sub-regional clinics in the Bethel area. The managers expect that this authority will be used on a limited basis only to the extent that such sub-regional staff quarters fit within the agreed upon overall cost for the Bethel staff quarters project and that there is no impact on the effort now underway to provide an adequate number of staff quarters at the Bethel hospital.

The conference agreement also includes statutory language permitting the Service to accept donated land for the St. Paul, AK clinic.

OTHER RELATED AGENCIES

OFFICE OF NAVAJO AND HOPI INDIAN RELOCATION

SALARIES AND EXPENSES

The conference agreement provides $15,148,000 for salaries and expenses of the Office of Navajo and Hopi Indian Relocation as proposed by the House and the Senate.

INSTITUTE OF AMERICAN INDIAN AND ALASKA NATIVE CULTURE AND ARTS DEVELOPMENT

PAYMENT TO THE INSTITUTE

The conference agreement provides $4,490,000 for payment to the institute as proposed by the House and the Senate.

SMITHSONIAN INSTITUTION

The conference agreement provides $399,253,000 for salaries and expenses at the Smithsonian Institution instead of $396,200,000 as proposed by the House and $401,192,000 as proposed by the Senate. Changes to the House proposed funding levels for fiscal year 2002 are described below.

An increase of $1,497,000 is provided for the Smithsonian Center for Materials Research and Education. Within this amount, program funding for the Center is restored to the fiscal year 2001 enacted level and an additional $128,000 is included to meet anticipated annual pay costs. The managers expect that no decision will be made on an earlier proposal by Smithsonian management to eliminate this Center, as well as the Conservation Research Center, until the Science Commission has conducted a full evaluation of all science programs at the Institution and reported their findings to the Committees.

An increase of $26,000 is provided to the National Zoo for the hiring of a curator and preliminary operations and maintenance of the permanent Farm Exhibit, which is scheduled to open to the public in the spring of 2003.

An increase of $200,000 is provided for the Smithsonian Institution Libraries. This amount was proposed for reduction in the fiscal year 2002 budget estimate, but has been included by the managers in order to maintain the library at the Museum Support Center that supports the Center for Materials Research and Education.

An amount of $7,200,000 is provided within the Administration line item to continue the Institution's technology initiative. The Senate included $6,000,000 for this work. The House included $7,645,000 for this effort, but within the line item for Institution-wide Programs. The managers expect that the House and Senate Committees on Appropriations will be provided with quarterly reports that detail the Institution's progress with this initiative.

An increase of $58,000 is included to maintain existing health clinics as proposed by the Senate.

An increase of $1,743,000 is included for the Office of Protection Services. The budget estimate called for a reduction of the guard force in this amount. In light of recent events, the managers agree that it would not be appropriate to implement this proposal.

A decrease of $7,645,000 has been taken to the Institution-wide Programs line item. This amount was proposed by the House to fund costs associated with the technology initiative. As stated above, the managers recommend an amount of $7,200,000, the budget estimate, for this activity and have provided the funds within the Administration line item, which includes the Office of Technology.

A general reduction of $26,000 to the House proposed level has been taken to the Administration line item.

The conference report designates an amount of $37,508,000 to remain available until expended for the following activities: the instrumentation program, collections acquisition, exhibition reinstallation, the National Museum of the American Indian and the repatriation of skeletal remains program. The House proposal included no such designation for these activities. The Senate proposal provided $43,713,000 to remain available until expended for the activities listed above, as well as security funding and institution-wide programs.

The conference report includes bill language proposed by both the House and Senate instructing the Smithsonian to adhere to the reprogramming procedures described in House Report 105–163. In addition, the managers direct the Smithsonian to submit a quarterly report to the House and Senate Committees on Appropriations that displays all redirections of Federal funds, both above and below the reprogramming threshold, for each quarter. By implementing this reporting process, the Committees expect to gain a better and more timely understanding of the Institution's spending priorities throughout the fiscal year. Each of the Bureaus within the Department of the Interior currently submits a similar report.

REPAIR, RESTORATION AND ALTERATION OF FACILITIES

The conference agreement provides $67,900,000 for repair, restoration and alteration of facilities as proposed by the House and the Senate.

The managers direct the Smithsonian to assess its facility maintenance program as a result of the National Academy of Public Administration's recommendations. The Institution should identify the current program, describe the desired state, and provide an implementation plan with resource and organizational requirements needed to achieve the necessary maintenance level. The plan should be reliability based with preventive, predictive, proactive and reactive components utilizing a computer-based maintenance management system. This plan should be submitted to the House and Senate Committees on Appropriations no later than December 15, 2001.

CONSTRUCTION

The conference agreement provides $30,000,000 for construction of the National Museum of the American Indian as proposed by the House, instead of $25,000,000 as proposed by the Senate.

NATIONAL GALLERY OF ART

The conference agreement provides $68,967,000 for salaries and expenses of the National Gallery of Art as proposed by both the House and the Senate.

The conference agreement includes $98,234,000 for grants and administration of the National Endowment for the Arts as proposed by both the House and the Senate. The Challenge America Arts Fund, a separate appropriation administered by the NEA, is funded at $17,000,000, as indicated later in the statement of the managers.

NATIONAL ENDOWMENT FOR THE HUMANITIES

GRANTS AND ADMINISTRATION

The conference agreement provides $108,382,000 for grants and administration of the National Endowment for the Humanities instead of $107,882,000 as proposed by the House and $109,882,000 as proposed by the Senate. Increases above the House funding level include $361,000 for Federal/State partnerships, $217,000 for preservation and access, $155,000 for public programs, $145,000 for research programs, and $150,000 for education programs. In agreement with the budget estimate and the Senate proposal, the administration activity is funded at $18,450,000, a reduction of $528,000 from the House level. In addition to funds provided in this account, further appropriations for the NEH are included in the matching grants category below.

MATCHING GRANTS

The conference agreement provides $16,122,000 for matching grants instead of $15,622,000 as proposed by the House and the Senate. The agreement includes an increase of $500,000 for regional centers.

The conference agreement provides $26,899,000 for grants and administration of the Office of Museum Services as proposed by both the House and the Senate.

CHALLENGE AMERICA ARTS FUND CHALLENGE AMERICA GRANTS

The conference agreement includes $17,000,000 for Challenge America grants as proposed by both the House and the Senate. This account is administered by the National Endowment for the Arts according to all previously authorized requirements and serves to provide additional funding for arts education and outreach activities in rural and underserved areas.

COMMISSION OF FINE ARTS

SALARIES AND EXPENSES

The conference agreement provides $1,224,000 for salaries and expenses of the Commission of Fine Arts instead of $1,274,000 as proposed by the House and $1,174,000 as proposed by the Senate. The conference agreement does not include $100,000 for the management of a competitive grants program as proposed in the budget estimate and proposed by the House. The $50,000 increase above the Senate proposed funding level is intended to meet the cost of technological improvements, such as equipment and the development of a web page, that will enable the Commission to have direct communication with the public. Given the significant public projects that come before the Commission, such as the World War II Memorial, the managers believe it is in the public interest to provide better access to the Commission's activities and decisions.

NATIONAL CAPITAL ARTS AND CULTURAL AFFAIRS

The conference agreement provides $7,000,000 for National Capital Arts and Cultural Affairs as proposed by both the House and the Senate.

ADVISORY COUNCIL ON HISTORIC PRESERVATION

SALARIES AND EXPENSES

PRESIDIO TRUST

PRESIDIO TRUST FUND

The conference agreement provides $23,125,000 for the Presidio Trust Fund as proposed by the Senate instead of $22,427,000 as proposed by the House.

TITLE III—GENERAL PROVISIONS

The conference agreement includes sections 301, and the text of sections 314 through 317, and 320 through 322, which were identical in both the House and the Senate bills, although section numbers have been changed in some cases in the conference agreement.

The conference agreement includes House sections 302 through 307, 309, 311, 318, 324, 325, and 330. Identical language was proposed by the Senate in sections 303 through 308, 310, 312, 319, 325, 326, and 332.

Section 308 retains the text of section 309 as proposed by the Senate concerning a pedestrian bridge between New Jersey and Ellis Island. The House had similar language in section 308, but included text carried in last year's law.

Section 310 retains the text of section 311 as proposed by the Senate, which limits payments for contract support costs for the Bureau of Indian Affairs and the Indian Health Service. The text of section 310 as proposed by the House is identical except for the use of capitalization.

Section 312 modifies language in section 312 as proposed by the House concerning an extension of the recreational fee demonstration program. The managers have agreed to a two year extension of this program through fiscal year 2004 rather than the four year extension recommended by the House. The managers have provided this extension to allow the authorizing committees with jurisdiction to continue their assessment of this program and to provide for a permanent solution to this issue. The managers strongly encourage the authorizing committees to address this matter forthwith so short-term extensions via the appropriations process are no longer germane. The managers have also modified the House language by deleting subsection (e), which extended the program to certain Forest Service special use permits. The managers recommend that the authorizing committees examine various options in this regard. The managers have retained language proposed by the House and contained in Senate recommended section 313 concerning the use of receipts from this program to construct permanent structures when the total cost of the facility exceeds $500,000. The managers note that the recreational fee demonstration program has generated substantial revenue, which has made a major impact on many parks, forests, refuges and public land units. By the end of fiscal year 2002, the program will have generated $937 million for the four participating agencies. The managers continue to believe that a user fee program, which focuses the fees directly to local, on-the-ground improvements, is an essential tool to help fund major Federal recreational assets. The managers expect the agencies implementing this program to focus on public service, to work closely with local communities and the recreational industry, and to use the receipts to enhance visitor services and reduce the backlog in deferred maintenance.

Section 317 retains the text of section 318 as proposed by the Senate prohibiting the Forest Service from expending or obligating appropriations in the Act to complete and issue the 5-year program under the Forest and Rangeland Renewable Resources Planning Act. The House had no similar provision.

Section 319 retains the text of section 319 as proposed by the House prohibiting the use of funds in the Act for GSA Telecommunication Centers. The Senate had no similar provision.

Section 323 retains the text of section 323 as proposed by the Senate. The language as proposed by the House in section 323 differed only in reference to fiscal years.

Section 326 retains the text of section 326 as proposed by the House which gives preference to dislocated workers for certain restoration contracts in the Giant Sequoia National Monument and the Sequoia National Forest. Section 329 as proposed by the Senate consisted of virtually identical text, except for language extending the length of authorization.

Section 327 modifies the text of section 327 as proposed by the House which provides that the Secretary of Agriculture shall not be considered to be in violation of subparagraph 6(f)(5)(A) of the Forest and Rangeland Renewable Resources Planning Act of 1974 solely because more than fifteen years have passed without revision of the plan, including its accompanying documents, for a unit of the National Forest System. It is the managers' intent that the passage of more than 15 years without revision of a plan for a unit of the National Forest System shall not, in and of itself, cause a violation of the National Environmental Policy Act (NEPA) (43 U.S.C. 4332). Instead, the standards at 40 C.F.R. 1502.9(c) and project-level NEPA requirements shall govern when a supplemental or additional environmental impact statement is required. It is the responsibility of the court to determine whether the good faith requirement of this section has been met and, if not, to order an accelerated schedule for plan revision. The managers understand that all plans for units of the National Forest System that will be revised during fiscal year 2002 will be revised pursuant to current rules (36 C.F.R. Part 219 and Part 217). Given the intense interest in the Administration's ongoing revision of forest planning rules, the managers intend that this section will be in effect for only one year. It is the managers' understanding that the authorizing Committees must consider legislation regarding this issue in the near future. The managers direct the Forest Service to provide a detailed report to the House and Senate Committees on Appropriations by January 31, 2002, describing the status and activities regarding each National forest unit land management plan. The report shall also include a plan and schedule, along with funding needs, to complete the forest plan revision process. The Senate had no similar provision.

Section 328 retains the text of section 328 as proposed by the House, which clarifies the requirement for mutually significant benefits when the Forest Service conducts cooperative agreements. The Senate had no similar provision.

Section 329 includes a minor technical modification of section 329 as proposed by the House concerning the conveyance of excess properties by the Forest Service. The Senate had no similar provision.

Section 330 retains the text of section 331 as proposed by the House which amends section 323 of the fiscal year 1999 Interior and Related Agencies Appropriations Act by extending for four years the cooperative agreements authority, thereby allowing the Forest Service to enter into cooperative agreements with willing Federal, tribal, State, and local governments, private and non-profit entities and landowners to implement watershed restoration agreements both on and near National forest system lands. Section 331 as proposed by the Senate was composed of similar language, but differed in length of authorization.

Section 331 retains the text of section 333 as proposed by the House that prohibits oil, natural gas and mining related activities within current National Monument boundaries. The Senate proposed similar language in section 128 under General Provisions, Department of the Interior.

Section 332 modifies the text of section 327 as proposed by the Senate expanding the number of stewardship end result contracts available to the Forest Service. The modified language extends the duration of the contracts by two years. The House had no similar provision.

Section 333 retains the text of section 328 as proposed by the Senate requiring that regulations and policies issued by the Departments of the Interior or Agriculture regarding cost recovery for processing authorizations adhere and incorporate a specific principle arising from Office of Management and Budget Circular, A–25. The House had no similar provision.

Section 334 modifies section 330 as proposed by the Senate regarding a cabin within the boundary of the Custer National Forest. After considering the special and unique circumstances surrounding the use of this facility, the managers agree to a provision that requires issuance of a special use permit to Montana State University—Billings for use of this cabin for a 20-year term, with a proviso for a review of the cabin's use after 10 years. The managers expect the agency to administer the permit in a manner that allows the University to utilize the cabin's location for suitable educational programs while recognizing the ecological and cultural values associated with the cabin's location and historical significance. The permit shall restrict use of the cabin to educational and scientific activities overseen by the University and necessary maintenance related to these activities consistent with the cabin's location. The managers expect the Forest Service to oversee the special use permit under current standards to ensure the cabin's use is consistent with this provision. The managers note that the issuance of this special use permit to bolster educational programs, while providing an opportunity to further enhance resource management in the area, shall not be deemed to set precedent for other structures within the national forest system.

Section 336 retains the text of section 334 as proposed by the Senate, which modifies the Steel Loan Guarantee program. The House had no similar provision.

The conference agreement does not include language as proposed by the Senate in section 302 concerning the leasing of oil and natural gas on public lands within the Shawnee National Forest, Illinois, or in section 324 prohibiting the use of funds for the Kyoto Protocol, or in section 333 which exempted residents within the boundaries of the White Mountain National Forest from the recreation fee program. The House had no similar provisions.

The conference agreement does not include language proposed by the House in section 313 making a provision permanent that exempts properties administered by the Presidio Trust from certain taxes and assessments, since this provision was made permanent in the fiscal year 2001 Interior Appropriations Act, or in section 332 that prohibits funding for anyone convicted of violating the ''Buy American Act,'' or in section 334 that would have prohibited the use of funds to execute a final lease agreement for oil and gas development in the area of the Gulf of Mexico known as Lease Sale 181, or in section 335 dealing with a limitation of funds for revising hardrock mining regulation. The Senate had no similar provisions.

CONGRATULATING IRA LEESFIELD

(Ms. ROS-LEHTINEN asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Ms. ROS-LEHTINEN. Mr. Speaker, our Nation has many outstanding citizens. One such individual is Ira Leesfield, who will receive the Anti-Defamation League's Jurisdiction Award. This award recognizes individuals who have made an outstanding contribution to the legal profession and the community at large while exemplifying the principles upon which the Anti-Defamation League was founded.

Mr. Leesfield is one of the Nation's premier products liability and consumer safety lawyers and currently serves as Florida's senior governor on the board of the Association of Trial Lawyers of America.

The dedication he has shown to our country is evident throughout his entire career. He has worked at the Department of Justice, has served in the U.S. Army, and was appointed to important positions by both former President Clinton and former Florida Governor Lawton Chiles.

Mr. Leesfield is actively involved in community service and has strong commitments to the Miami Jewish Home for the Aged, Make-a-Wish Foundation, the Boy Scouts of America, and the Florida and National Committees to Prevent Child Abuse.

Please join me in congratulating Ira Leesfield for his contributions and for the leadership he has shown to his local community and indeed to our fine Nation.

MILITARY AT OUR BORDERS

(Mr. TRAFICANT asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. TRAFICANT. Mr. Speaker, Army at our airports, soldiers on our trains, National Guard in our cities, military everywhere except our borders. Our borders are still wide open. Unbelievable. Terrorists can cross with ease and kill millions of Americans. Beam me up. Policemen were not designed to fight a war, the military was.

I yield back the need for Congress to ensure the security and safety of our borders to keep terrorists out; and we are not going to do it with law enforcement. It is time to put the military at our borders.

RECESS

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. SWEENEY). Pursuant to clause 12 of rule I, the Chair declares the House in recess subject to the call of the Chair.

Accordingly (at 10 o'clock and 9 minutes a.m.), the House stood in recess subject to the call of the Chair.

AFTER RECESS

The recess having expired, the House was called to order by the Speaker pro tempore (Mr. LATOURETTE) at 1 o'clock and 19 minutes p.m.

MAKING IN ORDER AT ANY TIME CONSIDERATION OF H.R. 3061, DEPARTMENTS OF LABOR, HEALTH AND HUMAN SERVICES, AND EDUCATION, AND RELATED AGENCIES APPROPRIATIONS ACT, 2002

Ms. PRYCE of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that it be in order at any time for the Speaker, as though pursuant to clause 2(b) of rule XVIII, to declare the House resolved into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for consideration of the bill (H.R. 3061) making appropriations for the Departments of Labor, Health and Human Services, and Education, and related agencies for the fiscal year ending September 30, 2002, and for other purposes, and that consideration of the bill proceed according to the following order:

The first reading of the bill shall be dispensed with.

All points of order against the bill and against its consideration are waived.

General debate shall be confined to the bill and shall not exceed 1 hour equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Appropriations.

After general debate the bill shall be considered for amendment under the 5-minute rule.

During consideration of the bill for amendment, the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole may accord priority in recognition on the basis of whether the Member offering an amendment has caused it to be printed in the portion of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD designated for that purpose in clause 8 of rule XVIII, and amendments so printed shall be considered as read.

During consideration of the bill, points of order against amendments for failure to comply with clause 2(e) of rule XXI are waived.

At the conclusion of consideration of the bill for amendment, the Committee shall rise and report the bill to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted.

The previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit with or without instructions.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Ohio?

Ms. HART. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, an amendment had been prepared to be offered to be the Labor HHS appropriations bill, an amendment that is very important, in fact, an amendment that had been planned for quite a few months. This same amendment was going to be offered to the education bill, but was withdrawn in the interest of making sure that that education bill was passed this past spring.

An agreement was made that that amendment would be offered in the Labor HHS appropriation. The rule had originally included the protection of that amendment. However, as a sponsor of that amendment, I have agreed to withdraw it. I am not withdrawing it because it is not an important issue. I am not withdrawing it because of pressure by anyone in particular. The amendment is actually being withdrawn in the interest of the larger body and the passage of a bipartisan Labor HHS appropriation bill.

The amendment is extremely important, and I need to make clear that we will see the issue again. The issue is regarding something that surprises and shocks a lot of people once they hear that it actually happens in this country, and that is, that we know of at least 180 schools in the United States that hand out the morning-after pill to minors. These same schools will not even give a child an aspirin for a headache. Yet our law permits them to hand out the morning-after pill to little girls.

Mr. Speaker, as I said, it was a difficult decision to withdraw this amendment. Now my colleagues understand why. It is important for us as Members of Congress to protect our children. Protecting our children, in fact, is a large part of the things that are included in the Labor HHS appropriation bill.

We are not certain of the safety of the morning-after pill, especially its impact on very young women, those who would now receive it in at least 180 of our schools. In fact, in Great Britain a 15-year-old girl suffered a stroke after she had taken the pill at the age of 14.

The question, I think, that faces this body, and that will face this body again, is are we willing to go to the extent that we need to to protect our children? If a school cannot give a child an aspirin, why does this Congress permit a school to give a little girl a morning-after pill? That means, basically, that we are condoning, first of all, that that little girl has admitted to having been sexually active, likely at a very young age. Again, these are minors that are being handed out the morning-after pill.

Concern has been raised with me ever since I became the sponsor of this amendment in the spring by parents, by teachers, by church leaders, by people I run into in the mall; and support for this amendment has been expressed from all sectors. In fact, it has been expressed by both pro-life and pro-choice people.

That is an important point to make, Mr. Speaker, because we should not make this an abortion issue. This is an issue of little girls and giving parents and schools the ability to take care of them, to protect them, and to protect their health. Federal law currently permits the use of these Federal funds to distribute the morning-after pill to schoolchildren. Numerous courts have ruled that schools using Federal funds for family planning services are forbidden to notify parents, regardless of State parental consent notification laws.

Therefore, the amendment would prevent that by doing the following: the amendment would have said that any school that distributes the morning-after pill to these children would, therefore, not be able to receive any Federal funding.

That is the only way, Mr. Speaker, that we will prevent these schools from being social activists and encouraging, in a way, these young ladies to be sexually active without any protection, and, in fact, placing these children in danger of transmitting sexually transmitted diseases and contracting sexually transmitted diseases.

Mr. Speaker, it is only sensible for us to consider this issue at another time. I have had meetings this morning with leadership and have been assured that I will be able to move this issue forward at another time as a freestanding bill through the Committee on Education and the Workforce. Hopefully, we will get the support of the members of that committee. But until we do, Mr. Speaker, I want everyone to understand that this Congress is continuing to allow the distribution of what is and can be a very dangerous drug to these young ladies when that same school cannot even give the girl an aspirin for a headache.

Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. REGULA. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on H.R. 3061, making appropriations for the Departments of Labor, Health and Human Services, and Education, and related agencies for the fiscal year ending September 30, 2002, and for other purposes, and that I may include tabular and extraneous material.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

DEPARTMENTS OF LABOR, HEALTH AND HUMAN SERVICES, AND EDUCATION, AND RELATED AGENCIES APPROPRIATIONS ACT, 2002

Mr. LATOURETTE. Pursuant to the order of the House of today and rule XVIII, the Chair declares the House in the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for consideration of the bill, H.R. 3061.

IN THE COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE

Accordingly, the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H.R. 3061) making appropriations for the Departments of Labor, Health and Human Services, and Education, and related agencies for the fiscal year ending September 30, 2002, and for other purposes, with Mr. COMBEST in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Pursuant to the order of the House of today, the bill is considered as having been read the first time.

The gentleman from Ohio (Mr. REGULA) and the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. OBEY) each will control 30 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. REGULA).

Mr. REGULA. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, first of all, I want to thank the Members of the Subcommittee and of the Full Committee for their help in getting this bill to the floor. I want to thank the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. OBEY) for working with us on a bipartisan basis.

This is a far-reaching bill that touches the lives of every American, and I think we have had a spirit of bipartisanship in both the subcommittee and the full committee, with the gentleman from Florida (Mr. YOUNG) and the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. OBEY) in their roles as chairman and ranking minority members of the full committee.

I also want to thank the staff of both committees. They have worked closely together to ensure that we have a good bill that does the greatest amount of good for the American people. And I want to say a special thanks to the associate staff of the members of our subcommittee. They have been very helpful in letting us know and letting the staff of our committee know what was important to their members, so that we have tried to incorporate in this bill things that are very positive in every way.

I have said early on that the Bible says there are two great commandments, the first is to love your Lord and the second is to love your neighbor. This committee is the ''love your neighbor committee,'' because there is not a life in America that is not touched by what we do.

We could spend a lot of time, but we do not have a lot of time, so I do want to highlight some of the important things in this bill that are very essential, very important to the American people.

The fiscal year 2002 Labor, Health and Human Services appropriation bill totals $123.371 billion. And I might say here that Chairman YOUNG and Ranking Member OBEY worked closely with OMB in arriving at the number we needed to do this bill in the best possible fashion.

Also I want to say at the outset it is my understanding that the Office of Management and Budget will have a letter to us supporting what is in this bill, That is, the Administration.

It is the result of 2 months of subcommittee hearings in which we heard testimony from three Cabinet Secretaries, numerous agency heads, as well as 180 public witnesses. The bill provide $14 billion for the Department of Labor, which includes a $75 million increase for the very popular Job Corp program, $53 million for discretionary programs at the Department of Health and Human Services, including $393 million for bioterrorism protections.

And I might mention at this point that we added $100 million over what we had originally planned on as a result of the events just 30 days ago. So we have a very substantial sum to give the Centers for Disease Control in Atlanta to respond to bioterrorism concerns.

We have an increase of $22.8 million for biomedical research activities at the National Institutes of Health. And, finally, the bill provides increases for the Department of Education, totaling $4.7 billion above the President's request, and I might say it is in conformance with H.R. 1, which passed this House by a very sizable majority.

Mr. Chairman, many in this Chamber as well as the general public have been awaiting the movement of this bill over the past months. The primary reason for its delay over the summer has been our interest in seeing the Committee on Education and the Workforce complete their work in authorizing comprehensive reform for our elementary and secondary education program, the President's number one domestic priority.

Although the conference on this legislation is not yet complete, we have taken the format of the House passed version of H.R. 1 in crafting this bill. As many of you are aware, the bill received an increase in its allocation to address the priorities of education reform $4.2 billion of the $4.7 billion increase in the original allocation is devoted to three areas of education funding: Title I funding for the disadvantaged, Special Education and Pell Grants. And I am pleased that we could increase Pell Grants because this helps those students who do not have the necessary resources to get an opportunity to get education beyond high school.

Education programs for the disadvantaged based upon H.R. 1, the No Child Left Behind Act, are funded at $10.5 billion. While this funding level is a significant increase over last year, I want to highlight a major difference in the program over previous years. Under this bill and its underlying authorization, schools are now being held accountable to children and their parents for achieving success in reading and math. Gone are the days when Federal dollars flow to States and local education and counties with no accountability. The disadvantaged children of this country will no longer be permitted to be pushed along from grade to grade with little hope for their futures.

As a former teacher and principal myself, I recognize the vital role of a good teacher in ensuring the success of a student. I appreciate the work of the authorizers in recognizing this as well in title II of H.R. 1. We have provided $3.175 billion in this bill for teacher quality programs. These programs include both training for teachers just entering the field and continuing education for those already teaching.

In addition, we have provided $50 million for the Transition to Teaching/Troops to Teachers Program. I would especially highlight the Troops to Teachers Program, to which our First Lady Laura Bush is devoting a great deal of her time. This program will assist retiring members of our military by facilitating the necessary steps for teacher certification, enabling them to move into the field of teaching for their second careers. They bring to this field a vast amount of experience, both in working with people as well as experience and in many locations around the world. Our dedicated service men and women often have extensive knowledge and expertise in science and math, the very subjects that so many of our children are struggling with in the school experience.

Further, these military personnel have attained a level of maturity and organization that would be of great benefit to our schools today. I personally am very enthused about this program and its potential for our Nation's leaders, and I am grateful to our First Lady for her leadership in attempting to make it a success.

Next, we know how important the early years of learning are to promoting reading readiness. To assist our Nation's youngest children in obtaining these vital tools for reading, we are funding two new programs in the President's budget request, Reading First State Grants and Early Reading First. These programs are intended to enable children to derive the necessary tools for success in reading, including phonemic awareness, alphabetic knowledge and vocabulary. I know from my own experience as an elementary principal that you have to read before you can go into science, math and the other disciplines. Reading becomes fundamental.

Consistent with H.R. 1, our bill eliminates 35 programs in the Department of Education, consolidating and streamlining them and granting maximum flexibility to States and local education agencies to use funds to best meet the needs of their students. Again, we will put the money where it helps children and not so much in administrative costs.

Many Members have expressed their concerns about the level of Federal funding for Special Education. The fiscal year 2002 bill provides $7.7 billion for grants to the States for Special Education. This level is the highest ever for Special Education. As I mentioned earlier, the House and Senate education committees have not yet completed their conference on H.R. 1 and the issue of how special education is funded in the future has been an issue for the conference.

The Senate version of the bill included a provision to take funding for special ed out of discretionary spending and instead provide for it through mandatory spending. I want to emphasize that the proposal is the wrong way to approach this type of funding. We need to have oversight to make sure these programs are reaching the students that we want, and that the money is used wisely and carefully.

We are aware of numerous problems with the program, and only when the funding remains on budget is it accountable to the people through annual review of the Congress through the appropriations process.

Mr. Chairman, I commend the Secretary of Education for his announcement this past week of a special commission to examine the special education program and make recommendations for improving it. It is through this process that we can improve the program and more effectively fund the many needs of our Nation's children in need of special education services.

Finally, we all recognize the importance of higher education in meeting the needs of our 21st century global economy. Higher education expenses continue to increase at a higher level than inflation, presenting a major barrier for low-income students.

I am pleased to report that the bill includes an increase in funding for the Pell Grant programs which would bring the maximum grant level to $4,000, the highest in history.

The tragic events of September 11 have changed the lives of us all. While we are now focusing on terrorism around the world, we must make every effort to protect our citizens at home. Through several accounts within the Department of Health and Human Services, we are working to prepare our public health agencies to respond to bioterrorism threats. We have provided a total of $393 million to address these needs.

Here at home the health and well-being of our citizens, not just in the area of bioterrorism, but otherwise, must remain a priority for us all.

The bill provides an increase of $22.8 million for biomedical research activities at the National Institutes of Health. This increase is the same programmatic increase requested by the President.

During the course of our public witness hearings over 7 full days, a majority of our witnesses testified about diseases afflicting either themselves or a loved one. They appeared before our subcommittee seeking hope, hope for successful treatment and cures for these diseases. Our members have been touched by this testimony, and we are committed to providing funding so that the best and brightest researchers in our Nation, and I might say the most dedicated, may work to achieve the hope of so many of our citizens. Whether it is hope for my young constituent in North Canton, Ohio, who suffers from juvenile diabetes, or an older constituent in my district who in his middle years has received the devastating diagnosis of Parkinson's disease, funds for research are the hope we can provide.

The countless scientific breakthroughs and studies we have already funded have given us a great deal of knowledge in how to prevent disease and illness. It is incumbent upon us to share this knowledge to improve the health of the Nation. Through the good work of the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, we are getting the messages of prevention out.

In total, the bill provides $4 billion directly to the Centers for Disease Control. Its work includes efforts to prevent chronic diseases such as diabetes, heart disease and stroke by promoting healthy lifestyles.

Through the work of CDC's epidemic officers, we can bring important assistance and assurances to communities when disease outbreaks occur, as they did in my district this past spring. Students at a high school in my district contracted meningitis, a severe illness with potentially life-threatening consequences. The Centers for Disease Control, together with the Department of Health, worked to bring the outbreak under control and prevent its spread. The presence of CDC brought a sense of security to the community.

Our Nation's community health centers, funded through the Health Resources and Services Administration, represent an important health care option for the underserved. A funding priority for the President, we are providing $1.3 billion for these centers, which is an increase of $150 million over last year's bill and $26 million over the President's request. These take the place in many areas of emergency rooms and provide a much better source of health care on an easy-to-get-to basis.

This bill supports our country's comprehensive effort to aggressively combat HIV/AIDS, an epidemic claiming 40,000 new victims each year. It provides $112 million for the Ryan White AIDS programs, which enable individuals to access needed medical care and support services. The bill provides $844 million for programs at the CDC which fund research, surveillance, as well as State and local efforts to prevent the spread of this disease. It continues to support the groundbreaking research funded by NIH that could lead to improved treatments and, hopefully, a cure one day.

Through all these programs, this bill continues to support the Minority AIDS Initiative, which seeks to address the disproportionate impact of HIV/AIDS among racial and ethnic minorities.

We have included a total of $40 million for abstinence only education programs. This amount is $10 million over the President's budget request and $20 million over last year.

The training of pediatricians and pediatric specialists is an important priority. I am pleased to report that the bill funds Children's Graduate Medical Education at the full authorization level of $285 million.

Following the President's lead, this bill commits substantial resources to deal with our Nation's substance abuse program. It provides over $2 billion, an increase of $121 million from the previous fiscal year. Some of these funds will support the development of new prevention and treatment models and improve the delivery of services to the homeless population. Over $1.7 billion will be allocated for State substance abuse block grants, which support alcohol and drug abuse prevention, treatment and rehabilitation services.

The bill represents security in so many ways for so many people, including funding for the Low Income Home Energy Assistance Program at $2 billion, the highest level ever.

In addressing the President's Faith-Based Initiative, I am pleased to report that we have funded two programs in the budget request: The Safe and Stable Families Program at $70 million and the Compassion Capital Fund at $30 million for a total of $100 million.

The bill funds the Head Start Program at $6.4 billion, allowing for a continuation of the same level of services. It is a $276 million increase, and we are urging through report language that Head Start put more emphasis on education programs in their areas.

This bill supports a number of efforts to improve the health and quality of life of older Americans. It provides a $10 million increase for programs designed to enhance the training of health professionals in geriatrics, so they can better understand and respond to the health needs of our aging population, and a number of other things that are important to seniors, foster grandparents and so on.

The Department of Labor will receive a total of $14 billion in this bill to address growing needs in Workforce Investment Act job training as a result of our slowing economy. We provide $105 million over fiscal year 2001.

One compelling public witness who appeared before our committee addressed funding for Job Corps. This gentleman, now an employee of Roto Rooter in Cincinnati, told us of how his training at a Job Corps center and the job he now holds as a result has changed his life. He now has hope for his future when before he had none. I think we forget when we do these bills how they really touch the lives of people, and he was such a classic example of how important this program was to his future and what a great difference it has made.

Independent agencies. We gave the Social Security Administration additional funds so that when people need help in understanding their Social Security situation, there will be enough staff to take care of them.

We worked with the Institute of Museum and Library Services, again an important agency for the people of America. Libraries in communities across this Nation are windows of opportunity for so many young and elderly people alike.

The bill before you is a balanced, bipartisan bill. Through the numerous programs I have just described and the many I have not had time to mention, the bill provides security and hope for our citizens in greatest need.

I say to my colleagues, I ask for your support of passage of this bill. It is a good bill. It is a fair bill. It tries in a balanced way to address the multiplicity of needs, and it does show that we are a good neighbor, that this Nation cares about the quality of life for all its citizens.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. OBEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 11 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, Jim Dyer, Craig Higgins, Carol Murphy, Meg Synder, Susan Firth, Nicole Wheeler, Francine Mack-Salvador, Lori Rowley, David Reich, Cheryl Smith, Linda Pagelson, Lin Liu, David Pomerantz, Scott Lilly, Bob Bonner, Melody Clark, Christina Hamilton, Norm Suchar, Dayle Lewis, Scott Boule, Kristin Holman, Charles Dujon, Matt Braunstein, Chris Kukla and the associate staff on the majority side: What do all of those names have in common? They are the people who really put together this bill. Every Member of the House will have an opportunity to vote on this bill, and I think we can do that proudly, because I think it is a good bill. But the people who worked just as hard and, in fact, probably harder and the people who worked out many of the compromises that were needed to produce a bill which is truly a bipartisan bill were the people whom I just named. I want to express my appreciation to each and every one of them, because without them, we would not be able to deliver what we are delivering to the American people here today.

In my view, Mr. Chairman, this bill ought to be named the Family Opportunity and Health Security Act of 2001, because this bill, more than any other bill that we deal with, provides opportunity for average working families to share in the goodness that this society provides. And it also provides for the improvement of the health of every single American and, in fact, probably every single person in the world who is within the reach of any kind of civilized medicine. I think we ought to be very proud of that.

This is the second bipartisan bill that we have had on labor, health and education and social services in the last 7 years, and I hope that it is going to be the first of a long series of bipartisan bills in the future. This bill is the place that you go to measure congressional commitment to equal opportunity in education, to worker protection, worker fairness at the bargaining table. It is the place you go to see what our society will do to help those who are unlucky enough to be without health care or who have special problems in the health care area and need special help. It is the place where virtually every family goes to obtain advances in medical care. And it is the place where many people in this society go who live life on the underside to find some help and some relief from the pain and pressure of their daily problems. And I would say it is also the place where we go if we want to have some measure of the determination that is being applied, the human ingenuity that is being applied, in order to unlock the scientific mysteries of disease and its treatment and to protect public health. And each and every Member of this House can be proud to vote for this bill.

The bill is $12 billion over last year and I make an apology for absolutely not one dollar. I wish it had been more, because the families in this country who are serviced by this bill need more help than this bill will provide. The bill is $7 billion above the President, and I am pleased about that.

In the area of education, for the past 5 years this Congress has produced an education bill which provides about a 13 percent increase on average. The President's budget this year initially recommended that that increase be cut to 5.8 percent. This bill provides a 17 percent increase in funding for education. There is no more important long-term investment that we can make than that one.

In the area of education, special education, Mr. Chairman, is the third largest item in this bill. It is funded at $375 million above the President's recommendation. We have $7.7 billion in the bill. In 2 years we will have increased the Federal share of the cost of providing special education by 50 percent, and I hope we can increase it by 50 percent again in the next 2 years.

Title I is the main program that we use to try to provide extra educational help to the children who need it most, disadvantaged children who are at risk of dropping out and never making it, either in school or in society. This bill provides $10.5 billion, $1.4 billion over the President's request, $1.7 billion over last year. This is the largest increase in that program in the history of the program.

Pell Grants. That is the main program by which we assist average working-class families in this country to send their kids to college. It is a real door-opener to higher education opportunity. We provide in this bill a $4,000 maximum grant for those who qualify, $150 over the President's request, $250 over last year. Every dollar is well spent and will be well received by the American people.

The block grant for teacher training and class size reduction, $1 billion over last year and $575 million over the budget recommendation.

After-school centers, $154 million above the request. That program is in demand more than almost any I know in this bill, because as families' lifestyles have changed, so have their needs to see to it that their children at all times will be in healthy, wholesome places. There is no more treacherous time for children from the age of 12 to 15 than the after-school hours. That is when most of the juvenile crime is committed in this country and that is when we need the most supervision of kids, and this program, I hope, will be an ever-expanding program to help provide that supervision.

In the area of health care, we are $1.3 billion above the President, $3.4 billion above last year. Community health centers, we are $26 million above the President. That has also been a high priority item for the President himself. For Healthy Start, we are $102 million in this bill, $12 million again above the budget request.

Centers for Disease Control, crucial in these times when we are concerned about public health, when we see the anthrax concerns in Florida, we are $265 million above last year, $430 million above the President's request. For bioterrorism, we have a 28 percent increase above last year and the President's budget and in a follow-on appropriation bill we will have substantially more money than we have in this bill for that same item.

Mental health, $68 million above the President. There ought to be more. We have serious problems that are not being met in that area.

Human services. The Low-Income Heating Assistance Program that helps keep low-income senior citizens warm in the wintertime so they do not have to choose between heating and eating, $300 million above the President's request. I wish it could be more. Head Start, $276 million above last year.

In the area of the Labor Department, all of the personnel cuts in OSHA and Mine Safety have been eliminated. And we have added what I consider to be all too modest increases in other worker protection accounts. The international labor program that helps defend our workers and our country from the production of goods and services by slave labor and child labor abroad, we have restored fully the cuts that were recommended in the White House budget.

Title VI, foreign language studies. As I said in Committee, when the Russians invaded Afghanistan a number of years ago, we did not have enough language specialists to respond in the correct language. So our information services responded in Farsi. That did not help anybody in Afghanistan. They may have understood it in Iran, but they did not understand it in Afghanistan. We missed the target a little bit. Since then, what has happened in that area? Almost nothing. That is why we have a 19 percent increase in this bill. As you know, we also had an increase in another bill for the same item that passed this House last week.

All in all, this bill is far from perfect. I think given the needs of our society, we need more in education, in health care and in worker protection, but this is a very good bill given the circumstances in which we found ourselves in January. I very much appreciate the efforts made by the majority to make this a bipartisan bill. I very much appreciate the professionalism with which this bill has been approached by the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. REGULA), the distinguished subcommittee chairman, and also the distinguished gentleman from Florida

(Mr. YOUNG). He and I have many, many political differences. We do not have very many personal differences. We have disagreed many times but we have dealt with each other, I think, in a straight-shooting way. And I appreciate the fact that after some concern on this bill, we have brought a bill to this floor today under the rules of the House which treats everyone fairly and respectfully. And I think because of that, we are going to see a very large vote for this bill on both sides of the aisle.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. REGULA. Mr. Chairman, I am pleased to yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Florida (Mr. YOUNG), the chairman of the full committee. Again I want to emphasize how much help he and the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. OBEY) in his role as ranking on the full committee have provided to us to make this bill the success that I think it is.

Mr. YOUNG of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I rise to support this very good appropriations bill for our educational systems, for our health systems, for our labor programs and all of the associated programs represented by this bill. I want to add my compliments to Chairman REGULA. For years, Chairman REGULA chaired the Subcommittee on the Interior and did an outstanding job. This is his first time to chair this very important subcommittee, and he and Ranking Member OBEY have presented a bill that I think we can all be very, very proud of. The gentleman from Ohio (Mr. REGULA) and the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. OBEY) have explained much of the detail of the bill and I am not going to reiterate that.

I would like our Members to know that they might be a little surprised to see the bipartisanship in this debate today, but it was nearly 4 months ago that Chairman REGULA, Ranking Member OBEY and I sat together and decided that we really ought to make this a good bill that represents the needs of America rather than anyone's political agenda. That is what we have done and that is what we present to you today. This is the second largest appropriations bill of our 13 regular bills, the first being national defense.

Each one equally is important. National defense and the defense appropriations provide what is needed to secure America; this bill provides what is needed to secure the people of America in their personal needs, their health needs, their educational needs. The subcommittee has done a really great job in bringing this bill before us.

I wanted to compliment the gentlewoman from Pennsylvania (Ms. HART). I listened attentively to her comments earlier today. She discussed an important issue. But I really appreciate and thank her for the statesmanlike way that she addressed not only the issue, but the way she addressed the legislative process. I think she is to be complimented for the way she has handled herself on this particular issue.

It was important today to get this bill completed. It is the next to the last of the regular appropriations bills. The next one and the last one will be National Defense.

Then we change direction and go to the conference reports. We plan today to have the first conference report of a regular bill, the Interior bill, on the floor; and we will move quickly to conferencing all of the other bills that have been passed by both the House and the Senate. And hopefully our Members can look forward to early dismissal on the part of appropriations bills.

We will also be required to do another continuing resolution for approximately 1 week, which hopefully again we will do that this afternoon as well.

With that, I would just like to again compliment the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. REGULA) for an outstanding job, the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. OBEY) for an outstanding job, and all the members of the subcommittee and the staff on both sides of the political aisle for producing a good bill for Americans, one we can all be proud of.

Mr. OBEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 6 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Maryland (Mr. HOYER).

Mr. HOYER. Mr. Chairman, I thank the ranking member for yielding me time.

Mr. Chairman, I want to rise initially, as I said in full committee, I have had the opportunity to serve on this subcommittee now for 18 years. It has been led by some extraordinary Americans on both sides of the aisle. I started my service under Mr. Natcher. Bill Natcher of Kentucky was a legend in this institution. During the course of his service, he cast more consecutive votes than any person in history, a compliment to his sense of responsibility and his extraordinary self discipline. Succeeding him was Mr. Smith, and then the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. OBEY), and then Mr. Porter. When the Republicans took control in 1995, John Porter succeeded to the chairmanship, and he did an extraordinary job in a bipartisan fashion.

This bill, however, was not always treated in a bipartisan fashion, as we know, not, frankly, because of the appropriators or the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, but because of the extrinsic forces that came on to the committee with reference to caps on spending that were totally unrealistic and therefore led to either the bill being considered in a partisan fashion or, in fact, 1 year not being considered at all on the floor of the House and ultimately being considered in an omnibus appropriations bill.

But this year, this is a real bill; and it is a good bill. It is not a perfect bill. In fact, of course, we never pass perfect bills. But this bill is unique. It is in so many ways the people's bill, because it affects literally millions and millions, not only of Americans, but people around the world, who benefit from the research at NIH and who benefit from other facets of this legislation. But clearly the American people are advantaged by this bill.

The gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. OBEY) is absolutely correct when he says there are insufficient resources in this bill. When you sit in markup on both sides of the aisle, liberals, conservatives, East, West, North and South, Members say there needs to be more in this program or that program. I am going to speak about a couple of them briefly.

But this basically is a good bill; and I will support it, as the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. OBEY) is going to support it.

I want to again say, as I do almost every time I stand, because I think it is important for the American public to know the kind of leadership we have on critically important committees, the gentleman from Florida (Mr. YOUNG) is the epitome of fairness, integrity and bipartisanship. His view is on America's well-being, not on partisan gain. Those of us who serve with him are advantaged by doing so. I thank him for his leadership.

The good news for our subcommittee is that the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. REGULA) falls into the same category of a person focused on America, on Americans, and the country's interests, not on partisan interests. Therefore, this advantages this bill and our country.

Now, Mr. Chairman, let me mention a couple of issues, if I might, that I am very concerned about. The National Immunization Program at CDC receives a significant increase in this bill; and I thank the chairman of the subcommittee for that, an increase of $47.5 million over fiscal year 2001. But that is still only half the level that the Institute of Medicine recommended in its report last year for State operations and infrastructure and vaccine purchase.

As the recent report on anthrax in Florida has proven to us, the threat of a biological attack on this Nation is a very real one. I just got off the phone doing a tape for radio with reference to yesterday's incident on a Metro train. As a result, we need to do all we can to ensure that our public health system is able to respond in the event of attack.

I will say more about this when we mark up in conference. I know that there will be some emergency monies available for this objective as well at CDC.

My understanding is the Senator from Georgia, Mr. CLELAND, has suggested as much as a half a billion dollars increase in CDC to anticipate and deal with appropriate response in the event of a biological or chemical threat to the health of a city, a region, or our country.

Let me discuss one additional issue, Mr. Chairman, briefly; and that is the Assistive Technology Act of 1989. I bring that up not because we will add more money to this bill for that objective, but because I am hoping in conference we can add some authorizing legislation. Obviously it must be done with agreement of the authorizers, both in the House and Senate. I understand that, and we are working with them.

But if we fail to do so, nine States are going to lose assistance to make assistive technology available to those with disabilities so that they can be more able to participate fully in our society, whether it is jobs or in their home. I appreciate the chairman's concern about this and that he is working with us; and I appreciate the assistance of the ranking member, the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. OBEY), with this effort as well.

If we do not do something next year, nine States in 2002 will lose dollars; and 14 States will lose dollars in 2003 if we do not take action. I am hopeful we will do so, because this assistive technology is extraordinarily important to those challenged with disabilities to be fully incorporated into our society. That was the promise of the Americans with Disabilities Act which President Bush signed on July 26, 1990; and it is an effort that we ought to make to ensure that that promise is fully met.

Again, I thank the chairman of the full committee; and I thank the chairman of the subcommittee and our ranking member for working so diligently to make this bill within the resources available to us the best it could possibly be.

Mr. REGULA. Mr. Chairman, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. BOEHNER), one of the pride and joys of Ohio, our chairman of the Committee on Education and the Workforce, who has done an outstanding job of providing reforms that will make sure that no child is left behind.

Mr. BOEHNER. Mr. Chairman, let me thank my colleague from Ohio for yielding and begin by congratulating the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. REGULA) and the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. OBEY), the gentleman from Florida (Mr. YOUNG), and others who have worked so diligently over the last several months in putting together what truly is a bipartisan bill that we have on the floor today. All of us who have been here for any length of time know the difficulty this bill endures every year, and it is a real tribute to the three of you and the others involved in bringing this bill together.

Like the House-passed education reform bill that preceded it, the bipartisan bill that we have on the floor today by our appropriations colleagues represents a reasonable and necessary compromise between Republicans and Democrats on education spending levels.

The gentleman from Ohio (Chairman REGULA) and the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. OBEY) deserve great credit for their work, which follows H.R. 1 closely and paves the way for reforms that will improve public education for millions of American children. Like H.R. 1, it calls for more funding to implement long overdue education reforms. Like H.R. 1, it targets funding toward key programs, such as title I, to reflect the Federal Government's original mission in education, and that is helping those students who need the help the most.

It increases title I from the current $8.6 billion per year to $10.5 billion, a down payment on our shared goal of closing the achievement gap between disadvantaged students and their peers.

It triples funding for reading programs to $900 million to implement the President's Reading First initiative and helps schools implement programs based on scientific research.

It increases funding for teachers program by $1 billion a year to implement and make sure that States and schools can put the best-qualified teachers in each of our classrooms.

It increases bilingual education from $460 million a year to $700 million a year.

It increases funding for Individuals With Disabilities Education Act (Part B) by $1.4 billion over last year's number. We should all recognize that the increases that we have given to IDEA over the last 6 years have more than doubled funding for students with disabilities; and this increase that we have in this bill, I think, is a giant step forward in meeting our long-term obligation.

The bill also increases Pell Grants by $1.7 billion over last year's level and increases the maximum award granted to $4,000 per student. In a time of a slow economy, this $4,000 in Pell Grants will help the neediest of our high school graduates get the kind of education and training they need.

These funding increases should be complemented by the enactment of historic reforms that are at the core of the President's education plan. The new accountability that we see in the President's package will help us stem what has been going on in this town for a long time. New increases without accountability will simply amount to business as usual in Federal education policy, prolonging the status quo that Republicans and Democrats have pledged to jointly bring to an end.

Thirty-five years of mediocrity have taught us that money alone will not close the achievement gap between disadvantaged students and their peers. The House-Senate Education conference will continue working to ensure that these significant funding increases are targeted toward children who need the most help, instead of toward new bureaucracy. They must be used to strengthen existing programs, such as title I, so that disadvantaged students are served, rather than to create new unproven programs that really do not address the primary goal.

So I think we have a bill on the floor that mirrors H.R. 1. We expect our conference to be completed in the next several weeks. That and the completion of this bill, I think, will start us on a path where we can make sure that no child in America is left behind.

Mr. OBEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Illinois (Mr. EVANS), the ranking minority member on the Committee on Veterans' Affairs.

Mr. EVANS. Mr. Chairman, I would like to start off by taking a moment to personally thank the members of the Committee on Appropriations for the inclusion of increased funding for Parkinson's disease research. We are now on the verge of discovering a cure for Parkinson's. This strong Federal commitment on both the Republican and Democratic side will bring us closer to that end, and I appreciate all those Members helping out.

I do come before the floor today also in the spirit of bipartisanship that has been the rule of the day. In the wake of the cowardly and horrific attacks on our Nation on September 11, partisan wrangling is indeed frivolous.

To ensure that the business of this Nation moves on without delay, I decided not to offer an amendment today that, though I think it is crucial for the importance of the health of millions of Americans, could potentially be controversial and slow down the legislative process.

Had our Nation not been struck on that faithful day 1 month ago today, I would have offered an amendment to expand stem cell research. This amendment, which I would like to submit for the RECORD at this time, takes a cautious measured approach to realizing the full potential of promising research.

Mr. Chairman, I include the amendment I had proposed for the RECORD.

AMENDMENT TO H.R. 3061, AS REPORTED OFFERED BY MR. EVANS OF ILLINOIS

At the end of section 510, add the following:

(c) HUMAN EMBRYONIC STEM CELLS.—

(1) FINDINGS.—The Congress finds as follows:

(A) The President's decision to allow human embryonic stem cell research to go forward on stem cell lines derived on or before August 9, 2001, provides a crucial first step in conducting basic research on stem cells.

(B) Basic research on human embryonic stem cells is essential to determine how stem cells proliferate, specialize, and differentiate.

(C) Human embryonic stem cell research holds promise for cures and improved treatments for a wide array of diseases and injuries, including Alzheimer's disease, cardiovascular disease, diabetes, Parkinson's disease, and spinal cord injuries.

(D) The National Academy of Sciences and leading biomedical researchers agree that therapies for use by humans will not result from stem cell lines derived from human embryos on or before August 9, 2001, which have been grown with the use of animal products that pose health risks to humans.

(E) The President's policy must be revised if the Nation is to realize human applications of stem cell research.

(F) Given the promise of human embryonic stem cell research, the Congress should act expeditiously to consider Federal funding for this important research. If the Congress fails to address this issue expeditiously, the National Institutes of Health must be allowed to expand Federal funding of human embryonic stem cell research beyond research on stem cell lines derived on or before August 9, 2001.

(2) IN GENERAL.—Not later than August 9, 2003, the Director of the National Institutes of Health shall issue guidelines to authorize funding for research using stem cells that were derived from human embryos after August 9, 2001, if the applicant provides assurances satisfactory to the Director of the following:

(A) DATE OF DERIVATION.—The research cannot be conducted effectively using one or more stem cells that were derived from a human embryo on or before August 9, 2001.

(B) CONDITIONS OF DERIVATION.—Any human embryonic stem cell to be used in the research may be derived from an embryo only if that embryo has been donated from an in-vitro fertilization clinic in compliance with the following:

(i) The human embryonic stem cell is not derived from the embryo using Federal funds.

(ii) The embryo from which the stem cell is derived is created for the purpose of fertility treatment and is in excess of the clinical need of the individuals seeking the treatment.

(iii) Before being asked to consider donating the embryo for research purposes, the embryo's progenitors determine that the embryo is in excess of their clinical need for fertility treatment.

(iv) Before being asked to consider donating the embryo for research purposes, the embryo's progenitors are given the option of donating the embryo to an infertile couple for adoption.

(v) The embryo is donated with the informed, written consent of the embryo's progenitors (including a statement that the embryo is being donated for research purposes).

(vi) The decision of the embryo's progenitors to donate the embryo is made free of any influence by any researcher or investigator proposing to derive or use human embryonic stem cells in research.

(vii) Any compensation paid for the human embryonic stem cell does not exceed the reasonable costs of transportation, processing, preservation, quality control, and storage of the cell.

(3) EARLIER STEM CELL LINES.—This subsection does not impose any restriction on funding for research using stem cells that were derived from human embryos on or before August 9, 2001.

(4) APPLICATION.—Paragraph 2(A) shall not apply after August 8, 2005.

(5) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The guidelines issued under paragraph (2) shall take effect on August 9, 2003.

I believe the majority of my colleagues will find this compromise a prudent approach to this sensitive issue.

The amendment acknowledges the President's policy as a good starting place and allows research to go forward only under this policy in the near future. The science is in its infancy and the President's policy may be ultimately sufficient to conduct the most basic stem cell research that will be the foundation of science for the years to come.

But this policy will not suffice for the long term. Leading researchers and the National Academy of Sciences agree that it will not result in human therapies. This amendment would give Congress plenty of time to thoughtfully consider the issue of federal funding for embryonic stem cell research. However, if we fail to act in the next two years, NIH would be directed to incrementally expend embryonic stem cell research over a period of several years.

While I will not offer this compromise amendment today, I wanted to take this opportunity to remind members how critical this issue is to the millions of Americans who stand to benefit from this exciting new research. I hope that I can count on my colleagues' support when we revisit this issue next year.

I would also like to take a minute to personally thank the members of the Appropriations Committee for the inclusion of increasing funding for Parkinson's Disease research. We are on the verge of discovering a cure for Parkinson's Disease. This strong federal commitment will bring us closer to that end.

Mr. REGULA. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. SHERWOOD), a member of the subcommittee who is very constructive in his work and offers many useful suggestions.

Mr. SHERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding me time. I rise in strong support of H.R. 3061.

Mr. Chairman, it has been a real pleasure for me to serve on the Subcommittee on Labor, Health and Human Services, and Education of the Committee on Appropriations, which has produced this good bill that touches the lives of all Americans. The bill, which deserves our high praise and strong support, is the bipartisan product of the altruistic spirit and genuine compassion of the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. REGULA), the chairman of the subcommittee. As the chairman has often said, this clearly is the ''love thy neighbor'' bill.

It is fitting that we come together today, 1 month after the dastardly attacks on our Nation, to provide America with the resources that we need to defend against the threat of bioterrorism and to aid working Americans who have lost their jobs.

I am also glad that we have been able to fulfill the President's Reading First initiative. It is with education that we prepare for the future, and education begins with reading.

I am particularly gratified that the bill provides a $1.4 billion increase in special education. My 20 years on the public school board in Tunkhannock, Pennsylvania, has shown me how much more difficult local spending decisions made by school boards were made by IDEA mandates without adequate Federal funding. So I am glad that we addressed that.

Yesterday, the National Center for Health Statistics reported that America's life expectancy rose again last year. That report is a credit to the effort of Congress to support biomedical research and to improve treatments and cures for illnesses which afflict the American family. With this bill, we continue that effort.

Although it is a very modest program, only $5.3 billion, the Rural Community Assistance Program and the Office of Community Services Rural Facilities is very vital. RCAP helps rural communities to apply for assistance and to improve their infrastructure to sustain safe, affordable water.

I urge my colleagues to support this bill.

Mr. OBEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Indiana (Mr. ROEMER).

Mr. ROEMER. Mr. Chairman, while the terrorists on September 11 may have succeeded in bringing down our World Trade Towers and temporarily scarring the Pentagon, they only strengthened our resolve to get better prepared for bioterrorism and better educate our children.

I want to commend in the strongest terms possible our chairman, the gentleman from Florida (Mr. YOUNG), the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. REGULA), and the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. OBEY) for their strong leadership with this bipartisan bill. It is certainly a step forward in better preparing our country educationally and better preparing our country against terrorism.

On title I, a program to help educate our most vulnerable and needy poor children, we have a 20 percent, $1.7 billion increase to attach new reforms and testing to remediate and tutor these children. In Pell grants, this is a first-time Pell grant hit up to $4,000 for students going to college; and that is 57,000 more students who will be eligible to go to college. We also have a program called Transition to Teaching, working on our quality teaching in this country, which is the real key to success for all children.

I want to thank the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. REGULA) and the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. OBEY) for their help there.

Head Start programs have a $276 million increase, about a 4 percent increase keeping up with inflation. It will help early Head Start significantly more, with more children, for 0 to 3. I hope we will continue to do more for Head Start in conference.

Finally, on bioterrorism, we have a $301 million increase for stockpiling vaccines and for Federal, State, and local responses to help better prepare our forces for a bioterrorist attack. I would encourage this committee in the strongest terms that this is a first step. The gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. GREENWOOD) and I have bipartisan legislation for a $1.4 billion increase to better prepare this country on bioterrorism. I hope we will take those steps later on, maybe in the supplemental bill.

Mr. Chairman, again, I applaud the leadership for this bill.

Mr. REGULA. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Florida (Mr. KELLER).

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding me time.

Mr. Chairman, I rise today to speak in favor of the Pell grant increase in the Labor-HHS-Education appropriation bill.

Started in 1972, the purpose of the Pell grant program is to financially assist students from low-income families who would not be able to attend college because of the financial burden it would place on the student and his family. For example, my mom was a single parent who raised three children on the modest salary of a secretary. We lived in a one-bedroom home growing up. I personally would not have been able to go to college if it was not for the Pell grant program. In fact, one in five college students today benefit from Pell grants.

This year we will invest $10.5 billion in Pell grants, the largest investment in our country's history. College students will now be able to receive up to $4,000 a year, or $16,000 over a 4-year college career. This will fully cover the cost of tuition, fees and books at the University of Central Florida in Orlando. Now, all children, rich or poor, will have the opportunity to go to college.

This investment will also help generate up to $85 billion a year in additional tax revenues because students earning a bachelor's degree make 75 percent more money on average than those with only a high school diploma. I want to personally commend and thank the chairman of the subcommittee, the chairman of the full committee, and the ranking member of the subcommittee for their historic leadership in providing this high-level Pell grant funding. They are truly friends to our millions of college students who depend on this aid to go to college.

I urge my colleagues to vote ''yes'' on the Pell grants and ''yes'' on the Labor-HHS appropriation bill.

Mr. OBEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Oregon (Mr. BLUMENAUER).

Mr. BLUMENAUER. Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the gentleman's courtesy in allowing me to speak in support of this bill.

I join my colleagues in saluting the committee for the progress for education and health, especially for the IDEA special education grants. I understand why it was difficult to deal with issues of school modernization; but I am hopeful that before this Congress adjourns that we are able to assess that critical need.

But I would like to address my particular attention to the issue of public broadcasting. The committee has found a way to provide $365 million in advanced funding for the Corporation for Public Broadcasting. I think we have all been made aware, just in the course of this last month in our quest for information and news in the wake of September 11, what a critical role public broadcasting plays. A number of the Members of this Chamber looked last week again at some of the critical research videos that have been advanced that really provide broad public understanding of the events in the Middle East.

But of critical importance to public broadcasting is the Federal mandate that all TV stations expand from traditional analogue to modern digital transmission by May 2003. This is a powerful new tool for public broadcasting, but without Federal assistance for digital conversion, many areas of the country could lose their public broadcast signals. One-third of the 347 member stations in the system are considered at risk.

I appreciate the language in this bill providing for an additional $25 million for digitalization; however, this appropriation must be specifically authorized in subsequent legislation. I urge my colleagues to remain aware of this issue and authorize the appropriation in the future. We cannot afford to lose the connection that public broadcast provides between its groundbreaking educational, entertainment, and cultural productions in our communities everywhere. The committee has done its job, and I hope that Congress will follow through.

Mr. OBEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2½ minutes to the distinguished gentlewoman from New York (Mrs. LOWEY), also a member of the subcommittee.

Mrs. LOWEY. Mr. Chairman, I rise today in strong support of the fiscal year 2002 Labor, Health and Human Services and Education appropriation bill. It is really a privilege for me to serve on this committee; and I personally want to thank our chairman, the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. REGULA), and our ranking member, the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. OBEY). I know of their commitment to the issues that we discuss in this committee; and I want to also thank the staff of the committee, both majority and minority, who really have been a pleasure to work with. Their cooperation has allowed us to consider what should have been the least contentious bill in years, and I do hope that some of the amendments that were in the planning will not be offered so that we can all stand together in support of this really good bill that serves people in this country, because I certainly do not want to be here discussing some of these amendments. I would rather be working on ways to provide for the defense of our citizens, of finding ways to stimulate the economy.

This bill has provided for funding for so many programs that are needed by the American people. The bill significantly increases funding for the National Institutes of Health. We must continue to provide robust funding for medical research so that we can find the cures for disease.

The bill also provides a large increase for the 21st Century Learning Centers After School Program. I remember when I first got on this committee and we had $1 million in the program, and now we are up to $1 billion; and the lines are still long in every community of people who want to provide funding for after-school programs, so I want to thank again the chairman and the ranking member for their help in that area. The program gives millions of children a place to go after school where they can participate in meaningful activities.

I just want to mention one other thing. I do hope as this bill moves through the process we can add some money for school modernization. It has been an issue I have been working on for a very long time, and it is so very important. I do hope we can invest in that critical area. There are so many schools in terrible condition, and we should do something to help local school districts fix this problem. This bill is a very big step in the right direction.

Mr. Chairman, I support the bill; and I urge my colleagues to support it as well.

Mr. OBEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Rhode Island (Mr. LANGEVIN).

Mr. LANGEVIN. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding me time.

Mr. Chairman, I am proud to join my good friend, the gentleman from Illinois, (Mr. EVANS) who spoke just briefly a few minutes ago in addressing the important issue of stem cell research. The gentleman from Illinois (Mr. EVANS) and I are deeply committed to pursuing ways to reevaluate the August 9 cutoff date of the number of stem cell lines that can be used for four simple reasons. First, research is needed. Nearly one-half of the American population could benefit from stem cell research.

Two, in vitro fertilization. There are 400 in vitro fertilization clinics throughout the country helping hundreds of thousands of couples per year experience the joy of childbirth through in vitro fertilization. This process necessarily creates more embryos that can be used, so to relegate these potentially lifesaving cells to the trash heap instead of NIH laboratories after the arbitrary deadline of August 9 is inconsistent and unfair to 135 million Americans.

Third, current stem cell supply. Since August 9 we have learned that the 64 cell lines identified by NIH are not all robust and may not be safe because many researchers have mixed human cells with mouse.

Finally, fourth, government oversight. Irrespective of the President's guidelines, the private sector in the United States, as well as the public and private sectors abroad, will continue to conduct research on stem cells that fall outside the parameters established by the Bush administration.

We cannot let America fall behind in this research, and cannot deny our citizens the cures and treatments that may result from research conducted on cells derived after August 9. We must provide strong oversight to ensure that research is conducted by ethical means that do not force us to wrestle with similar moral questions in the near future.

Mr. Chairman, I thank the President for taking the first step, but I respectfully implore my colleagues to take the next. I look forward to working with Members in this endeavor.

Mr. OBEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentlewoman from California (Ms. PELOSI), the newly elected and soon-to-be whip of the Democratic Party.

Ms. PELOSI. Mr. Chairman, I thank the chairman for yielding time to me, and for his excellent service in bringing this bill to the floor.

I want to commend, certainly, our new chairman of the committee, the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. REGULA), and our big chairman, the chairman of the full committee, for their extraordinary leadership. With all of them working together, the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. OBEY), the gentleman from Florida (Mr. YOUNG), and the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. REGULA) put us in position today to vote for a bill that is worthy of our support.

One of the challenges, Mr. Chairman, that has been of particular prominence in the minds of all Americans since September 11 has been the threat of bioterrorism. On the Permanent Select Committee on Intelligence, where I serve as the ranking Democrat, we have studied the threat posed by biological and chemical agents and our ability to respond.

Great strides have been made in recent years, but we must strengthen the ability of the public health infrastructure to detect and contain an attack and treat its victims. This bill provides an increase of $60 million to improve surveillance and strengthen our medical response.

In addition, $20 million has been included for pilot projects to explore the feasibility of developing a Nationwide Health Tracking Network among all States to identify and track disease and related environmental factors. The CDC will use this and increased funding for its environmental health lab to rapidly assess human exposure to environmental toxins.

I am pleased also that HIV care and treatment through Ryan White has been increased by $112 million, and HIV prevention at the CDC has been increased by $86 million.

For the fourth year in a row, we have provided dramatic increases in biomedical research at the NIH. In addition to progress in the search for better treatments and eventually a vaccine for AIDS, these investments are yielding phenomenal progress in our understanding of the human body and how we are affected by our environment.

Additional resources, thanks to our distinguished leadership, have been provided for child care, breast and cervical cancer treatment, drug treatment, bilingual education, worker safety, and many other important areas.

This progress is promising, and I look forward to working with my colleagues on both sides of the aisle to address the unmet health, education, and labor needs that remain.

I urge my colleagues to support the labor, health and human services, and education bill.

Mr. Chairman, I comment Chairman REGULA and Ranking Member OBEY for their leadership on the Labor-HHS-Education Subcommittee. This is a difficult time for our Nation, and this can be a difficult bill to pass because it addresses important needs that we all feel passionate about—health care, education, and a strong work force. The Appropriations Committee has risen to this challenge and I am proud of the bipartisan bill that has been produced.

One challenge has been particularly prominent in the minds of all Americans since the September 11th attacks is the threat of bioterrorism. On the Intelligence Committee, where I serve as the Ranking Democrat, we have studied the threat posed by biological and chemical agents and our Nation's ability to respond. Great strides have been made in recent years, but we must strengthen the ability of our public health infrastructure to detect and contain an attack, and treat its victims. This bill provides an increase of $60 million to improve surveillance and strengthen our medical response.

In addition, $20 million has been included for pilot projects to explore the feasibility of developing a Nationwide Health Tracking Network among all States to identify and track disease and related environmental factors. The CDC will use this and increased funding for its environmental health lab to rapidly assess human exposure to environmental toxins, including biological and chemical agents.

I am also pleased that HIV/AIDS care and treatment through the Ryan White Care Act has been increased by $112 million, and HIV prevention at the CDC has been increased by $86 million.

As new infections remain steady and treatment advances reduce the number of AIDS deaths, more people than ever are living with HIV/AIDS and in need of treatment regimens that are costly, complicated, & lifelong.

For the fourth year in a row, we have provided dramatic increases in biomedical research at the National Institutes of Health. In addition to progress in the search for better treatments and, eventually, a vaccine for AIDS, these investments are yielding phenomenal progress in our understanding of the human body and how we are affected by our environment.

Additional resources have also been provided for child care, breast and cervical cancer screening, drug treatment, bilingual education, worker safety, and many other important areas. This progress is promising, and I look forward to working with my colleagues on both sides of the aisle to address the unmet health, education, and labor needs that remain. I urge my colleagues to support the Labor-Health and Human Services-Education Appropriations bill.

These needs are especially critical for communities of color, where the majority of new AIDS cases are occurring, and I am particularly pleased that funding for the Minority HIV/AIDS Initiative is increased by $37 million. Greater access to voluntary counseling & testing, stronger linkages between prevention & treatment, improved access to AIDS drugs, and a reduction in new HIV infections worldwide are vital, and will require significantly more resources than we currently provide.

We must continue to increase these resources, and commit ourselves to ensuring that the third decade of the AIDS epidemic is the last decade of the AIDS epidemic. The increases that are provided in this bill are an important step forward.

Mr. OBEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield the balance of my time to the distinguished gentlewoman from New York (Mrs. MALONEY).

The CHAIRMAN. The gentlewoman from New York (Mrs. MALONEY) is recognized for 1 minute.

Mrs. MALONEY of New York. Mr. Chairman, 1 month after September 11, Americans continue to contemplate the vulnerability of human life. So I think it is very fitting that we pass a bill today which does so much to preserve and prolong human life.

The bill increases funding for medical research, and keeps within reach the goal of doubling funding for NIH within 5 years. It includes report language that reinforces Congress' commitment to fully fund the NIH Parkinson's disease research agenda for fiscal year 2002. The bill reaffirms the President's commitment to stem cell research. The plan is far too limited, but it is a small step forward. I am pleased that it includes a substantial increase for education, although the bill should have funded the school repair and renovation program.

I applaud the gentleman from Florida (Chairman YOUNG), the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. REGULA), and the ranking member, the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. OBEY), for forging this bill in a bipartisan spirit at a very difficult time. They set an example for the appropriations process this fall, and for American unity and resolve.

Mr. REGULA. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself the balance of my time.

Mr. Chairman, I have just two things. I would like to read from the Administration letter. It says: ''The Administration appreciates that the House has retained the current language provision concerning Federal funding for needle exchange programs and the Hyde language regarding the Federal funding of abortions.''

So I want to make clear that this is the same language as has been in the past.

I also want to point out that we do have now the statement of administration policy. It has been coordinated by OMB with all the agencies, and it is a good statement supporting the provisions of this bill. So it truly is a bipartisan bill. It has the support of the leadership on the other side of the aisle and it has the support of our leadership and the support of the White House.

I would urge when we get to the final vote, that all the Members of this body support it. It is truly, as Mr. Natcher used to say, a people's bill.

Mr. BLUMENAUER. Mr. Chairman, my goal in Congress has been the promotion of livable communities. A community that is safe, healthy and economically secure must make the education of our children a priority. The well-being of our families depends on the federal government adequately funding health, education and worker protection programs.

Today's Labor-HHS Appropriations bill is a step in the right direction. It triples the President's proposed rate of new educational investment and significantly increases funding for health care and worker protection programs.

The bill increases education funding by $7.0 billion over last year's level, and $4.7 billion over the President's request. Over the last 5 years, the average annual rate of new educational investment has been 13%. The Bush budget proposed to cut this rate in half to only 5.5%, but the bill passed today increases this to almost 17%—the highest in a decade. Today's bill increases Title 1 funding, special education funding and teacher training and class size reduction funding by over $1 billion. These vital funds will help schools to hire up to 20,000 teachers to reduce class sizes and provide intensive, high quality and sustained professional development to as many as 825,000 teachers.

I applaud the Appropriations committee for approving a bill that does so much for health care in America. The bill increases health programs in the Department of Health and Human Services by $3.4 billion, which is a 10% increase above last year's level. We can all celebrate the increase in funding for Head Start and bioterrorism preparedness.

The bill restores proposed enrollment cuts in Head Start with an increase of $276 million over FY01 levels, preventing potential cuts of as many as 2,500 children from current Head Start enrollment levels. We must not neglect our children at this very important stage in their development. Our communities will also feel the security of an increased investment in the prevention of bioterrorism, a renewed threat to our nation. It is important, now more than ever, that we are prepared with the vaccines and drugs necessary to prevent exorbitant injury and loss of life in the event of a bioterrorist attack.

I am particularly pleased that the bill will increased our commitment to fighting HIV/AIDS, and helping the victims of this terrible disease. The FY02 bill will increase Center for Disease Control AIDS prevention and tracking funds by $53 million, and provide $112 million more than the FY01 level for Ryan White grants.

I am also encouraged by several of the labor provisions included in the bill. Funding for the Department of Labor is increased by 5%, rather than cut by 3% as was proposed by the Administration, providing growth in the major employment, training, and worker protection programs. Some of those improvements include the bill's restoration of the 180 employees that the White House budget proposed to cut from the Occupational Safety and Health Administration (OSHA).

The bill increases Jobs Corps funding $75 million over last year, reversing the President's proposal to flat fund the program. It also restores funding to FY01 levels for the International Labor Organization, reversing the President's proposal to cut $76 million our of this program that works to prevent child and slave labor.

I am pleased that the committee provides $365 million in advance funding for the Corporation for Public Broadcasting. We all are aware of the value of public broadcasting and that value is even more apparent during our quest for information and news in the wake of the September 11, 2001 terrorist attacks.

Of critical importance to Public Broadcasters is the Federal mandate that all public TV stations expand from traditional analog to modern digital transmission by May 2003. I appreciate the language in this bill providing an additional $25 million for digitalization. Without federal assistance for digital conversion, one-third of the 347 member stations the Public Broadcasting System are considered at risk of possibly losing their public television signal once the transition period ends and analog transmission is no longer possible.

These are all important programs for advancing quality of life goals, and supporting all of our citizens. I urge support for this bill.

Mrs. CHRISTENSEN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the bipartisan agreement represented by H.R. 3061. The Labor, Health and Human Services and Education appropriations bill.

I particularly want to applaud Chairman REGULA and Ranking Member OBEY on the yeoman's job they have done to bring this bill to the floor.

This bill provides significant increases for education above the President's request, and restores and increases funding in many critical health programs above the original request as well. Among these, I am especially pleased that Healthy Start will receive a 13% increase.

Our Minority HIV/AIDS initiative was not funded at its requested level of $540 million. The committee however did provide an increase of $37.3 million above last years funding, an increase of about 11%. For that increase, which is reflected across the board in all of the Departmental agencies, which have responsibility for HIV and AIDS, we are grateful. While it is short of what we determined would be needed, it has the potential to reach many infected and affected people within communities of color and other hard to reach populations, who have been disproportionately and devastatingly impacted by this disease.

What we still have major concerns about is the language, which does not go far enough to ensure that this program funding will go to build capacity in the most severely impacted communities of color.

We would ask that the leadership and those in the conference committee continue to work with us to ensure that the intent and the integrity of the Minority HIV/AIDS initiative—an initiative that would not only begin to bring the epidemic that exists in our communities under control, but also begin to repair and rebuild a now fragmented healthcare infrastructure. In the long run, this small amount of funding, with the appropriate targeting can greatly impact the health status not only of those special populations we seek to reach but the entire nation.

We look forward to addressing the language issue, as it will determine how effective this funding will be.

In the meantime, we again thank the Committee and the Subcommittee for their assistance and support.

Mr. SERRANO. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the H.R. 3061, making appropriations for the Departments of Labor, Health and Human Services, and Education and a number of related agencies for the fiscal year 2002.

I want to commend Chairman REGULA and Ranking Democrat OBEY and the Members of the Subcommittee on their fine, bipartisan work in crafting this bill. While I do not agree with every provision of the bill—no one does—I deeply appreciate the cooperation and restraint on both sides of the aisle that have brought use to consideration of the bill today.

This bill supports programs and services that are among the most important to our constituents, both in ordinary times and in times of crisis.

As we move forward from the dreadful attacks of September 11th, we must continue to support our children's education, the health and well-being of our people, and the ability of our workforce to thrive in the economy of the 21st Century. At the same time, we must help those whose lives have been disrupted in the aftermath of the attacks and strengthen our long-neglected public health system to meet future challenges, as the anthrax cases in Florida demonstrate.

The bill would provide $14 Billion for the Department of Labor, including important increases in funding for the Job Corps, which has a successful site in my district, and the Employment Standards Administration (ESA) and Occupational Safety and Health Administration, which protect workers from exploitation and injury.

The Department of Health and Human Services would receive $53 billion in discretionary appropriations, including important initiatives in countering bioterrorism, increases for biomedical research, disease control and prevention, and health services. The $150 million increase in funding for community health centers is particularly welcome. Also receiving increases are the child care block grant, Head Start, and other important social services programs, although I wish we could have done more for LIHEAP.

The Education Department would receive $49 Billion, 17% above last year. The President and Members on both sides of the aisle recognize the crucial importance of reforming and funding better schools for our children. In many ways, our future depends on this. The increase in the Pell Grant to $4,000 is also to be applauded.

Mr. Chairman, this is a good bill. I might have put more money into it and distributed the funds a bit differently, but I am pleased to support it and urge my colleagues to do the same.

Mr. BENTSEN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong support of H.R. 3061, the Fiscal Year 2001 Labor, Health and Human Services, and Education Appropriations bill. This legislation would provide $395 billion for the Departments of Labor, Health and Human Services, and Education, and related agencies. I am especially pleased that this legislation would provide a 16 percent increase for education funding and 12 percent increase for biomedical research conducted through the National Institutes of Health (NIH).

With regard to education, I am pleased that this bill would dramatically increase funding for education programs by providing $7 billion over FY 2001 levels and $4.7 billion above the President's request. Over the last five years, the average annual rate of new educational investment has been 13 percent. This legislation would increase the education investment to 17 percent—the highest in a decade. While the bill does not include separate funding for the class-size reduction initiative, I am pleased that the program was redirected into teacher quality state grants. Under this legislation, these state grants will receive a $1 billion increase to help schools reduce class size and provide professional development for teachers and other school employees. Additionally, the committee's inclusion of $975 million for the President's Reading First initiation will enable schools to bring proven, research-based reading programs to students in the critical early learning years. The $1 billion increase for 21st Century After School Centers will provide students with a quality after school program. And for students continuing on to higher education, the increase in the Pell Grant maximum grant to $4,000 will enable low-income students to meet today's ever-increasing educational costs. Additionally, the bill wisely rejects proposed enrollment cuts to Head Start, preventing possible cuts for as many as 2,500 children from this critically important program.

I am also pleased that the committee included a 50 percent increase in the federal share of special education costs. Over a two-year period, the funds will raise the federal share toward special education costs to 18 percent from 12 percent. In 1975, Congress passed Public Law 94–142, the Individuals with Disabilities Education Act (IDEA), which committed the federal government to fund up to 40 percent of the educational costs for children with disabilities. However, the federal government's contribution has never exceeded 15 percent, a shortfall that has caused financial hardships and difficult curriculum choices in local school districts. According to the Department of Education, educating a child with a disability costs an average of $15,000 each year. However, the federal government only provides schools with an average of just $833. While I believe the funding increase in this legislation represents a step in the right direction, I believe we must abide by our commitment to fund 40 percent of IDEA costs, and I am hopeful that we will consider greater funding increases in the next fiscal year.

While the overall bill is a good one, there are many important programs that were level-funded or eliminated under this legislation. To that end, I look forward to working with my colleagues to continue funding for these programs at adequate levels, or in the case of school modernization, to work for its reinstatement. In total, though, this bill makes important investments in education, and will provide America's children with the resources they need to succeed and be productive members of our society.

As a Co-Chair of the Congressional Biomedical Research Caucus, I am pleased that this legislation provides $22.9 billion for the National Institutes of Health (NIH), an increase of 12 percent or $2.6 billion more than last year's budget. This $22.9 billion NIH budget is our fourth payment to double the NIH's budget over five years. I am disappointed that this $22.9 billion does not provide the $3.4 billion that we believe is necessary to maintain our goal of doubling the NIH's budget over five years. Earlier this year, I organized a bipartisan letter in support of this $3.4 billion increase for the NIH. I understand that the Senate Labor, Health, and Human Services, and Education Fiscal Year 2002 Appropriations bill includes a $3.4 billion increase for the NIH. It is my hope that the conference committee will adopt this higher NIH budget.

I am a strong supporter of maximizing federal funding for biomedical research through the NIH. I believe that investing in biomedical research is fiscally responsible. Today, only one in three meritorious, peer-reviewed grants which have been judged to be scientifically significant will be funded by the NIH. This higher budget will help save lives and provide new treatments for such diseases as cancer, heart disease, diabetes, Alzheimer's, and AIDS. Much of this NIH-directed research will be conducted at the teaching hospitals at the Texas Medical Center. In 2000, the Texas Medical Center received $289 million in grants from the NIH. I will continue to work to ensure the highest level of funding for the NIH.

I am also pleased that this bill provides $393 million for countering bioterrorism, including $100 more above last year's budget. In light of the recent terrorism acts, I believe we all believe that this investing in our national public health system is necessary and prudent. This budget provides $301 million for the Public Health and Social Services Emergency Fund which would support programs at the Office of Emergency Preparedness. As the representative for the Texas Medical Center, which was recently affected by devastating flooding by Tropical Storm Allison, I can attest to the need for such funding. During this natural disaster, the Office of Emergency Preparedness was one of the first federal agencies to provide relief to our area and I applaud their efforts to immediately act to help during disasters. This $393 million budget will also provide $93 million in bioterrorism research at the NIH.

In addition, I support the $4.1 billion budget for the Centers for Disease Control, a $214 million increase or 6 percent increase above last year's budget. The CDC is critically important to monitoring our public health and fighting disease. Of this $4.1 billion CDC budget, $1.1 billion will be provided to address HIV/AIDS programs and to combat tuberculosis. This CDC budget also provided $599 million to provide immunizations to low-income children. Immunizations have been shown to save lives and reduce health care costs. Investing in our children is a goal which we all share.

I urge my colleagues to support this legislation and vote for this important health, education and labor funding measure.

Mr. DAVIS of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I rise today in strong support for forward funding of the LIHEAP program. Due to the nature of winters in Chicago and the east coast we can now implement safe guards for all our citizens. As we approach the coming winter months, preparation by forward funding can eliminate overwhelming burdens placed on low income families. The city of Chicago alone, has seen tremendous fatality rates due to excessively hot summers and extremely cold winters. The Department of Justice estimates that home heating oil prices could be 30% higher this winter from the previous winter and that natural gas prices could surge 40% higher. More than 150,000 of my constituents lives at or below the poverty level and with these circumstances are often faced with harsh and difficult decisions. Some of these citizens are forced to choose between medicine and cool air in the summer and between food and heath for their homes in the winter. According to the Roundtable Report to the Public Utilities Committee of the House of Representatives, the average winter bill for a typical family of four is 5.9% of their annual income. A family of four living at 125% of poverty pays between 20% to 37% of their annual income for winter heating cost. The low income families cannot afford to pay these high energy cost. Therefore, I am in strong support of Representative QUINN's amendment for an advance in the LIHEAP funding. We already know that many low income families will fall behind on their heating bills; however, we can offer an alternative by the passage of this amendment.

I urge its consideration and passage.

Mr. TANCREDO. Mr. Chairman, when my children were growing up and before they had an understanding of the family budget, they would ask for things that we were sometimes unable to provide. They were usually extravagant things we simply could not afford. We didn't blame them for asking—they were just kids—they didn't know better.

What is our excuse? Is there a Member of the body who can't understanding the fiscal implications of declining Federal revenues combined with the cost of financing of a war?

How many of us I wonder will file down here and dutifully cast our vote for this bloated, extravagant, piece of profligate spending and then go home to tell our constituents that we are appalled by the fact that the Social Security surplus has been blown.

There is more than one kind of threat to the Nation—one stems from foreign terrorists and another from the fiscal irresponsibility of budget busting appropriations like this.

The 12.6 percent increase in this bill is unconscionable. I am not saying that the hundreds of programs funded in this bill are not all individually wonderful. They will surely bring about a totally literate society while concurrently wiping out poverty in America as one would be led to believe by listening to the rhetoric supporting it. What I am saying is that they are not as important as providing for the common defense. This after all is the thing for which we have sole and paramount responsibility—it is not our main responsibility to be the Nation's school board or health care provider.

And Mr. Chairman, I know it is hard to hear what I am going to say. It was hard to tell it to our kids but here it goes—we can't afford this bill. If we can't defeat it I hope the President will act as the adult here and veto the bill.

Mr. BEREUTER. Mr. Chairman, this Member wishes to add his strong support for H.R. 3061, the Labor, Health and Human Services and Education Appropriations Act for fiscal year 2002. This Member would like to commend the distinguished gentleman from Ohio [Mr. REGULA], the Chairman of the Appropriations Subcommittee on Labor, Health and Human Services and Education, and the distinguished gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. OBEY], the ranking member of the House Appropriations Subcommittee on Labor, Health and Human Services and Education, for bringing this important bill to the House Floor today.

In particular, this Member supports the additional $25,000,000 provided to the Corporation for Public Broadcasting for digitalization. Public broadcasting has been issued a mandate to be on the air with a digital signal by 2003. By FY 2004 all stations will bear the additional costs of dual carriage of analog and digital signals. Nebraska ETV Network has worked closely with this Member and has informed me and shown evidence that they anticipate using the digital signal to offer multicating and interactive video that will enable the network to address even more needs of children and adult learners. The State of Nebraska has already committed significant resources to convert the nine-station Nebraska ETV Network to digital technology. The funding plan approved by Nebraska's legislature and governor to ensure the Network's compliance with the Federal mandate assumed a commitment from the Federal Government to help close the DTV funding gap. If we are to ensure that our local communities continue to receive the rich educational, cultural and informational programs and services offered by local public television stations, we must help them.

On another issue, the Member would like to commend his colleagues for their continued support of efforts to improve the delivery of health services in rural areas. Specifically, H.R. 3061 provides $142 million for the National Health Service Corps, which plays a critical role in maintaining the health-care safety net by placing primary health-care providers in our nation's most underserved rural and urban communities. The measure also appropriates $1.319 billion for the Consolidated Health Centers program—$150 million more than fiscal year 2001. Community Health Centers (CHCs) provide primary and preventive care to medically underserved and uninsured people, including 5.4 million rural residents. Certainly, this Member commends this effort and encourages the expansion community health center services to address the needs of rural and underserved communities.

This Member is especially pleased that the appropriations bill provides $35 million for the Medicare Rural Health Flexibility Program. Nebraska has been on the forefront of converting rural hospitals to critical access status. As of October 1, 2001, Nebraska has 53 Critical Access Hospitals which is the most in the country.

Furthermore, H.R. 3061 appropriates $52 million to the Rural Health Outreach and Network Development and Research Grant Program and $27.6 million to the Rural Telemedicine Grant program. These grants are available to rural communities working to provide health care services through new and creative strategies including telemedicine and trauma care services.

Additionally, this Member would like to take this opportunity to explain his ''nay'' vote on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. SCHAFFER], a vote taken with some reluctance but very careful consideration. Within this Member's home state of Nebraska, the number of children enrolled in special education programs has risen by 3,700 students from 1995–1999, a nine percent increase. This Member has always supported fulfilling the commitment made by Congress made in 1975, which this Member notes was prior to his service in U.S. House, to fund IDEA at 40 percent.

Currently, the Federal Government is funding an average of 12.6 percent of the per pupil expenditure for children with disabilities. The other 27.4 percent of our unfilled promise is a burden that state and local governments are having to include in their budgets. This Member has said for many years now that the one significant way that Congress can help decrease property taxes for his Nebraska constituents as well as to meet their other programmatic, construction or enhanced teacher salary priorities, is to keep the congressional promise to provide 40 percent of the costs of special education.

Of course, it would be ideal to have the full 40 percent funding of IDEA in the Labor, Health and Human Services and Education Appropriations Act. However, the Schaffer amendment would have severely cut appropriations for disadvantaged children through Title I, vocational education and TRIO in order to offset the increase in IDEA funding. The underlying bill (H.R. 3061) provides a $1.4 billion increase for IDEA, which is $400 million above the President's request. Furthermore, this Member notes that over the past two years, funding for IDEA has been increased by $2.7 billion.

Mr. Chairman, in closing, this Member urges his colleagues to support H.R. 3061.

Mr. CASTLE. Mr. Chairman, I am pleased to rise in strong support of H.R. 3061, the FY02 Labor, HHS and Education spending bill.

First, I want to thank Chairman REGULA for his yeoman's work on this legislation. Each year, the spending bill for the Departments of Labor, HHS, and Education is among the most difficult to complete and this year is no exception.

H.R. 3061 builds on investments in education which really began to take off in FY96. At the time, K–12 funding totaled $11.2 billion. Since then, K–12 funding has increased to $20 billion in FY01, and I am pleased to say that this investment continues even today.

More important, H.R. 3061 reflects the bipartisan education priorities that passed the House as part of the No Child Left Behind Act, and it increases funding for programs, like IDEA and Title I, which haven't always received sufficient funding in the past.

Since the enactment of IDEA, Congress has increased funding for State grants under this act from $251.7 million in FY1997 to $6.34 billion in FY2001, with the amount appropriated for State grants nearly tripling in just the last six years.

Under the leadership of former Members PORTER and GOODLING, we have increased funding by more than $4 billion—175% increase in the Federal contribution.

This year we will add an additional $1.4 billion, increasing the total to $7.7 billion. This is the highest level of Federal support ever provided for children with disabilities, with the level of Federal funding growing from 7 percent of the per pupil expenditure to 18 percent.

While this bill may not fully fund IDEA, I believe it takes a significant and responsible step in the right direction. More important, it gives the Education and the Workforce Committee the flexibility it needs to successfully reauthorize the program next year.

H.R. 3061 also helps address the problem of overidentification of special needs children in IDEA by fully funding the President's request on the reading first and early reading first programs. This more than triples our current investment in reading instruction.

We have seen tremendous increases in the number of students, and African American students in particular, diagnosed with learning disabilities and referred to special education. As former Chairman GOODLING used to say, we will never get to full funding until we address this problem.

If we are able to identify and intervene with these children—as proposed in reading first and early reading first—we take the first step in reducing the number of students who cannot read, reduce special education referrals, and pave the way to fully funding IDEA.

On Title I, AID to disadvantaged children, H.R. 3061 appropriates $10.5 billion, an increase of $1.9 billion. This funding will support the reforms in the No Child Left Behind Act, which will require additional funds to turn around failing schools and ensure all students are proficient in reading and math.

Also critical to the successful implementation of the No Child Left Behind Act, the bill provides $400 million to help States develop and implement the annual reading and math assessments for students in grades 3–8. In so doing, H.R. 3061 puts a downpayment on our system of accountability—the heart of our education reform package.

In conclusion, I want to again thank Chairman REGULA and Chairman YOUNG for their excellent work on this legislation. They have managed to produce a balanced bill that will help our country fundamentally change the way we educate our children for the better.

The CHAIRMAN. All time for general debate has expired.

Pursuant to the order of the House of today, the bill shall be considered for amendment under the 5-minute rule.

During consideration of the bill for amendment, the Chair may accord priority in recognition to a Member offering an amendment that he has printed in the designated place in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. Those amendments will be considered as read.

The Clerk will read.

H.R. 3061

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the following sums are appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the Departments of Labor, Health and Human Services, and Education, and related agencies for the fiscal year ending September 30, 2002, and for other purposes, namely:

TITLE I—DEPARTMENT OF LABOR

EMPLOYMENT AND TRAINING ADMINISTRATION

Mr. BASS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I do have an amendment to offer. I had planned to offer a couple of amendments having to do with funding for IDEA, special education.

But I have to say that within the constraints of the budget, the distinguished subcommittee chairman, my friend, the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. REGULA), has done an extraordinary job in raising funding for this critical program by $1.375 billion. I believe that is the greatest increase that we have had from this body since I have been here.

It does not meet the objective of reaching 40 percent, or our mandate, within a specified period of 5 or even 10 years, but it recognizes, and certainly it is an extraordinarily commendable effort on the part of this subcommittee, and expresses the intent of this subcommittee chairman to meet this goal as quickly as possible.

We do have opportunities on the horizon. IDEA will be up for reauthorization next year. It is my hope that we can combine the process of reauthorization with an effort to set this Congress on a path to meeting the 40 percent funding goal in a set period of time.

I thank the chairman for his hard work in this area.

Mr. REGULA. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BASS. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. REGULA. Mr. Chairman, I want to add to that that the minority also is extremely supportive of this increase, and there truly is bipartisan support for the program.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

This title may be cited as the ''Department of Labor Appropriations Act, 2002''.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there any amendments to title I?

Mr. HILLEARY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to engage the chairman of the subcommittee in a colloquy.

I would ask the gentleman, in the bill language relating to H.R. 3621 he stated that the funding is provided for school improvement programs, including the rural education program as ''redesignated and amended by H.R. 1 as passed by the House of Representatives on May 23, 2001.''

Is it the committee's intent, Mr. Chairman, that the funding for the rural education program follow the program structure and funding distribution as outlined in H.R. 1, title I, part (G), regarding rural schools?

Mr. REGULA. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HILLEARY. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. REGULA. Yes, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman is correct. The committee's intention is to provide funding for programs included in H.R. 1, the No Child Left Behind Act, as it was passed by the House this spring.

Mr. HILLEARY. Mr. Chairman, I thank the chairman for clearing up that ambiguity.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there other amendments to title I?

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. ISTOOK

Mr. ISTOOK. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 18, line 8, after the dollar amount, insert the following: ''(reduced by $3,072,000)''.

Page 21, line 13, after the first dollar amount, insert the following: ''(reduced by $36,170,000) (increased by $33,000,000)''.

Page 23, line 4, after the dollar amount, insert the following: ''(increased by $33,000,000)''.

Mr. REGULA. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. A point of order is reserved.

Mr. ISTOOK. Mr. Chairman, the effect of this amendment is to increase by $33 million the amount appropriated for abstinence education, as has been defined by this Congress in previous legislation.

Let me first state, Mr. Chairman, that I appreciate that the gentleman from Ohio (Chairman REGULA) in this base bill has increased the funding for abstinence education. My regret is that it is not to a level that many of us consider satisfactory, but that should not remove our appreciation for the fact that it has been increased.

We have had for many years, for decades, Mr. Chairman, Federal funding for so-called family planning or safe sex programs, as they are often called. But Mr. Chairman, that has not reversed the trend of increase in teen births out of wedlock.

However, in recent years, Federal funding began in 1995 and private funding began in the couple of years before that, and in recent years we have seen a very different approach that has taken place; that is, promoting abstinence as the surest and only way to prevent sexually-transmitted diseases, or to prevent the out-of-wedlock births among teenagers.

Indeed, President George W. Bush, when he was campaigning, made the commitment to bring the level of Federal funding for abstinence education to the same level as we are spending on the family planning and safe sex programs. That is what this amendment does. By the $33 million increase, it brings parity.

What we mean by that is we follow the definition of this Congress to say that we are talking about the funding for education that has as its exclusive purpose teaching the social, psychological, and health gains to be realized by abstaining from sexual activity, and teaching that abstinence from sexual activity outside marriage is the expected standard for all school-aged children, and the only certain way to avoid out-of-wedlock pregnancies, to avoid sexually-transmitted diseases, and to avoid other associated health problems.

Indeed, only with the advent of abstinence education have we seen in the last couple of years a reversal of the long-standing and deplorable trend in this country of increases in teenage unwed births.

Earlier this year, for the first time, grants were made to applicants by the Department of Health and Human Services, putting out the first 20 million in competitive grants for this purpose. They were overwhelmed. It was the greatest tide of applications they have ever seen for any program. Over 359 entities across the country seeking some $165 million applied for a program that only had $20 million available to it.

We need to increase the amount of money we are putting into abstinence education for the benefit of our kids, for the benefit of our Nation, which pays exorbitant costs with out-of-wedlock births and supporting the social problems that come from them, and we need to start reinforcing what we teach our children at home, what we teach our children at church, but too often is undercut by the messages sent by the Federal Government.

Rather than defunding the Federal Government's programs relating to so-called safe sex, we are seeking parity. We are seeking equity which was what the commitment was by President Bush; and indeed, since the original budget was submitted by the Bush administration, the amount that we made available for this bill has gone up by some $2 billion which created the room to make this comparatively minor increase in abstinence education funding.

The Office of Management and Budget has submitted, we have made it available to the Members, their letter supporting this increase in funding to abstinence education. Let us bring the account up from the 40 million it has in the bill to 73 million which will be the effect of this amendment. It is money that we can easily afford to fund. It keeps the commitment certainly of Mr. Bush, but more importantly than that, it keeps in place the values that we teach our kids and says we want to reinforce them and not to be undercutting them.

So, Mr. Chairman, I certainly move the adoption of this amendment that brings parity in the funding of these accounts and within the scope of a bill as large as this one is a comparatively minor adjustment.

POINT OF ORDER

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. REGULA) insist on his point of order?

Mr. REGULA. Mr. Chairman, yes, I do.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. REGULA. Mr. Chairman, the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma (Mr. ISTOOK) proposes to amend portions of the bill not yet read. The amendment may not be considered en bloc under clause 2(f) of rule XXI because the amendment proposes to increase the level of budget authority in the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there any other Members seeking to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. ISTOOK. Mr. Chairman, I wish to be heard.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma is recognized.

Mr. ISTOOK. Mr. Chairman, it is our understanding from the parliamentarian that it is necessary that the amendment be offered at a place in the bill where the first adjustment, the first offset is being made which is the point at which we have offered it in this bill.

Furthermore, it is dollar for dollar the same as the amount that is contained in those sections of the bill involving any sort of transfer.

I would ask the Chair to overrule the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there other Members who wish to be heard on the point of order? If not, the Chair will rule.

To be considered en bloc pursuant to clause 2(f) of rule XXI an amendment must not propose to increase the levels of budget authority or outlays in the bill. Because the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma (Mr. ISTOOK) proposes a net increase in the level of budget authority or outlays in the bill as argued by the chairman of the subcommittee on appropriations, it may not avail itself of clause 2(f) to address portions of the bill not yet read.

For that reason, the point of order is sustained.

PARLIAMENTARY INQUIRY

Mr. ISTOOK. Mr. Chairman, would the Chair yield for a parliamentary inquiry?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. ISTOOK. Mr. Chairman, the inquiry is when the amounts are dollar for dollar the same as within the bill, upon reliance upon what documents can the Chair maintain that it is anything else than dollar for dollar the same amounts. If the Chair is referring to some extraneous document, I think we would like to be aware of that.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma has the burden of proof to show that his amendment and budget authority and outlays is neutral.

Mr. ISTOOK. Mr. Chairman, I offer the fact that on the face of the amendment, it is dollar for dollar the same. If there is anything that says it is not the same, then this body is entitled to know, that we might proceed in order and make sure that valid issues can be undertaken.

The CHAIRMAN. Even if the gentleman's argument is correct, the outlays and budget authority must be neutral. The committee is arguing that, in fact, they are not. The Chair sustains the position of the committee.

Mr. ISTOOK. Mr. Chairman, nobody has given what they purport to be a differing amount of budget authority or outlay.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has the burden of proof. If he has a CBO score, the Chair would be happy to receive it.

Mr. ISTOOK. Mr. Chairman, as a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ISTOOK. Mr. Chairman, if the Chair is referring to any document or source that purports that the BA is any different than the dollar for dollar that is in here, my parliamentary inquiry is upon what does the Chair rely?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is relying on assertions of the Committee on Appropriations. The burden of proof lies in the hands of the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. ISTOOK. Mr. Chairman, when the Chair says relying upon assertions, the only assertion that has been presented on the floor is the raising of the point of order contesting whether that is the case as opposed to a factual assertion that is the case. If the Chair is relying upon a factual assertion made by the committee or anyone else, that is what I seek to learn.

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman wishes to challenge the assertions of the committee, he must have evidence from the CBO.

Mr. ISTOOK. Mr. Chairman, the committee has not made an assertion. The committee has posed a question to the Chair. The Chair has said it has received an assertion but has not told us the source. It has not said that assertion came on the floor in a document, through something extraneous, through this regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. The assertion of the subcommittee is from the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. REGULA), the subcommittee chairman.

Mr. ISTOOK. Mr. Chairman, parliamentary inquiry.

Does that mean that any time that the presenter of a bill on the floor raises a point of order asking the Chair whether something is in order between budget authority and outlay, that the Chair will automatically assume that the point of order is well taken? That seems to be the position that has been asserted.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would restate that the gentleman has the burden of proof. The gentleman from Oklahoma (Mr. ISTOOK) has the burden of proof.

Mr. ISTOOK. Mr. Chairman, so the burden of proof is not on the person raising the point of order? Is not that a shift of the burden of proof?

The CHAIRMAN. In this particular case it is on the offerer of the amendment.

Mr. ISTOOK. Mr. Chairman, parliamentary inquiry. Does the burden rest upon the person raising a point of order?

The CHAIRMAN. The offerer of any amendment always has the burden of proof to show that; the burden of proof in showing that their amendment would be in order.

Mr. ISTOOK. Mr. Chairman, does that mean that any person contesting any dollar amendment can always raise a point of order that it is not the same within budget authority and that point of order will automatically be sustained absent some outside authority?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would state that if it is a factual contention the offerer of the amendment must, in fact, provide the burden of proof.

Mr. ISTOOK. Mr. Chairman, I have contended that these are the same amounts, and you are saying that the factual assertion of a Member has no standing because of an arbitrary action.

The CHAIRMAN. It is long-standing precedent of the House shown on page 802 of the manual that the offerer of the amendment has the burden of proof under clause 2 of rule XXI.

Mr. ISTOOK. So, therefore, there is no burden of proof resting upon the person who raises a point of order under the Chair's ruling?

The CHAIRMAN. When there is a factual contention the burden of proof is on the offerer of the amendment.

Mr. ISTOOK. I thank the Chairman. We will reoffer the amendment as many times as are necessary to make sure that it is in order.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there further amendments to title I?

The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. SANDERS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I had an amendment that I am going to withdraw because I appreciate the work done by the chairman and ranking member on this issue. But I think when we talk about health care, it is important to raise the point about an aspect of health care that is not getting the attention that it needs, and that I would hope that in conference committee the chairman and the ranking member could help us address it. Mr. Chairman, that deals with the crisis in dental care in the United States of America.

I am more than aware of the overall crisis in health care. I strongly support a national health care program that would guarantee health care to every man, woman, and child. I think that we need to make fundamental changes in our health care system. But having said that, it is imperative to talk about something that is very rarely talked about. And that is all over the United States of America, we have children, we have adults, we have senior citizens, who simply cannot gain access to a dental office and get their teeth adequately dealt with.

I held a hearing in Montpelier, Vermont several months ago; and I was stunned to learn in my own city of Burlington we have low-income children who have teeth rotting in their mouths who cannot gain access to a dental office.

There are many reasons for the dental crisis. Number one, we do not have enough dentists in this country; and many of our dentists are getting old and are retiring. And we are not bringing enough younger people into the dental profession. Second of all, the kind of reimbursement rates we have for dental care on the Medicaid are inadequate. Thirdly, the dental clinics all over this country are not giving adequate support to dentistry.

So, Mr. Chairman, if I may ask the chairman of the committee, my friend, the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. REGULA), if he could give me some assurance that in conference committee we can pay more attention than we have to the dental crisis which exists among low-income people in this country.

Mr. REGULA. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SANDERS. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. REGULA. Mr. Chairman, I think the bill has been pretty sensitive to research; but I believe what the gentleman is addressing is the providing of dental care, and that really would, I think, be a Ways and Means jurisdiction more so than our committee.

Mr. SANDERS. Reclaiming my time, Mr. Chairman, I would respectfully suggest to my friend that there are provisions in this bill which provide grants through the Rural Outreach Grants Program, which include dental programs, although primarily it is not dental. But I would hope that at conference committee time an effort could be made to expand funding or add funding to that in order to make sure that low-income kids in this country do not continue to have teeth rotting in their mouths.

Mr. REGULA. If the gentleman will continue to yield, I understand the problem. I dealt with the Bureau of Indian Affairs for many years, and they have probably as much in the way of dental problems as any group in our society. So I am sympathetic to it. However, it is a matter of where we get the resources to do that.

Mr. OBEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SANDERS. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. OBEY. Mr. Chairman, I would simply respond by relating this story. I announced the opening of a dental clinic in a four-county area in my district last year. When I was at that clinic, one woman told me that she had a son who was very, very sick. Her husband was also very, very ill and could not work, so she was on Medicaid. She desperately needed a dentist to take the braces off that child's teeth. She could not find one, even though she had called over 30 dentists. As a result, she held the kid down, while the father took the braces off with a pair of pliers.

In my view, that should not happen to any American. I am for anything anywhere that can increase dental care providers and services, and I will do anything that is possibly within our reach to try to deal with the problem. Unfortunately, as the gentleman says, most of what needs to be done is within the Medicaid area, over which this committee does not have jurisdiction.

Mr. SANDERS. Reclaiming my time once again, Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman from Wisconsin for his comments.

I will withdraw my amendment, Mr. Chairman, with the hope that all of us can focus on a major crisis that exists all over this country, perhaps most clearly in rural America, and with the hope that we can work together to begin effectively addressing this.

Mr. QUINN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the last word, and I thank the gentleman from Ohio for allowing me the opportunity to talk just for a few minutes about the Low-Income Home Energy Assistance Program, otherwise known as LIHEAP. I want to thank the subcommittee for the $1.7 billion in regular and the $300 million in emergency appropriations for LIHEAP in this bill. This is a generous increase over the President's request, and I believe it will make a significant difference in the lives of many poor people this winter.

The amendment I would have submitted, but which I will withdraw and have withdrawn, would have made advance appropriations for $2 million for LIHEAP for fiscal year 2003, guaranteeing the State LIHEAP administrators a firm figure upon which to plan their advances for next winter. Although there is language in the 2002 budget resolution allowing advance appropriations for LIHEAP, the Committee on Rules this past week did not grant a waiver and the amendment was ruled out of order.

We all know that these LIHEAP funds are most efficiently used when the State LIHEAP administrators know how much money they are going to get before they open up their programs. Winter heating programs need to be prepared for in August before the appropriations have been made. We seem to fight this battle and have the discussion each year. Winter heating seasons, particularly when the appropriations process has been delayed beyond the beginning of the fiscal year, need to begin before the funding generally arrives.

Mr. Chairman, advance appropriations would allow the LIHEAP administrators to know prior to the beginning of the fiscal year what resources they will have to work with. They could therefore plan for a certain amount of money, determine how many applicants they will be able to help, stretch each dollar to its maximum extent, and provide a measure of reassurance for households who very well may have to choose between heat and food.

This is of particular concern this year. I would like to remind my colleagues that the LIHEAP cases were up 30 percent last winter, but most States were only able to help about 15 percent of their applicants. In the emergency appropriations bill passed this summer, there was $300 million in LIHEAP funding. This money should have been distributed immediately to help the families with children and the elderly who were unable to pay for their heating bills from last winter.

The Department of Health and Human Services has signed off on the money; but because OMB has not released the funding, these people are in even worse situation than they were this past summer. Still behind in their bills, still cut off, some of them, from heat, gas, and electricity, and winter is at our doorstep.

I would like to urge the House to press for the release of these emergency LIHEAP funds by OMB immediately and also to allow advance appropriations for this vital and important program next year.

I want to thank the chairman, on behalf of the Northeast-Midwest coalition here in the House, made up of States in our region, Members of both parties, for his attention to this matter.

Mr. WICKER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. QUINN. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. WICKER. Mr. Chairman, I would simply say there has been no greater advocate for the LIHEAP program than my friend from New York, and I appreciate his efforts and I appreciate his remarks. His compliments were directed toward the chairman of the subcommittee; but I think also it is fair to say that the ranking member and the chairman have worked closely together, and I appreciate his acknowledgment of the generosity of the bill as it is with regard to LIHEAP. I would reiterate that the bill includes the highest funding level ever provided for the LIHEAP program at $2 billion.

So I thank the gentleman for his efforts. I am sure he will persevere in the particular idea which he had for us today.

Mr. QUINN. Reclaiming my time, Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman very much. We appreciate the cooperation we received from both sides of the aisle in the subcommittee and the full committee.

Mr. SCHIFF. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the last word to engage in a colloquy with my colleague from California.

Mr. Chairman, I had intended to offer an amendment designed to correct an inequity in current law which penalizes students who attend low-cost colleges. Since 1973, the Federal Pell Grant program has helped nearly 80 million low- and middle-income students pay for college. At just one community college in my district, Glendale Community College, about 3,500 students receive Pell grants each year. And while their tuition may be less than $1,000 for an academic year, the full cost of attendance for a 9-month academic year is estimated to be over $5,600; and that is for a student living at home with parents or relatives.

Unfortunately, these students and others at community colleges in California do not receive the full Pell grant award. At these colleges, books can often surpass the cost of tuition; and add to that other costs and fees of higher education, and there is an enormous burden on the lowest-income students. The tuition sensitivity provision unfairly penalizes these students in States like California, which have kept tuition low by strong State support for higher education. These are the poorest students at the least expensive schools.

My colleagues might be wondering why they have not heard of the tuition-sensitivity provision. The answer is that right now this rule only affects California students. However, as the Pell grant increases, the tuition-sensitivity rule will limit financial aid to students in other States, like Texas, North Carolina, Arkansas, Arizona, New Mexico, and Oklahoma, just to name a few.

By repealing the tuition-sensitivity trigger, we assure fairness and equity; we incentivize States to support higher education, not back away from funding. I want to thank my colleague, the gentleman from California (Mr. MCKEON), for all his work on this issue and his willingness to work together in the reauthorization process. He has done an extraordinary job for the students of California.

Mr. MCKEON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SCHIFF. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. MCKEON. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman, my good friend and neighbor from California, for yielding; and I appreciate the opportunity to discuss this very important issue.

I want to assure my friend that I am very much aware of the Pell grant tuition-sensitivity provisions in current law that limit the ability of California's lowest-income community college students from receiving the maximum Pell grant award. As the chairman of the Subcommittee on 21st Century Competitiveness, which has jurisdiction over higher-education issues, I have long been a strong supporter of addressing the tuition-sensitivity provision.

The tuition-sensitivity provision in the Higher Education Act precludes students, as the gentleman said, from the lowest-cost institutions, like those attending California community colleges, from receiving their full Pell grant eligibility. This affects almost 180,000 students from the California community college system alone.

I want to assure my friend that he has my full commitment to work diligently to find a solution to this problem. I am eager to work with him and others as we move into the reauthorization of the Higher Education Act in the next Congress to ensure that all students have access to quality education.

Mr. SCHIFF. Reclaiming my time, Mr. Chairman, I thank my colleague for all his effort on behalf of the students in California and around this country. I very much look forward to working with him. I also want to thank the chairman and the ranking member for their consideration today.

Mr. REGULA (during the reading). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the remainder of title II be considered as read, printed in the RECORD, and open to amendment at any point.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. WELDON OF FLORIDA

Mr. WELDON of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WELDON of Florida:

At the end of title II, insert after the last section (preceding the short title) the following section:

SEC. 2___. Of the amounts made available in this title under the heading ''HEALTH RESOURCES AND SERVICES ADMINISTRATION—HEALTH RESOURCES AND SERVICES'', $60,000,000 of the amount made available for carrying out part A of title XXVI of the Public Health Service Act is transferred and made available under such heading for the State AIDS Drug Assistance Programs authorized by section 2616 of such Act, in addition to other amounts available under such heading for such State AIDS Drug Assistance Programs.

Mr. OBEY. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. OBEY) reserves a point of order on the amendment.

The gentleman from Florida (Mr. WELDON) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. WELDON of Florida. Mr. Chairman, my amendment shifts $60 million from title II of the Ryan White CARE Act to title I of the Ryan White CARE Act.

What my amendment does is to recognize that fully funding of the AIDS Drug Assistance Program, or ADAP, should receive highest priority. This is a question of life-sustaining drugs versus programs and other services for those with AIDS. One thing we do know, programs and services are of little use if AIDS patients do not have access to life-sustaining drugs.

We have all been visited by those who run the ADAP programs in our States expressing concerns about the shortfall in funding for this critical program. We know that last year hundreds of AIDS patients were unable to access basic lifesaving medication not in Africa, but here in the United States.

As I have shared on this floor before, as a practicing physician prior to coming to Congress in 1995, I provided medical care to hundreds of HIV/AIDS patients. I was one of only two physicians in my community that took care of more than 400,000 people who provided care for AIDS patients, and I know how critical access to life-sustaining drugs can be.

After Medicaid, ADAP is the single most important Federal program for Americans living with AIDS and HIV. ADAP is the component of title II of the Ryan White CARE Act that provides AIDS medications to Americans living with HIV that have no other source of medical coverage.

According to the National Organizations Responding to AIDS, or NORA, the Federal-State partnership in title II ADAP has significantly contributed to the decline in AIDS deaths since 1995. NORA, which is comprised of 175 organizations concerned about AIDS, recommends that a $124 million increase over last year's ADAP appropriation is necessary to ensure that every American infected with AIDS is provided access to life-saving AIDS medications.

The House appropriations bill funds about half of this shortfall.

The ADAP working group wrote: ''We will absolutely be in very serious difficulties if this appropriation isn't raised.''

□ 1515

Mr. Chairman, a lack of the needed $60 million above what is currently in the House bill means more than 5,000 Americans with HIV, on top of those already on the waiting list for ADAP, will not have access to the important life-sustaining combination drug therapies.

Allowing Americans with HIV to stand on waiting lists for access to HIV medications is simply not acceptable. Every State, territory, congressional district, and individual living with HIV with no other access to AIDS medication is dependent on ADAP. Women and those in minority communities living with HIV–AIDS disproportionately rely on ADAP for their AIDS medications.

My amendment closes the $60 million shortfall in ADAP. Unlike ADAP, title I is limited and only serves 51 cities across the country. One of those cities, San Francisco, receives twice the amount per AIDS case as every other city in the country. While title I services provide support for some AIDS patients, not all of these services have the same life-saving impact as ADAP.

Also, while the majority of the programs funded through title I Large Cities Program are worthwhile, many of them are not as critical as the ADAP program. Also of concern is the fact that the Senate recently asked the HHS Inspector General to review some of the very questionable programs that these funds are being used to support. I have received some of these reports on these questionable programs, and I think any reasonable person would conclude that ADAP should receive higher priority.

It is clear to me that with the shift in funding, there is plenty of room to accommodate important title I programs likes Primary Care, while shifting $60 million to purchasing life-sustaining drugs. I urge my colleagues to vote in support of my amendment. The failure to shift this funding will leave 6,400 individuals, primarily women and minorities, waiting in line for life-sustaining AIDS drugs.

Mr. Chairman, I encourage my colleagues to vote ''yes'' on this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. OBEY) insist on his point of order?

Mr. OBEY. Mr. Chairman, my understanding is that this amendment is really in the form of a limitation; and, therefore, it should be coming at the end of the bill. I think I would be within my rights if I made a point of order at this point. But out of courtesy to the gentleman and in order to save time, I will withdraw the reservation.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is withdrawn.

Mr. OBEY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the last word.

Mr. Chairman, let me simply say that I oppose the amendment of the gentleman from Florida for one very simple reason: it is very easy for any individual Member to second guess what this Committee has done and come to the floor and say we should have put $10 million here rather than having put $10 million there. I have seen many a Member come to the floor; and no matter how high we have had an individual account, some have said to me, frankly, no matter what the committee puts in, I will offer an amendment to add $10 million or $20 million because that way they get their day in court.

Mr. Chairman, I suggest in this instance we should not do that. The gentleman is trying to take $60 million out of an account that has received a $15 million increase. He is trying to put the money into an account that has received a $60 million increase. This account has already been increased four times as much as the account that the gentleman is trying to take money out of.

Secondly, the treatment grants that the gentleman seeks to cut in fact under this amendment are being cut below last year's level. I do not believe that we ought to do that. I would urge Members of the House to respect the many hours of hearings that we have held on these subjects. These are all judgment calls. I respect the gentleman's right to offer the amendment, but I would urge that Members stick with the committee.

There will be amendments today that I am very much in favor of personally, but which I will oppose because we have an understanding that we are going to try to resist all amendments from either side of the aisle in order to keep the delicately balanced bipartisan bill, which it is at this point; and I would not want to begin to unravel that. Besides, substantively I believe the gentleman is in error in seeking to make the reduction that he is in this account. I would urge defeat of the amendment.

Mr. WELDON of Florida. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. OBEY. I yield to the gentleman from Florida.

Mr. WELDON of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for not insisting on his point of order.

Mr. Chairman, I do not plan on asking for a recorded vote on this amendment because I understand there is a very delicate balance here; and I have another amendment that I will probably ask for a recorded vote on. But I just raise the point to say that the accounts where I am trying to move money out of, there is one particular account where I think there has been a fair amount of money spent very unwisely; and the account that I am trying to put this money into I think is a very good use of the limited resources that we have. That is why I seek to offer the amendment.

Mr. OBEY. Mr. Chairman, reclaiming my time, I appreciate that. That again illustrates what Will Rogers said when he said when two people agree on everything, one of them is unnecessary.

The gentleman's opinion may very well be the sound one; ours may very well be the sound one. But in this instance, this bill is the unanimous product of the Committee; and I think we have made the best judgment about where the money ought to go under the circumstances, and I would urge that we not cut this program. This treatment program would be cut below last year's level; and given the problem that we have with this issue, I do not think that we ought to be doing that.

Mr. REGULA. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the last word.

Mr. Chairman, the gentleman is not going to ask for a recorded vote, but just to reiterate what he recognizes, too, this is a delicately balanced bill. We tried to balance all of the priorities. This is a good example of it.

The Ryan White program serves a lot of people. This amendment would cut out services to about 11,000 people; and it does focus on the big cities. I think what the gentleman is expressing concern for is right. It is just that we do not have enough money to do everything that we would like to do. I congratulate the gentleman for his concern and for the other areas that he sees as underserved by ADAP.

Ms. PELOSI. Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong opposition to this amendment to take money from primary care services delivered by Title I and move it to the drug purchasing ADAP program. Delivering drugs to the people who need them requires the strong infrastructure established under Title I. Without that infrastructure, we will have a bigger pool of money with which to buy drugs, but fewer people able to take advantage of these life-saving medications. The amendment will merely provide a windfall to the pharmaceutical companies that manufacture these drugs while hurting the people who need them.

The AIDS cocktail involves a complex daily drug regimen. To be effective, drugs must be taken in a consistent manner following every instruction exactly. Failure to do so can result in the medication becoming ineffective in a person. In addition, these medications can have severe side effects, including liver problems, dramatically increased cholesterol, and diabetes. People taking these medications need access to the primary care and support services provided by Title I to ensure proper compliance and effective treatment for any side effects.

Title I benefits the majority of people living with HIV in this country. More than 75% of Americans with HIV reside in the 51 areas that receive Title I funding. Without this funding, the public health systems in these areas will face a major challenge that they are unable to meet. The Ryan White CARE Act was created to prevent such a situation. Also, the CARE Act was designed to provide comprehensive medical services to people with HIV. This amendment will undermine that goal by focusing on only one aspect of treatment.

AIDS medications have been remarkably successful and allowed people to live much longer with a better quality of life. However, this success also means that more people than ever are living with HIV and AIDS in the US and require the services delivered through Title I of the CARE Act. Many who are HIV-positive also have other pressing health concerns, such as Hepatitis C, mental disorders and substance abuse problems. To deal with these challenges, people rely on the overall health infrastructure provided by Title I and cannot be helped by merely receiving AIDS drugs.

I urge my colleagues to oppose the Weldon Amendment.

Mr. NADLER. Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong opposition to the Weldon amendment. This misguided amendment is the very essence of robbing Peter to pay Paul. While I support the worthy goal of increasing the appropriation for the Aids Drug Assistance Program, I cannot do so at the expense of Title I of the Ryan White program.

No one can argue with Dr. WELDON that ADAP funding must be significantly increased. ADAP is a vital program that is severely underfunded. But his answer is truly perverse. He attacks the very infrastructure needed to deliver these important services. If he slashes funding for Title I, he will only make it harder for people living with HIV and AIDS to receive the medication they need under ADAP.

Let's look at what Title I does. Title I directs funding to the metropolitan areas that are home to about 74 percent of all individuals diagnosed with AIDS in the United States. The areas eligible for Title I funding are magnets for individuals from all of the surrounding areas who are in need of the critical primary care and supportive services provided under this program. Whether it's primary health care, dental care, substance abuse treatment, legal services, transitional housing, transportation, or nutritional care, Title I provides the bedrock safety net that people living with HIV and AIDS depend on. The bottom line is that people will die without these services.

If Dr. WELDON wants to increase funding for ADAP, as he should, the answer is not to attack Title I. The answer is to increase the total appropriation. Despite a request for flat funding from the President, I am pleased that the committee provided for a modest increase in Ryan White funding. However, the need is far greater still. Title I alone would require a 30 million dollar increase just to keep pace with inflation. With the modest 17 million dollar increase provided, services will already have to be scaled back and needs will go unmet. To further cut 60 million dollars from this program would be simply devastating.

Indeed, ADAP is significantly underfunded, as well. But the success of the ADAP program, which has kept thousands of people alive, makes the need for Title I money all the greater. As people live longer, they rely on the services provided by Title I. This amendment might temporarily plug one hole, but it would create a much larger one elsewhere. Vote against this dangerous amendment.

Mr. JACKSON of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong opposition to the amendment of the gentleman from Florida.

The gentleman's amendment proposes to take $60 million in funding from Title I of the Ryan White CARE Act and transfer it to the AIDS Drug Assistance Program.

While both of these are critical components of the Ryan White CARE Act, we cannot support moving money from one critical program in the CARE Act to another critical program.

Our nation's response to the HIV/AIDS crisis must be comprehensive and integrated. While the ADAP program needs additional funds, these additional resources should not come from money approved for other bipartisan-supported CARE Act programs, such as Title I, which provides relief to metropolitan areas—like New York and Chicago—that are disproportionately affected by HIV/AIDS. Title I funds support comprehensive HIV health care and treatment and essential services for low-income uninsured and underserved persons living with HIV/AIDS.

Title I provides funds to the most impacted cities for the delivery of critical medical and support service and medications. We cannot take medical services away to provide the increase for ADAP. Funding for the needed increase for ADAP must come from another source, not a medical and support service delivery program.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Florida (Mr. WELDON).

The amendment was rejected.

Ms. EDDIE BERNICE JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I rise today to call attention to the need for an additional $5 million for fiscal year 2002 to the Department of Labor's International Bureau of Labor Affairs, also known as ILAB, for programs that promote workplace-based HIV–AIDS education and prevention programs and the well-being of children orphaned by HIV–AIDS in developing countries.

More than 36 million people are living with HIV–AIDS worldwide, and more than 10 million children in sub-Saharan Africa alone have lost their parents to this disease. The number of AIDS orphans could climb to more than 40 million by 2010. Mr. Chairman, 40 million orphans in Africa is equal to the number of children east of the Mississippi River in this country. This amount of money equates to less than 13 cents per year per orphan to improve their lives and help make them productive members of their society.

The global HIV–AIDS pandemic is an extremely serious issue that demands our continued attention, and one way to address the crisis is to promote workplace-based education and prevention programs. The ILAB has undertaken an innovative program to address HIV–AIDS through the workplace as part of its efforts to promote safer, healthier, and more productive work environments.

ILAB has already launched a workplace pilot project in the Republic of Malawi in southern Africa. Increased funding will enable ILAB to expand workplace HIV–AIDS education and prevention programs into other developing countries. It will also enable a joint initiative with the Department of Labor's International Child Labor Program to develop programs aimed at children affected by HIV–AIDS.

Mr. Chairman, this is a relatively simple transfer of dollars. The funding for this program comes from the account that contains Job Corps, which receives $75 million more than requested, more than double for fiscal year 2002. This is more than Job Corps can reasonably manage within 1 year, and so we are asking that $15 million be considered. It is only a general funds transfer if it is considered in conference, but it is very important that the intended destination is discussed during floor statements today.

The Congressional Budget Office indicated that a $15 million decrease and $5 million increase was the only way this would work with management and Department outlays. We certainly know that there is a serious and strategic need. This international HIV–AIDS workplace education program has developed a strategic plan for workplace-based HIV–AIDS education focusing on the following three components: prevention education stressing behavioral responsibility, gender issues, and concepts relating to care and support; workplace policy development addressing issues of stigma and discrimination; and capacity building activities for government, employers, and labor to strengthen the response to this crisis.

In the year 2000, IHWEP launched a workplace education pilot project in the Republic of Malawi, implemented by the nongovernmental organization Project HOPE, which is based in Millwood, Virginia.

A task force cochaired by Senators FRIST and KERRY have deemed the issue of AIDS orphans a high priority. These young people are heads of households now that they have no parents; and it provides them with care, vocational training, as well as microfinance opportunities. It aims to enable child-headed households to develop an income-generating skill and reduce the likelihood that they will resort to working in areas where their health and safety may be compromised.

Mr. Chairman, I would sincerely ask that the conference committee consider this request. It is of grave need.

Mr. CARSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the last word.

Mr. Chairman, today I rise to thank the gentleman from Florida (Chairman YOUNG) and the ranking member, the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. OBEY), for their leadership on this complex and difficult appropriations bill; and particularly to express my appreciation for the increase of $10 million to the State Survey and Certification program funded under the Centers for Medicare and Medicaid Services.

The State Survey and Certification program provides States with money to conduct inspections of facilities serving Medicare and Medicaid beneficiaries, and fund the Nursing Home Oversight Improvement Program. The need for adequate funding of these two programs has become painfully clear when we are reminded that 5,283 nursing homes, one out of three nursing homes, were cited for an abuse violation in the last 2 years.

At a time when the Department of Health and Human Services has estimated almost half of all 65-year-olds will use a nursing home at some point during their lives, this is unacceptable and immoral. Today there are 1.5 million people who live in nursing homes, and this figure is expected to rise to 6.6 million by the year 2050. Our loved ones should not be made to fear inadequate care and abuse when entering a nursing home for the first time.

Additional funding for this program is sorely needed. This additional funding that we will agree to today will be distributed to the States to cover survey and complaint visit workloads.

When the daughter of someone living in a nursing home notices that her mother is not receiving adequate care, she should immediately call her State Department of Health to report a complaint or evidence of abuse. However, in my home State of Oklahoma, as in many other States, these complaints are not investigated in a timely manner.

The State Department of Health simply does not have adequate funding to hire and train enough inspectors to investigate all of the complaints submitted. And most family members are left without any other possible recourse, unable to afford home health care or staying home from work to care for their loved one themselves. How, then, can we justify pouring Federal money into these facilities as so much of our taxpayer dollars do flow into nursing homes when the government cannot ensure the safety of the residents?

To ensure their safety, we must continue to increase funding to CMS's State survey and certification program. An increase of only $10 million for fiscal year 2002 is a good start but is certain not to address the many needs that will expand in years to come.

Again, I thank the chairman and ranking member for their work on this issue and for increasing funding to this important program by $10 million. Nevertheless, I ask that you continue to work for increased funding of this vitally important program in the conference committee and in future fiscal years. Knowing the commitment of both of these gentlemen to this important issue, I know that they will work with me to see that this is done.

Mr. OBEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARSON of Oklahoma. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. OBEY. Mr. Chairman, I simply want to thank the gentleman for his interest in this program. I know he has been most interested in seeing that we appropriate as much money as possible for the inspection of nursing homes and I appreciate his leadership on this issue.

Mrs. ROUKEMA. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the last word and engage Chairman REGULA in a colloquy.

Mr. Chairman, in H.R. 3061, the elementary school counseling program is funded in this bill at $30 million, which is last year's appropriations level. The counseling program is the only Federal program designed to increase student access to qualified school-based mental health professionals. It is a vital program and particularly relevant and timely in the wake of the World Trade Center tragedies and the increasing violence levels in our schools.

Mr. Chairman, experts tell us that the psychiatric consequences of traumas of this kind, social traumas of this kind, may not show up for weeks or months in the form of post-traumatic stress disorder or other serious mental and emotional problems. I am particularly concerned about the effects this will have on our children. As the gentleman may well remember, the National Institute for Mental Health, following the Oklahoma City bombing, did a great in-depth study and it demonstrated that it took months, if not years, for the development of mental health problems in children not directly affected by the traumatic event.

Mr. Chairman, I am concerned that our schools are not adequately equipped to address the mental health needs of our students. Even before September 11, our Nation was experiencing an urgent need for school-based mental health services, and this is certainly evidenced by problems such as bullying, aggressive behavior, substance abuse and violence in the schools. We know that. We have all been familiar with it.

I would like to particularly point out to the chairman and to our colleagues here that back in January of this year, Dr. David Satcher, the Surgeon General, released a report on youth violence which identified mental health services as a necessary component of effective programs to prevent youth violence.

Mr. Chairman, children spend a large percentage of their time in school. Teachers and other professionals have the chance to identify potential problems and get children the help they need. Mental health programs in a school environment make good sense. With a small increase in funding for school-based mental health services, we will see dramatic, far-reaching effects.

To conclude, I would like to state to the chairman, clearly there are many objective reasons to assert the need for increased funding. Indeed, other programs in this bill have increased funding, including a new mentoring program which is funded at the same level as the counseling program. I would simply like to ask the chairman if he could work in conference to increase funding for this program to ensure that the mental health needs of our Nation's children are appropriately addressed. Again, let me say, this is a cost-effective investment. Providing mental health services now will avert far more significant problems and far more costly problems in the future.

Mr. REGULA. Mr. Chairman, will the gentlewoman yield?

Mrs. ROUKEMA. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. REGULA. I thank the gentlewoman for her comments and assure her that I will work in conference to increase funding for the elementary school counseling program.

Mrs. ROUKEMA. I thank the chairman. I appreciate his attention and this colloquy.

Mr. KENNEDY of Rhode Island. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to first associate myself with the remarks of the gentlewoman from New Jersey whose leadership in the area of mental health parity has been well known and whose work in this area is something I applaud greatly.

It is also a great pleasure for me, Mr. Chairman, to rise in strong support of this bipartisan bill. Before I get into the substance of this legislation, I would like to commend both our chairman, Chairman REGULA, as well as our ranking member, our Democratic leader on this committee, our ace-in-the-hole, DAVID OBEY, for the fantastic work that he has done to make this a very open and inclusive process.

Also, Mr. Chairman, as a new member of the committee, I would like to acknowledge the work of the staff who have managed to put a very difficult piece of legislation into proper order. I especially want to thank Cheryl Smith and David Reich and Christina Hamilton all for their good work as well as to acknowledge my own staff member, Matt Braunstein, for the great work he has done in offering his enthusiasm and dedication to this effort.

On the issues, Mr. Chairman, I would like to be noted for speaking up as the gentlewoman from New Jersey has just done in the area of mental health. Right now, according to the World Health Organization, mental illnesses are the second most disabling family of diseases in industrialized nations, trailing only cardiovascular diseases. According to the Surgeon General, more than 54 million Americans, about 20 percent, have a mental disorder in any given year, although fewer than 8 million even seek treatment. This is obviously because of insurance barriers as well as the overwhelming stigma that continues to exist when it comes to diseases of the brain, which are somehow not equated to diseases of the rest of the body for some strange reason.

Mr. Chairman, it is my opinion that the mental health and emotional stability of our country represents the next big public health challenge that we have as a Nation, especially in the wake of the September 11 attack. It is for these reasons that I have been so honored to work with our colleagues on this bill to see that we had a $20 million increase in the mental health block grant. This is especially important, because it is consistent with President Bush's New Freedom Initiative as well as the Supreme Court's Olmsted decision which talks about community-based services for those in need.

There is also, Mr. Chairman, an initiative which I cosponsored with Ranking Member OBEY to have a $5 million set-aside for the seniors mental health initiative. Senior citizens are growing in this country as a percentage of our overall population. Yet our country is not prepared to meet the unique challenges of our senior citizen population as it grows. As it was said, 20 percent of our population experiences mental disorders and it is not surprising that much of this occurs within our senior population, given the enormous depression that they face with loss of loved ones and with loss of their own health. They need the assistance and support to cope with these challenges, and I hope this initiative will begin the way towards this problem.

Mr. Chairman, in addition to these initiatives in the area of mental health, I want to acknowledge a few other areas in the bill that I strongly support. Among them is the area of family literacy. Mr. Chairman, we know with the 21st Century Learning Centers that we are able to address the needs of as many as 8 million ''latchkey'' children who are left alone unsupervised. The 21st Century Learning Centers give them a place to go as well as a place to grow, and that is why I am so pleased that we are able to increase the funding for this program, thereby allowing school districts like mine in Rhode Island, like Pawtucket, Providence and Central Falls, to all be able to continue their after-school programming.

In addition to family literacy, the Even Start program, which is also about family literacy, is being well funded in this program. Even Start is about making sure that parents are able to read and write, because if the parent is able to read and write, their children have a much better crack at being able to read and write themselves. That is why adult literacy should really be viewed as family literacy, because when you help the parents, you certainly help the children as well. That is why I am so supportive of this committee's work to increase this funding by $10 million.

Finally, Mr. Chairman, I think that we did a great job increasing funds for IDEA, the Individuals with Disabilities Education Act, particularly part C. This is the toddler's program. This is the area where if we invest early, we gain a great deal of return for our investment down the road.

For all these reasons, I support this important bill and ask that its adoption be supported unanimously by this House of Representatives.

Ms. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I had an amendment at the desk which I intend to withdraw out of appreciation for the way in which Chairman REGULA and Ranking Member OBEY have preserved the Porter initiative to combat obesity and overweight in the American population.

Originally Mr. Porter, our former colleague, for the first time placed $125 million in the 2001 budget for a program directed against obesity and overweight in children. My amendment would have sought full funding. I am very appreciative that the chairman and ranking member have kept this initiative from being defunded by placing $85 million in the 2002 budget.

This is a major legacy of our former colleague, John Porter. It is something he worked on for some years and in his last year I worked with him. This initiative marks the first time the Congress has given more than token funding to the most serious, widespread health problem in the United States today, and that is overweight and obesity. Fifty percent of Americans are either overweight or are obese.

At the time that this matter was on the floor last year, Chairman Porter engaged in a colloquy with me on this provision. In that colloquy, to quote briefly from it, I asked the chairman if he would agree that some of the $125 million in this Labor-HHS bill be spent on the activities specified in the LIFE bill legislation. That was my legislation, Mr. Chairman, Lifetime Improvement in Food and Exercise.

Chairman Porter answered: I support the LIFE bill and believe that some of the $125 million in additional funding I have included in this appropriation bill for the CDC should be directed toward the initiatives of the LIFE legislation.

The major difference in the LIFE legislation is that it applies beyond children to Americans of all ages. Americans of all ages, of all races, of all backgrounds and educational groups are experiencing this epidemic in obesity and overweight.

I am pleased that the funding for the education part of this initiative has already begun. The LIFE bill would also promote training by health professionals to recognize the signs of obesity and then to recommend prevention activities and actual strategies so that people engage in exercise and other activities designed to mitigate this extraordinary problem we have in our country.

The importance of this initiative springs from the fact that it is the major contributor to some of the most serious preventable diseases in the American population, everything from high cholesterol and Type II diabetes to arthritis and cancer. The fact that there has been a 100 percent increase in obesity among children in the last 15 years ought to itself make us all pause. It means that these children are on their way to death early unless somehow we can put our country on a different path, a path where people get out and walk, a path where there is less in fatty foods and caloric foods and more in the kind of ordinary, everyday exercise that can mean the difference now between life and death.

I am very appreciative but not very surprised that the Chair and the ranking member of this committee would understand that to get this kind of funding finally and then to have it evaporate in a single year would have done a disservice to this very serious health problem. I am very appreciative for what they have done. I would like to work with them in future years so that we can, in fact, get this matter up to full funding. That way we will see it save much in Medicare and Medicaid, not to mention the health care bill of Americans in general.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there additional amendments to title II?

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. WELDON OF FLORIDA

Mr. WELDON of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WELDON of Florida:

At the end of title II, insert after the last section (preceding the short title) the following section:

SEC. 2____. Of the amounts made available in this title under the heading ''CENTERS FOR DISEASE CONTROL AND PREVENTION—DISEASE CONTROL, RESEARCH, AND TRAINING'', $40,000,000 of the amount made available for communicable disease activities (HIV/AIDS, tuberculosis, and sexually transmitted diseases) is transferred and made available under the heading ''HEALTH RESOURCES AND SERVICES ADMINISTRATION—HEALTH RESOURCES AND SERVICES'' for child-health activities under title V of the Social Security Act (relating to the Maternal and Child Health Services Block Grant), in addition to other amounts available under such Health Resources heading for such child-health activities.

Mr. OBEY. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order against the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Florida (Mr. WELDON) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. WELDON of Florida. Mr. Chairman, my amendment addresses the silent epidemic that is hitting our Nation's children at an alarming rate. Autism is the most prevalent developmental disorder in America. A couple of decades ago, autism struck a few children out of every 10,000. Today it hits as many as 1 in 250. Over 500,000 Americans are autistic.

My amendment increases funding for the Maternal and Child Health Block Grant program by $40 million. This will provide States with funding for early diagnosis and intervention for children with autism and other developmental disorders. Early diagnosis and intervention is critical in helping these children reach their greatest potential.

For point of reference, it is important to note that the number of Americans suffering from autism is more than half the total number of Americans living with HIV and AIDS. However, you would not know this from looking at the budgets of CDC and NIH. Last year, the CDC spent $12 per person for every person with autism. Conversely, CDC spent about $800 per person for every person with HIV–AIDS.

Children are diagnosed with autism through no fault of their own, and we spend almost nothing to figure out why they are autistic.

We have an opportunity to provide $40 million for autism early intervention. My amendment shifts $40 million from CDC's HIV prevention account to the Maternal and Child Health Block Grant. Even with the adoption of my amendment, CDC's HIV prevention budget receives an $80 million increase.

I am concerned about some of the activities that are being funded by the CDC. If the CDC can fund questionable activities, it says to me there is too much money in that account. I believe that shifting $40 million of the $120 million increase to assist lower income families would be a better use of these funds.

What type of questionable programs am I talking about? I ask Members to weigh these activities against helping lower income parents with their autistic children.

Some of the questionable programs receiving taxpayer assistance include recently in St. Louis, Missouri, the mayor had to get $50,000 worth of offensive billboards pulled down. Why? Because they were too offensive for the community. They were paid for with CDC's HIV prevention funds.

On August 21, there was a workshop where people could come and learn about sex techniques and share stories about their sexual experiences and turn-ons. This was funded through the CDC with funds from Stop AIDS Project, San Francisco.

On August 23, there was a GUYWATCH in San Francisco, a program for homosexuals under the age of 25 where they can come and ''meet other young guys.''

Also several television ad campaigns across the country funded with Federal tax dollars have been pulled because they offended most viewers. If people want to sponsor and attend such programs, that is their business. However, if they want to use taxpayer dollars for it, I think we need to look into it and weigh it against other priorities.

Most reasonable people would say we have other more important priorities. Prior to coming to Congress in 1995, I treated hundreds of AIDS patients. I was one of only two physicians in my community of more than 400,000 who took care of these AIDS patients. I have been at the bedside of dying AIDS patients. I have gotten up in the middle of the night to provide medical care for them. I have compassion for them and their needs.

I would not be offering this amendment if I did not feel the cause required it. I believe that a $80 million increase rather than a $120 million increase should be more than enough for this program. I encourage my colleagues to support the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Wisconsin insist on his point of order?

Mr. OBEY. Mr. Chairman, as was the case with the gentleman's previous amendment, I think it is drafted in such a way that it makes it clear it is a limitation, and therefore ought to be offered at the end of the bill. So I think the point of order would hold if I were to insist upon it.

Again, I would simply at this point reserve my reservation and I move to strike the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. OBEY. Mr. Chairman, let me simply say to the gentleman, he has talked to me about his concern about providing additional funding for autism. I very much agree with that; and, as a matter of fact, I agree with some of the comments he just made about some of the wasteful uses of some of the funds in the program that he is discussing cutting. About 4 years ago, I made a similar objection myself.

I would urge the gentleman to withdraw the amendment, with the assurances that both the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. REGULA) and I and the rest of the conferees will try in conference to gain additional financial support for programs directed at autism, and a number of others, for that matter.

I think the gentleman is correct in bringing it to our attention. I hesitate to support the proposal as the gentleman is offering it, because in addition to the limitations on the AIDS program that he is talking about, we would also be reducing funding that would go for dealing with diseases such as TB. That almost got out of the bottle a few years ago. I do not want to see that happen again.

I would just urge the gentleman to respect the agreement that the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. REGULA) and I have to oppose all amendments, no matter how meritorious we might find parts of them. We would both be happy to work with the gentleman in conference to try to accomplish what the gentleman is trying to accomplish.

Mr. WELDON of Florida. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. OBEY. I yield to the gentleman from Florida.

Mr. WELDON of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for his comments and his willingness to work with me on this issue. His points, I think, are very well taken.

I personally have been very grieved over the years that I have worked here to see the tremendous amount of money that we spend on HIV and the relatively minimal amount of money we spend on autism. Actually the number of people with HIV and AIDS is about twice the number of autism, but if you look at the people who are actually falling into the AIDS category, it is about the same for both diseases. What is particularly grievous is that many private insurance companies do not cover the care that these kids need.

Mr. REGULA. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. OBEY. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. REGULA. Mr. Chairman, I agree that this is a concern. I had a conversation with the sponsor of the amendment, and I understand the need for this funding. We have a tough time balancing off all the different problems that afflict us in terms of disease and research. I do want to talk to the NIH folks and see if we could get a little more urgency on the part of NIH in doing research. Of course, we will also, in the conference, see if we cannot get some additional funding for this program.

Mr. OBEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. WELDON of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment is withdrawn.

There was no objection.

Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the last word.

Mr. Chairman, my first order of business is to rise to support this legislation and to acknowledge the chairman of this committee, the gentleman from Florida (Mr. YOUNG); and the ranking member of the full committee, the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. OBEY); and the subcommittee chair, the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. REGULA); as well the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. OBEY), the ranking subcommittee member on this legislation.

Allow me, Mr. Chairman, to first acknowledge that this is a monumental piece of legislation, so I rise to emphasize the issues that are important not only to Texas, but to my home community.

The increase in the education funding is of crucial concern in the fact that I just attended this past week a high school that had 3,042 students in one school. We are in need of assisting the education of our children, to create for them an opportunity, and I applaud the increase of the education funding generally.

We as well face an increasing epidemic in HIV-AIDS, particularly African-American and Hispanic women, the rising numbers, and the increase in dollars in the Ryan White treatment dollars will help reach in underserved communities as well as serve those who have been exposed or who are subject to the AIDS epidemic.

We have had an energy explosion or a concern with our energy needs, and the funding for LIHEAP is a very important addition.

Might I also say that I rise in support of the substance abuse and mental health funding as well. The increase that this committee has provided, along with the increased dollars for Medicare grants to States, is very important to the State of Texas. Even as we speak, there is a dispute in Texas as to whether public hospitals can be held liable for serving the indigents, who happen to be immigrants who may not be documented.

We know that our responsibility is to care for the ill. We want to use Federal funds responsibly. Texas needs those dollars, and as well we use our local funds to serve those who come to our doors who need good health care. We know that there is no grounds to hold these public hospitals liable, and we hope to resolve that matter very quickly.

I rise as well to indicate my concern with the issues of September 11, as so many of us have done, but to put particular emphasis on the children.

Tomorrow, the Congressional Children's Caucus, that I chair and that the gentlewoman from Florida (Ms. ROS-LEHTINEN) co-chairs, will hold a briefing on a very important issue; and that is the impact of September 11 on the children of those who died, a guardian, single parent, two parents, that may have been lost.

I was intending to offer two amendments to indicate the importance of focusing on the needs of those children. Right now we do not even have an accounting of those children. We know that there are about 500 children of police and fire parents who were lost, 500 children being impacted. We know that in one city in New Jersey, 25 dads were alleged to have been lost.

I had intended to offer an amendment of $375 million to fund the promoting safe and stable families. The primary goal of promoting safe and stable families is to prevent the unnecessary separation of children from their families.

We know that those children who lost parents cannot be reunited with their parents, their birth parents, but Congress can assist these children in obtaining appropriate living arrangements by targeting critical adoption services.

My other amendment was to add $20 million in grants to the States for adoption incentive programs to be able to help move those adoptions along faster.

I had intended also to put into this legislation the language of H. Con. Res. 228, a bipartisan sense of Congress bill supported by Republicans and Democrats to move to the front of the line those children who suffered the loss of a parent, a guardian, or two parents in the September 11 tragedy.

I want to applaud the organizations today who appeared at the Lincoln Memorial, child survival organizations, focusing on the loss and impact 1 month after this terrible impact of the children.

Mr. Chairman, I would hope that this Congress, and certainly I know the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. OBEY) has been a great champion of children and mental health needs, would support the idea of moving these children up so that they could utilize the Federal benefits that they might be eligible for and that this Congress would be sensitive to the needs of the terrible loss of September 11 with children as our concern.

I am not going to offer these amendments, because I would like to work with the leaders of this particular bill and work with them through the conference that the dollars that have been allotted, that they will be certainly available for these children as they are made eligible.

Mr. REGULA. Mr. Chairman, will the gentlewoman yield?

Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. REGULA. Mr. Chairman, I think the gentlewoman is addressing what is a serious problem. This is just one of the many fall-outs of September 11. There will be more yet to come, and I think we need to be sensitive to it. Probably as time flows along, the problems that the gentlewoman is discussing will become even more evident. It is an authorizing problem, as the gentlewoman realizes, and I am sure that the gentlewoman's amendment will be before the authorizing committee for a hearing. But we are well aware of it. Any portion that we deal with here, we have tried to put adequate funding in.

Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman. I would simply like to close, Mr. Chairman, by saying that there will be an important briefing tomorrow where we will hear from parents who are taking care of children who have lost one parent. I believe this bill is a strong bill, but it is very important that we look at those needs that impacted the children pursuant to the September 11 terrible tragedy.

Mr. Chairman, I rise to reject the spirit that animates both this rule and the larger debate we will hold here regarding Labor/HHS appropriations. While I appreciate the image of bipartisanship this open rule suggests, the actions of the rules committee allowing the Gentlelady from Pennsylvania to offer her controversial amendment casts a shadow over that image.

For the leadership to allow this controversial school spending provision as a ride to this spending package with full knowledge that the parties had previously agreed to waive the layover on the bill is the essence of divisiveness, and gives all too clear an indication as to the divisive directions the Leadership wishes to drive this country.

The Chairman of the committee has been quoted as saying that the structure for this rule "goes back to agreements that were struck several months ago." Mr. Chairman, I submit to you that this is precisely the wrong reason to go forward in this fashion. These are new times we live in, and we are faced with daunting struggles in the weeks ahead. Bipartisanship does not connote a carte blanche for those in authority to abuse their position. The work is supposed to invoke a spirit of cooperation that ought to animate our proceedings, conduct, and consciousness in this different time. This rule does not achieve this lofty, yet attainable goal.

In pursuit of this goal I will offer two amendments to this bill. The first calls for increased funding the Promoting Safe and Stable Families program under subpart 2 of part B of Title IV of the Social Security Act. The primary goals of Promoting Safe and Stable Families are to prevent the unnecessary separation of children from their families, and ensure permanency for children by reuniting them with their parents, by adoption or by another permanent living arrangement.

The children who have lost their parents or guardian in the September 11, 2001 tragedies cannot be reunited with their birth parents, but the Congress can assist these children in obtaining the appropriate living arrangements by targeting critical adoption services. These children are in need of foster care assistance, adoption assistance, medical, nutritional and psychological care. These service are needed now.

Under this amendment, states could determine the specific needs of children and families affected by these attacks, and use these funds to address those needs expeditiously, within the broad parameters of the existing program.

The second amendment increases by $20,000,000 the grants to the States for adoption incentive payments as authorized by Section 473 A of Title IV of the SSA (42 USC 670–679) and may be made for adoptions completed in FY 2001 and 2002.

Unlike the rider to this appropriations bill, these amendments are timely and promote both the immediate needs of children and families affected by the tragedies of September 11 and the spirit of cooperation our nation desperately needs.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of H.R. 3061, the Labor Health and Human Services and Education Appropriations Act for Fiscal Year 2002.

On October 2, the President sent a letter to the Republican and Democratic leaders of the House and Senate and the chairman and ranking member of the House and Senate Appropriations committees in which he stated that he supported the bipartisan agreement to set FY 2002 discretionary spending levels at $686 billion. Mr. Chairman, this is the first time in several years that the Labor, Health and Human Services and Education Appropriation bill reached a bipartisan agreement in the committee and with the administration.

I want to applaud the Chairman and Ranking member for their hard work on this bill.

The Labor Health and Human Services and Education Appropriations Act for Fiscal Year 2002 will touch the lives of many American citizens including our children. This legislation provides critical funding for Fiscal Year 2002 for a host of programs that improve the lives. At a time when our nation has been shaken through tragedy, this legislation is yet another sign of our strength and resolve to go forward with the American way of life.

Mr. Chairman, I want to point out some of the key provisions of this bill, which I believe to be critical during these difficult times.

Mr. Chairman, the bill language calls for $375,000,000 to fund the Promoting Safe and Stable Families program under subpart 2 of part B of Title IV of the Social Security Act. The primary goals of Promoting Safe and Stable Families are to prevent the unnecessary separation of children from their families, and ensure permanency for children by reuniting them with their parents, by adoption or by another permanent living arrangement.

The children who have lost their parents or guardian in the September 11, 2001 tragedies cannot be reunited with their birth parents, but the Congress can assist these children in obtaining the appropriate living arrangements by targeting critical adoption services. These children are in need of foster care assistance, adoption assistance, medical, nutritional and psychological care. These services are needed now.

Congress should target additional funds towards addressing the specific child welfare needs of children and families affected by the September 11 attacks.

The types of services that are offered under the Promoting Safe and Stable Families program are very broad. Those services include family preservation, family support, family reunification, adoption promotion and support. Further, states have wide discretion in the use of these funds.

Therefore, states could determine the specific needs of children and families affected by these attacks, and use these funds to address those needs expeditiously, within the broad parameters of the existing Promoting Safe and Stable Families program.

I encourage the adoption of report language in the bill that would urge the head of each federal agency responsible to put the highest possible priority on delivery, and to the maximum extent possible, to do so within 60 days of the date of the determination of the death of the child's parent or guardian.

Also, Mr. Chairman, this legislation provides additional funding for the fight against HIV/AIDs in developing countries. During the August recess, I lead a congressional delegation to Guatemala and Honduras, along with the Global Health Council and USAID. There, I visited health clinics and centers that are working to reduce malnutrition and improve the health of children in their communities. While I was impressed by the resourcefulness and commitment of our friends and neighbors as they work to care for the most vulnerable children, such progress will not continue without continued support from the U.S. Mr. Chairman, I am pleased that this legislation allows the transfer up to $75,000,000 to International Assistance programs through the ''Global Fund to Fight HIV/AIDs, Malaria, and Tuberculosis.'' Mr. Chairman, these funds are to remain available until expended.

Mr. Chairman, this bill provides additional funding the Low Income Home Energy Assistance program in the amount of $300,000,000. The funds provided in this bill for the Low Income Home Energy Assistance program are needed because of the increase in unemployed Americans. Low-income households are having an increasingly difficult time paying their home energy bills. Last year, Mr. Chairman, the number of households receiving energy assistance increased by 30% from 3.9 million to almost 5 million. Twelve states reported increases of more than 40%.

EXPLANATION OF REPORT LANGUAGE: PAGE 42 OF THE BILL PROMOTING SAFE AND STABLE FAMILIES

The bill language calls for $375,000,000 to fund the Promoting Safe and Stable Families program under subpart 2 of part B of Title IV of the Social Security Act. The primary goals of Promoting Safe and Stable Families are to prevent the unnecessary separation of children from their families, and ensure permanency for children by reuniting them with their parents, by adoption or by another permanent living arrangement.

The children who have lost their parents or guardian in the September 11, 2001 tragedies cannot be reunited with their birth parents, but the Congress can assist these children in obtaining the appropriate living arrangements by targeting critical adoption services. These children are in need of foster care assistance, adoption assistance, medical, nutritional and psychological care. These services are needed now.

Congress should target additional funds towards addressing the specific child welfare needs of children and families affected by the September 11 attacks.

The types of services that are offered under the Promoting Safe and Stable Families program are very broad. Those services include family preservation, family support, family reunification, adoption promotion and support. Further, states have wide discretion in the use of these funds.

Therefore, states could determine the specific needs of children and families affected by these attacks, and use these funds to address those needs expeditiously, within the broad parameters of the existing Promoting Safe and Stable Families program.

The report language in the bill should urge the head of each federal agency responsible to put the highest possible priority on delivery, and to the maximum extent possible, to do so within 60 days of the date of the determination of the death of the child's parent or guardian.

EXPLANATION OF THE AMENDMENT: #1

Explanation: this amendment increases by $20,000,000 the grants to the States for adoption incentive payments as authorized by Section 473A of Title IV of the SSA (42 U.S.C. 670–679) and may be made for adoptions completed in FY 2001 and 2002.

The offset is provided by reducing $20,000,000 from the Community Services Block Grant Act.

The additional $20,000,000 is targeted to assist the states with adoptions initiated after September 11, 2001 and where the child lost a parent as a result of the attack on America.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there additional amendments to title II?

The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. REGULA. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order, because we have not seen the amendment as yet.

Mr. OBEY. Mr. Chairman, could we have a copy of the amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will distribute copies.

The gentleman from Colorado (Mr. SCHAFFER) is recognized for 5 minutes on his amendment.

Mr. SCHAFFER. Mr. Chairman, the amendment that I offer is one that moves a little over $1 billion to the IDEA program, the Individuals With Disabilities in Education Act. This is a provision that almost all of us in the Congress, Mr. Chairman, have spoken about at one time or another and have professed our support for increasing this line item to eventual full funding.

Back in the 1970s when the IDEA statute was established by the Congress, the statute called for 40 percent funding at the Federal level, and that was a promise and a commitment that we made. Just over 6 years ago, that funding level was down as far as 12 percent, and this Congress in recent years has tried to bump that percentage up. Today, I believe we are around 13 or 14 percent.

This amendment would make a substantial jump in the right direction, but still leave us woefully short of the 40 percent obligation that this Congress has committed to and to which school districts around the country are expecting us to provide funding.

Since we have not done that, Mr. Chairman, what occurs is the mandates associated with the Individuals with Disabilities in Education Act cause every school administrator in the country to effectively steal funds from other important priorities within their budgets, to steal funds from funds that might be used, for example, for teacher pay raises, maybe for capital construction, for investments in technology, for new computers, to reduce class sizes. A number of priorities that might be identified by local administrators and local officials go unrealized because of the expensive Federal mandates associated with this law and the paltry percentage of Federal funding that is put forward to meet those mandates. Again, far under, far below the 40 percent promised by this Congress.

On three separate occasions in recent years, this House passed resolutions, sense of Congress resolutions expressing our support for full funding of IDEA. While we continue to say and vote and speak throughout the course of our campaigns, throughout the course of our business here on the floor that we are in favor of full funding of IDEA, we just do not seem to do it.

Well, this amendment is one that tests our sincerity. It is one that shows the world that we are serious about the promises that we have made and that in the end, schoolchildren matter more than the size and the comfort of bureaucracies here in Washington, D.C. This amendment moves $1.1 billion from seven or eight different line items in the remainder of title III, and it does so in a way that still leaves in more funds than even the administration has requested. In no case are the funds taken from any line item in a way that will render them underfunded according to the request made by the Government itself, by the administration, by those who represent the bureaucracy of our country.

This is an important undertaking, Mr. Chairman, once again, not only because of the growing need for IDEA resources and funds and those individuals who are directly affected by the programs, but, as I say, because our failure to fully fund our obligation and our commitment and, at the same time, leave the expensive mandates in place, causes all children and all schools to suffer; and that is why I offer the amendment. That is why I look forward to the broad-based bipartisan support that I expect based on previous comment and testimony on the amendment. I, on that basis, urge the adoption of the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. REGULA) insist on his point of order?

Mr. REGULA. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw my point of order.

Mr. TIAHRT. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I rise today in strong support of this amendment to increase IDEA funding by more than $1 billion. Year after year we pass resolutions asserting Congress's commitment to fully fund the Individuals with Disabilities in Education Act. Many of our fellow colleagues join with me at this podium and assert our responsibility to live up to our promise to our school districts. We declare that the Individuals with Disabilities in Education Act is the highest priority among Federal elementary and secondary education programs, the highest priority. Yet year after year, we increase funding for other programs that are less vital to our local school districts.

My home State of Kansas can expect to see about one-fourth of the promised $69 million this year for IDEA mandates. Anyone who has spoken with school officials in their district knows that this is inadequate. While school districts are forced to rob Peter in order to pay Paul to meet IDEA mandates at the expense of both children with and without disabilities, Congress has increased funding for Department of Education programs that I consider are not vital to our children's education.

I do not know how many Members have toured special education facilities. I have. I have toured Levy Special Education Center in Wichita, Kansas, and seen the special education children. I have met with special education teachers and listened to their frustration about the lack of funding, combined with the burden of increased paperwork.

Twenty-five years ago with the passage of IDEA, the Federal Government mandated that our local school systems educate all children, even those with severe mental and physical disabilities. IDEA has placed an extreme financial burden on our public schools which could be partially alleviated by keeping our commitment to fully fund the 40 percent of the program, the 40 percent originally promised. To not do so we are completely ignoring the needs of our local school districts.

I challenge my fellow colleagues to live up to our responsibility and support the effort today to put more money in IDEA. I encourage my colleagues to support this amendment.

Mr. GOODE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, I want to commend the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. REGULA), the chairman of the subcommittee, and the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. OBEY), the ranking member, for all that they have done for IDEA. They have increased funding significantly in this bill, but more is needed. So I am very happy to rise in support of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Colorado (Mr. SCHAFFER).

In the fifth district of Virginia, school superintendents and school board members have addressed the issue of funding for special education more than any other school issue. These additional funds would bring so much more flexibility to jurisdictions in the fifth district of Virginia and across the United States. I hope it will be the pleasure of this body to support this amendment and to help IDEA funding get closer to the 40 percent.

Mr. REGULA. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, reluctantly, I rise in opposition to this amendment. I think that the IDEA program is an excellent one; and I know that the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. BOEHNER), the chairman of the Committee on Education and the Workforce, had this discussed when they did H.R. 1. He said that we need to withhold until it is reauthorized. It will be up for reauthorization next year. I think there will probably be refinements made in the program that will enable it to even better serve those who are in need.

I want to point out that the committee was very sensitive to this. We increased the amount by $1.37 billion; it is a 22 percent increase over last year. The total is $7.739 billion. We were, in fact, $375 million over the President's request on the IDEA program.

So it is not a lack of sensitivity; and, of course, this tends to free up money that goes into the regular school program. I think adding money is not necessarily going to enhance the experience of the children in the IDEA program; it simply would free up money for the general school program that is now taken out of the regular school budget.

I have to say that the offsets here, I believe, have a substantial impact. It first takes money from the education for the disadvantaged, and in the President's statement he points out that there is a real need in this field as part of title I so that the students can profit from the efforts that will be taken under title I.

Likewise, it takes out money from immigrant education; and, again, if these individuals are going to be members of our society, they need an ability to get education through our system. Otherwise, they will be on the welfare rolls.

The school improvement programs, again, are something that are affected by the offsets in this program, and I think the one that I am concerned particularly about is vocational and adult education. We are finding a lot of people are having to refine their job opportunities because they are laid off from a factory; they are laid off from all different types of things. It is almost a daily occurrence to read in the newspaper where 5,000 are laid off by a major industry. These people need the ability to get new skills to participate in our economy in this Nation so that they can pay their mortgages, send their children to school, to universities and colleges.

To take money out of vocational and adult education I think is a misdirected priority at the moment, given what is happening in the economy. We need to give people the opportunity to participate in the economy, and the issues here that are being used to pay for this additional funding, which will go to the schools' budgets and not necessarily change the experience of any children in the IDEA program, is not as high a priority in my judgment as providing for the education for disadvantaged, as providing for vocational and adult education, and higher education.

We have increased the Pell Grants to help young people get a chance to get a college education.

We are living in a far more sophisticated society than was true many years ago. Therefore, people who want to participate effectively in our economy need higher education; they need retraining, as offered by vocational and adult education.

So I think, looking at the total sum of the priorities, that this is a balanced bill. I hope that the Committee on Education and the Workforce next year will take a look at this program in the reauthorization process and make sure it is even more effective than it is now in meeting the needs of the children that are part of the IDEA program.

For this reason, I would urge the Members to reject this amendment.

Mr. RYAN of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. RYAN of Wisconsin. First of all, Mr. Chairman, I would like to thank the chairman and the ranking member for all their work on this fine piece of legislation. They have put in a lot of time and hours, and they have listened to a lot of Members with respect to this very complicated piece of legislation.

Mr. Chairman, I believe this is a wise amendment, and it is for this reason: In 1975, Congress passed a very important piece of legislation. That legislation is what we call special education, the Individuals with Disabilities Act.

But at that time, that legislation said the Federal Government would fund 40 percent of special education and the States would cover the rest of it. Well, Mr. Chairman, that has not occurred. We are, at best, funding 12 to 15 percent of special education, a Federal mandate on our local schools which now, since those days, has become the largest unfunded Federal mandate on our local school districts.

In the State of Wisconsin, from which I come and which I represent, we have a revenue cap. What that means in States like Wisconsin and other States across the country with the revenue cap, that means $1 that is used to chase an unfunded Federal mandate is $1 that is taken away from every other resource allocation made by a local school district. It is $1 taken away from all of these other programs.

It suffocates local control, it artificially props up property taxes, and it disallows us from having the ability at home in our districts, in our school districts, in our LEAs, from making the resource decisions to cater our needs and problems per the problems of our school districts.

So with that in mind, Mr. Chairman, I think it is very important that this Congress works very, very hard to try and meet that unfunded Federal mandate, because if we do so, our school districts can address all of these issues. They can address bilingual education, they can address all of the programs that are being used to pay for in this amendment. It will be up to the school districts.

These programs are important programs. This amendment does keep the funding of these programs at or above the President's request. So I think it is a very reasonable and commonsense amendment.

I just think it is very important, Mr. Chairman, that we finally recognize that Washington all too often penalizes our local decision-making. It forces unfunded mandates on our schools, and in States especially where we have revenue caps it basically makes a choice between higher property taxes or not or between taking money out of every other education program in a school district or putting it into special education.

We should not have to force school districts into that kind of decision-making. A vote for this amendment is a vote to elevate the percentage of special education from Washington from 15 percent to 21 percent, basically even half of the mandate, not even far enough. But it is a vote for local control, it is a vote for local resource allocation.

With that, I thank the chairman and the ranking member for all of their work on this. I just think it is important that we make a statement on behalf of local control. This is a great way of doing so.

Mr. SCHAFFER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RYAN of Wisconsin. I yield to the gentleman from Colorado.

Mr. SCHAFFER. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman from Wisconsin for yielding to me.

I appreciate those last remarks. It is within that context that I want to address some of the comments that the chairman made.

Mr. Chairman, without a doubt, we are moving $1.1 billion away from programs that are funded over and above the request of our President. Now, the characterization of these being cuts is one that I flatly dispute, because these programs are still receiving increases over and above what they are budgeted in the current fiscal year. In fact, we are, in many of these programs, increasing still above what the President had requested.

As to whether doing so causes some kind of harm or endangers students, I just do not think our President would do that. I think our President has suggested a funding level that is reasonable and just, and took into full consideration the impact that his funding increases would have on America's children.

The President did suggest on several occasions his support for moving toward full funding of IDEA. Although our promise to the American people, to America's schoolchildren, their teachers, their administrators, was that we would fund this Federal mandate at 40 percent, my amendment increases the amount the committee has suggested by $1 billion. That only gets us to 21 percent. We still have a long way to go to maintain the promises that we have made. I hope we can do that. But we are not hurting anyone in accomplishing the fulfillment of our obligations.

Mr. REGULA. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to strike the requisite number of words.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. REGULA. Mr. Chairman, I just want to point out or reiterate, since the President has been mentioned here, that we are $375 million above the President's request for IDEA, and this represents a 22 percent increase in this fund. So it is not as if we were not sensitive to the needs in IDEA.

But also, we were sensitive to the needs of the unemployed, of the economically handicapped and disadvantaged, and immigrant education. So it is a matter of balance here. We have tried to balance out all of these things in allocating the resources in the bill. I hope that the Members will support the bill and vote against this amendment.

Mr. OBEY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. OBEY. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Wisconsin indicated that he wanted to thank the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. REGULA) and I for what we have done in the bill. I think the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. REGULA) and I would rather have less thanks and more support.

I have two things I would like to say, Mr. Chairman. First of all, with respect to the duty that I think individual Members owe the Committee, and vice versa. When the Committee produces a bill, there is a report, a printed report. The bill is printed. The House has several days' notice before the bill comes to the floor.

Yet, in contrast, I have seen at least four amendments offered today on which the Committee has essentially been blindsided. Individual Members keep amendments in their pockets until the last possible moment. Then they bring them to the floor with no notice to the Committee, so that we might work with them to fashion an amendment that might be acceptable to both sides.

It just seems to me if committees are expected to exhibit certain respect for individual Members, I think individual Members owe that same respect to the Committee. I would urge Members to respond accordingly.

Secondly, let me point out that this is one of those amendments that I suspect no matter what we had put in this bill for IDEA, we would have been told, oh, it is not enough. This Committee is one-upped every time we turn around.

I want to read to the Members. People have suggested that the Administration is in support of this amendment. That is most definitely not true. I want to read a statement from the Secretary of Education:

''We believe that solutions to these challenges; namely, in IDEA, should be addressed within the context of a thorough review of IDEA and as part of a comprehensive package of reforms.'' In other words, they do not think that we should be providing large amounts of money without reforms to the program.

I want to point out what this amendment does. This amendment cuts title I. We hear about how much IDEA is not reaching all the children that it is supposed to reach. I recognize that. It would cost $17 billion to fully fund IDEA. It would cost $27 million to fully fund title I, because title I is only reaching one-third of the children who are eligible for service. Yet, this bill would cut that program to finance a program which is already $375 million above the President.

I would point out that on IDEA, since 1996, this Committee has raised the funding for that program from $2.3 billion to $7.7 billion. That is not bad. That is not bad.

I would point out that only one-third of eligible kids in title I are now served. Why do we not have an amendment on the floor raising that to $27 billion? It seems to me it would be just as equitable.

I want to point out also that there are 8,200 schools in this country who have low-income kids at least 35 percent of their enrollment, low-income kids who do not get a dime in title I money. If we are going to start talking about inadequacies, we ought to raise that program, too.

I do not see why we ought to cut vocational education, why we ought to cut title I, why we ought to cut bilingual education when we have 3.6 million kids in this country who need to understand how to read English and speak English. I do not know why we should cut education research when there is still so much debate in this country about how children learn. It would be nice if all of us could get off our biases and get into some facts. The way we do that is with additional education research.

So I would say the amendment, in terms of what it wants to increase, is fine. But the source of money for that increase I think is ill-advised, to put it kindly. In my view, the Committee has struck a reasonable balance. There are people in the Senate, there are people in the Senate in my party who want to see IDEA increased far above this level, and who also want to see title I fully funded over the next 4 years so we pay for 100 percent of eligibility.

Is anybody here willing to put that $27 billion on the table? This Committee has tried to be responsible. We have held down the gentleman's wish list on that side of the aisle and our wish list on this side of the aisle.

I would much prefer that we be able to provide every dollar for IDEA that is suggested in this amendment, but not at the expense of title I, not at the expense of vocational education, not at the expense of educational research, not at the expense of TRIO programs.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. OBEY) has expired.

(By unanimous consent, Mr. OBEY was allowed to proceed for 1 additional minute.)

Mr. OBEY. Mr. Chairman, I would urge Members again to recognize that we have hammered out over a 7-month period a bipartisan bill which does not meet anybody's idea of what is pluperfect, but represents a reasonable compromise between all of us. I urge Members to stick with that judgment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Colorado (Mr. SCHAFFER).

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. SCHAFFER. Mr. Chairman, I demand a recorded vote.

THE CHAIRMAN. An insufficient number has apparently arisen. . . .

Mr. SCHAFFER. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order that a quorum is not present.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will count for a quorum.

Evidently a quorum is not present.

Pursuant to the provisions of clause 6, rule XVIII, the Chair announces that he will reduce to a minimum of 5 minutes the period of time within which a vote by electronic device, if ordered, will be taken on the pending question following the quorum call.

The call was taken by electronic device.

NOT VOTING—5

Blunt	Meeks (NY)	Velázquez
Kingston	Miller (FL)

□ 1701

Mr. HALL of Texas changed his vote from ''no'' to ''aye.''

So the amendment was rejected.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

Mrs. CLAYTON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the last word.

Mr. Chairman, this particular bill gives us an opportunity obviously to talk about many important issues, and the issue of AIDS obviously is very important. I want to bring to the attention of the House that those of us who live in rural areas are beginning to see an increased rise of AIDS in our areas, and the resources we have now allocated to this horrific disease are skewed more to urban areas. I am not proposing an amendment, I just want to bring to the committee's attention that the Ryan White program, which is a very good resource, is skewed to large populations.

Those of us who live in smaller communities, 50,000 and less, have far more difficulty in being able to get those resources. I ask the chairman if we could look for opportunities in the report language to be more fair in the distribution of those resources.

Mr. REGULA. Mr. Chairman, will the gentlewoman yield?

Mrs. CLAYTON. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. REGULA. Mr. Chairman, we have recognized the problem; and we have increased those programs, as the gentlewoman has probably noticed. It has been a difficult issue to balance out all of the demands that confront us in this bill. We have tried to be fair in beefing up that program.

Mrs. CLAYTON. Mr. Chairman, I am very appreciative of what the gentleman has done. I am only saying as a rural-urban allocation, those of us who live in rural communities do not benefit from the program in the same way. I urge the gentleman to work with us during the conference report language to correct some of that disparity.

Mr. REGULA. Mr. Chairman, if the gentlewoman would continue to yield, we are aware of that; and will work with the gentlewoman.

Mrs. CLAYTON. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman.

Mr. GREEN of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I congratulate the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. REGULA), the subcommittee chairman, and the gentleman from Florida (Chairman YOUNG) in support of the bill. I appreciate the funding for the Community Access Program which was placed in the bill, the CAP program.

The Census Bureau estimates that for a second year running there has been a decline in the number of uninsured Americans, with 39 million Americans without health insurance. As the Census Bureau also reports, the slowing economy, higher levels of unemployment, and the uncertain future could cause significant growth in the number of uninsured Americans.

The CAP program is used to support a variety of programs to improve access for all levels of care, for the uninsured and the underinsured. CAP helps fill the gaps in our health safety net by improving infrastructure and communication among agencies to ensure that care is continuous.

With better information, agencies can provide preventive, primary, and emergency clinical health services in an integrated and coordinated manner. Each community designs a program which best addresses the needs of the uninsured and underinsured and the providers in their community.

For example, in Florida in Broward County, they use CAP funds to form an informational health line and referral system to publicize health care prevention and points of access for health care services. They purchased new software so that various providers could improve eligibility determinations for public services.

Chicago, Illinois, focused on a CAP grant which institutes disease management best practices because of the county's disproportionately high mortality rates from diabetes and cancer. The CAP program has worked, and is able to reach more than 300,000 residents in Chicago.

Mr. Chairman, in its two short years in existence, this program is very successful; 75 communities around the country have received these funds. I thank the chairman of the full committee and the ranking member, and also the subcommittee for including this provision in the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there additional amendments to title III?

The Clerk will read.

There was no objection.

AMENDMENT NO. 6 OFFERED BY MR. TRAFICANT

Mr. TRAFICANT. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to offer amendment No. 6 from the end of the bill at this point.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will designate the amendment.

The text of the amendment is as follows:

Amendment No. 6 offered by Mr. TRAFICANT:

SEC. ____. No funds appropriated in this Act may be made available to any person or entity that violates the Buy American Act (41 U.S.C. 10a–10c).

Mr. TRAFICANT. Mr. Chairman, this amendment is a straight limitation. None of the funds appropriated in the act may be made available to any person or entity that has violated the Buy American Act.

Mr. Chairman, the House should pay attention to something that concerns me, and the appropriators especially. A notice has been posted that the windows of the Capitol will have installed a protective covering because of the September 11 terrorist attack and the increased focus on terrorism. The company that made the product that will be installed on the Capitol windows is from Belgium.

One of the big contracts given for the rebuilding of the Pentagon is to a French company; and I might remind Members when we had a problem with Khadafi, France would not let us use their air space or their airports. Our military has bought boots from China, and probably most of the flags Members see waving throughout America as a symbol of American patriotism were made in Chinese sweatshops.

Mr. Chairman, the amendment makes sense. But I believe the leaders of the Committee on Appropriations should start looking at procurement. We certainly do not have to be an isolationist Nation or protectionist Nation; but on military procurement, especially, I think we should almost demand American products in the end that someday we may face a nation who we depend on for a product that may not be all that friendly to us.

Mr. REGULA. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TRAFICANT. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. REGULA. Mr. Chairman, we are prepared to accept this amendment on our side.

Mr. TRAFICANT. Mr. Chairman, I want to compliment the chairman, who is my neighbor. The subcommittee has done a tremendous job.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. TRAFICANT).

The amendment was agreed to.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. STEARNS

Mr. STEARNS. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. STEARNS:

At the end of title V, insert after the last section (preceding the short title) the following section:

SEC. 5____. Of the amounts otherwise made available in this Act to the Corporation for Public Broadcasting for fiscal year 2002, $12,000,000 is transferred and made available under the account for the Public Health and Social Services Emergency Fund as an additional amount to support activities of the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention.

Mr. OBEY. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman reserves a point of order.

□ 1715

Mr. STEARNS. Mr. Chairman, this is a very simple amendment. Basically it tries to help the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention that relates to biological disease and chemical threats to the civilian population and it essentially takes about 3 percent from the Public Broadcasting Corporation and moves it over to the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention.

Just this last week, our headline news has had two frightening what-ifs, particularly in Florida. Three individuals have come in contact with a manufactured form of anthrax. Of course, one person lost his life. Americans, of course, felt this, as a collective body, sort of a shiver upon hearing about this news. Early this week, we saw the case in the D.C. Metro where somebody sprayed the crowd, unsuspecting crowd. It turns out that about 35 people on the train, they had to evacuate. This whole process of what could happen if anthrax is used in our country in a large population is a great concern. And so I think the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention should have sufficient funds to study this. I do not believe the CDC has had sufficient funds, and so this is a very small amount, about 3 percent, from the Public Broadcasting Corporation. We take from them and give to CDC, particularly for biological disease and chemical threat prevention studies. I think it is a modest amount.

Mr. Chairman, on this debate can I control the balance of my time?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman must use his time or yield it back.

Mr. STEARNS. Let me conclude by saying that perhaps all of you saw recently in the newspaper that the FCC now has allowed the Corporation for Public Broadcasting to advertise as a means of getting more revenues to their budget. Surely if PBS is going to use tax dollars to support itself, a small amount could be contributed to the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, because really public broadcasting has now asked the FCC if we can start to advertise to get revenue, much like private corporations. So the Public Broadcasting System is out there doing the same thing that the private corporations are going to do. The FCC is going to allow it, they are going to be able to advertise to collect revenue, and these revenues will go to help support the Public Broadcasting System, and I think this is good. I think the Public Broadcasting System should have a certain amount of revenues from advertising. However, I do not think they need to continue to be on the public dole, that the government has to support them with taxpayer-supported money.

So I think this is a small effort to say we need to help the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention and, more importantly, have them take this money and use it to study things like the proliferation of anthrax and to prepare this Nation for some of the pitfalls that might occur because of that.

Mr. Chairman, I ask my colleagues to vote ''yes'' on the Stearns amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Wisconsin insist on the point of order?

Mr. OBEY. Mr. Chairman, my understanding is that the point in the bill at which this amendment would be in order has already been passed and so clearly, under the House rules, the gentleman's amendment is not in order at this time. However, as a courtesy to him and in an effort to save time, I will not insist on the point of order. I would simply move to strike the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman does not insist on the point of order and is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. OBEY. Mr. Chairman, this amendment is not what it appears to be. It is a trojan horse amendment. We all are aware of the terrorism problem that has befallen this country and the world. This amendment, in essence, pretends to do something significant about it when, in fact, what it does about it is something that is minuscule and not at all long lasting. What this amendment really is is a subterranean attack on public television all over America.

The public television stations of this country are required by an FCC mandate to move to digital technology. This bill provides the money, at least the Federal share of the money, to help them do that. What this amendment would do is to cut in half the Federal money which is being provided in order to enable those stations to fulfill that Federal mandate. And what it does is it pretends that it is going to have a significant impact on programs run by the Centers for Disease Control by transferring $12 million to that agency.

In fact, this bill already contains $232 million for that agency, a 28 percent increase over last year, and by the time we have finished with the antiterrorism supplemental, there will be probably at least another $1 billion and maybe as much as $2 billion, not million but billion, for the very same purpose that this amendment purports to add money for this evening.

So I would suggest the real way, the real way, the effective way to deal with the problem of terrorist attacks on this country in the form of biological or chemical agents is to support the committee bill and to support the follow-on supplemental which will be provided to this House before the appropriation process is finished under the agreement that we have reached with the White House.

I would urge, under those circumstances, that Members not be deceived into thinking that this is a significant effort to deal with that problem. It is minuscule compared to the funding that will be needed and will be provided by Members on both sides of the aisle. And so I would urge rejection of the amendment, unless, of course, you want to insist on a Federal mandate without paying for it.

Mr. REGULA. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

I rise in opposition to this amendment because we have already added $100 million to the CDC on bioterrorism. Their total account is almost $400 million. In addition, the Secretary of Health and Human Services has been assured that CDC will receive a portion of the money in the $20 billion that we appropriated as a result of the events of September 11. So I think there is going to be a lot of money flowing to CDC for bioterrorism. In addition, we beefed up the public health account.

Now, public broadcasting, and it is public broadcasting, I do not always agree with what they do, but they have been required by FCC to go to digital. And, of course, eventually the public, as they purchase new television sets, will likewise be able to receive digital programming which will, of course, improve the quality of the broadcasting. While I may not be enthused about some of the things the Corporation for Public Broadcasting does, I think it is our responsibility since it is the FCC which is a Federal agency that has made this order, and since it is public broadcasting, to support them as this appropriation does.

If I thought there was a shortage in CDC, I would perhaps have a different approach. But, again, we have enormously beefed up the CDC money, plus the fact that they are going to get a very sizable sum from the $20 billion that we have already put in for emergency funding for national security.

Mr. OBEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REGULA. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. OBEY. Mr. Chairman, let me point out that the President will send to this Congress tomorrow a request for $2 billion, not 12 million dollars but $2 billion to combat disease-related potential attacks from any source.

I would urge the House not to fall into the trap of using our concern over the incident that happened a month ago to screw up every other program that the government is engaged in. I mean, that is essentially what would happen if this amendment is adopted with respect to our obligation to help finance the mandate that the Federal Government created with respect to digitalization.

If the Members want to support a real effort to help CDC prepare this country, they will support that $2 billion request. They will not cut in half what we are trying to do here for digitalization for public television in order to create the appearance that we have done something significant which, in fact, would be a thimbleful in an ocean in terms of its impact.

Mr. REGULA. Mr. Chairman, reclaiming my time, that is correct. I am advised by our leadership, also, that there will be a $2 billion request by the Administration in additional emergency funding for the Centers for Disease Control to deal with bioterrorism, and that is a lot of money. I do not believe we should cripple the ability of the Corporation for Public Broadcasting to move into the 21st century in their ability to transmit to the public effectively. Obviously the FCC would not have made this requirement if it were not an important element of their ability to serve the public.

I, therefore, oppose the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Florida (Mr. STEARNS).

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. STEARNS. Mr. Chairman, I demand a recorded vote.

The CHAIRMAN. Pursuant to clause 6 of rule XVIII, further proceedings on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Florida (Mr. STEARNS) will be postponed.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. SANDERS

Mr. SANDERS. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SANDERS:

At the end of title V, insert after the last section (preceding the short title) the following section:

SEC. 5 . None of the funds made available in this Act for the Department of Health and Human Services may be used to grant an exclusive or partially exclusive license pursuant to chapter 18 of title 35, United States Code, except in accordance with section 209 of such title (relating to the availability to the public of an invention and its benefits on reasonable terms).

Mr. REGULA. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio reserves a point of order.

Mr. SANDERS. Mr. Chairman, this is a very simple amendment to lower the cost of prescription drugs in this country. It is tripartisan and is cosponsored by the gentleman from California (Mr. ROHRABACHER), the gentlewoman from Ohio (Ms. KAPTUR), the gentleman from Texas (Mr. PAUL) and the gentlewoman from New York (Mrs. MALONEY).

When I first introduced a version of this amendment in 1996, it received 180 votes. Last year, however, it passed 313–109. There is a lot of support for this amendment in this body. I offer it tonight again in the hope that the Senate will agree favorably to it and begin to lower the price of prescription drugs developed with the taxpayers' money through the National Institutes of Health. This amendment is supported by organizations representing millions of American citizens, including Families USA, the Alliance for Retired Americans, the National Committee to Preserve Social Security and Medicare, and Public Citizen.

Mr. Chairman, over the years, the taxpayers of this country have contributed billions of dollars to the National Institutes of Health for research into new and important drugs, and that research money has paid off. It has worked. Between 1955 and 1992, 92 percent of drugs approved by the FDA to treat cancer were researched and developed by the NIH. Today, many of the most widely used drugs in this country dealing with a variety of illnesses were developed through NIH research, and that is very good news for all of us.

Mr. REGULA. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SANDERS. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. REGULA. Mr. Chairman, would the gentleman yield back the balance of his time if we said that we would accept the amendment?

Mr. SANDERS. If the gentleman would let me finish my statement, I have 2 more minutes. And he is going to accept it. I am happy to hear that.

□ 1730

Mr. OBEY. Mr. Chairman, what if we will not accept it if the gentleman finishes his speech?

Mr. SANDERS. Mr. Chairman, I will read fast. It will be done in a minute-and-a-half.

Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the chairman and ranking member agreeing to accept the amendment. But the point here is that the bad news, by and large, is that those drugs that were developed at taxpayer expense were given over to the pharmaceutical industry with no assurance that American consumers would not be charged outrageously high prices. The pharmaceutical companies constitute the most profitable industry in America, yet while their profits sore, millions of Americans cannot afford the prescription drugs they desperately need because of the high prices they are forced to pay. That is bad. But what is even worse is that many of these same drugs were developed with taxpayer dollars.

Imagine a situation where taxpayers contribute to develop a drug, and then the person who paid taxes to develop that drug cannot afford to buy it. That is an outrage.

There are many crises in terms of the high cost of prescription drugs in this country. This amendment deals with one narrow aspect of that problem. If taxpayers in America are going to contribute billions to develop drugs, then when those drugs are marketed by the pharmaceutical industry they must be sold at a reasonable price; and that is what this amendment does.

I could list, but I will not, the many, many drugs that receive Federal assistance that are now sold for outrageously high prices. It is time for the United States Congress to stand up to represent the taxpayers and consumers of this country and support this amendment.

Let me simply conclude by mentioning with gratitude that last year over 300 Members of this House overwhelmingly supported this amendment. I am very delighted and proud that the chairman and the ranking member are prepared to accept it and that I hope that we can go on tonight.

Mr. PAUL. Mr. Chairman will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SANDERS. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. PAUL. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

I am pleased that the amendment will be approved because I am a cosponsor of this amendment. I compliment the gentleman for bringing this to the floor.

Mr. SANDERS. Mr. Chairman, reclaiming my time, I thank the gentleman from Texas (Mr. PAUL) for his strong support.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there further discussion on the amendment?

Does the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. REGULA) insist on his point of order?

Mr. REGULA. Mr. Chairman, we withdraw our reservation and are prepared to accept the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Vermont (Mr. SANDERS).

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there further amendments to the bill?

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. ISTOOK

Mr. ISTOOK. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. ISTOOK:

At the end of the bill (before the short title), insert the following:

TITLE VII—ADDITIONAL GENERAL PROVISIONS

SEC. 701. The amounts otherwise provided by this Act are revised by increasing the amount made available in the second sentence under the heading ''Health Resources and Services'' for special projects of regional and national significance under section 501(a)(2) of the Social Security Act, reducing the aggregate amount made available under the heading ''Disease Control, Research, and Training'', and reducing the aggregate amount made available under the heading ''Payments to States for the Child Care and Development Block Grant'', by $33,000,000, $16,000,000, and $17,000,000, respectively.

Mr. OBEY. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma (Mr. ISTOOK) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. ISTOOK. Mr. Chairman, this deals with the matter that was offered earlier during the debate on this bill to make available an additional $33 million for Abstinence Education Grants.

The offset, of course, is different from what it was before. It is now under the Disease Control, Research, and Training program, which, among other things, provides funding for combatting sexually transmitted diseases, as well as other diseases.

Mr. Chairman, this is in response to the great crisis that we have had for decades regarding teen pregnancy, teen sexual activity, unwed births, and the tremendous catastrophic effect that it has had on America and on millions and millions of lives in America. For decades, since the 1970s, Mr. Chairman, we have been funding so-called safe sex programs, family planning programs, things using a euphemism for telling kids it is okay to have sex, as long as you are careful about it.

What has been the result during that time? Mr. Chairman, as Federal funding for these programs went up, teenage pregnancies and unwed births went up along with it. The more we sent a mixed message that says it is okay to have sex out of wedlock, it is okay, kids, just be safe about it, the more we undercut what Mom and Dad tell their kids, the more we undercut what they are taught at church, the more we found that we got more of the problem.

But only when first in private funding and then, in 1995, in Federal funding, did we start funding the abstinence programs that taught kids about waiting until marriage and upholding values, only then have we started to see this number come down in teenage unwed births.

That is what this is about, Mr. Chairman. We started funding that in 1995 at the rate of $50 million a year, and then, in the last year, we began adding to that at a rate of $70 million a year. To the chairman's credit, the bill in front of us would bring that number to $90 million, but it does not bring it to parity with what we have been spending to promote so-called safe sex, family planning. ''It is okay to do it as long as you try to be careful,'' and teenagers are not able to be careful that way, Mr. Chairman.

This is bringing parity, as the President has proposed. As we have the supportive letter from OMB to support that, this is bringing parity to the funding, saying that we ought to be spending at least as much on the message of abstinence as we are on the other message.

We defined what we meant by abstinence. Teaching that has as its exclusive purpose the social, psychological, and health gains to be realized by abstaining from sexual activity. Teaching that abstinence from sexual activity for teens outside marriage is the expected standard, and it is the only way to prevent unwanted pregnancy and the only way to prevent sexually transmitted diseases that have exploded along with the explosion of teen pregnancies.

Mr. Chairman, this is just saying let us have parity. This does not attack the programs that we have been funding for years, but it does say that it is about time that the average American, the typical American, the normal values of everyday people in this country, receive the same emphasis from their government as we have put on other things.

I ask Members to join me, Mr. Chairman, in supporting this amendment; in supporting the $33 million which we calculated and the President calculated would bring parity. Frankly, Mr. Chairman, I have got to tell you, it is probably still about $15 million short of that parity, but I am not asking for a higher number.

We asked early on in this session for this amount, this $73 million for the grants on top of the $50 million that goes to the States to do this. And there is huge demand for it. When the first grants were awarded this year under the grant program, only $20 million was available. Applicants applied for seven times that amount. The Department of Health and Human Services was overwhelmed with the number of applications. They have never had such a response to a new program as they had for this.

Mr. Chairman, we need to put this funding in place. We have the hundreds of billions of dollars in this bill. We have the extra billions that were added in just the last week or two. It is not asking too much to say that we ought to be active in seeking the abstinence education.

Mr. Chairman, I move adoption of the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman insist on his point of order?

Mr. OBEY. No, I do not, Mr. Chairman.

I move to strike the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. OBEY. Mr. Chairman, the account that the gentleman is asking that we increase has been increased in this bill by 100 percent. The account that the gentleman would cut in order to finance the increase that he is asking for is the account that funds infectious disease control efforts at CDC; it is the account that funds the disease detectives who are right now at this very moment searching for anthrax; it is the account that funds breast and cervical screening; it is the account that funds TB control; it is the account that funds sexually transmitted diseases; and, in addition to that, the gentleman cuts the Child Care Block Grant account.

Now, I would point out that with respect to the item that the gentleman seeks to increase, he seeks to increase the funding that we are providing for abstinence programs. I fully support those programs. I voted for them in the past, and I have helped the gentleman get the funding for them. I would point out that the increase that the gentleman has gotten in this bill for those family planning programs is twice as high as the increase that we have provided in this bill for the traditional family planning programs.

So the gentleman has already gotten the better part of the deal. Now he is asking us to fund yet another increase. And I have no problem with that increase. I have no problem with it whatsoever. If the gentleman wants to cut back some tax cuts in order to pay for it, or if he wants to find some other reasonable accounts to cut, fine, I am all for it. But I am not for funding a greater than 100 percent increase in this account by reducing the other accounts before us.

I find it ironic that the previous amendment is trying to increase the activities that the gentleman is trying to cut with this amendment. This committee is being whipsawed. One minute we are being hit from the northeast, and the next minute we are being hit from the southwest.

We are in the center with this bill. We have got a bipartisan compromise, we have got reasonable increases for all of these programs, and I would urge that in the interests of maintaining the balance in this bill, that we oppose the gentleman's amendment.

If we can find some other way in conference to increase funding for this in a balanced way, I have no sweats about that. But I am certainly not interested in funding this increase at the expense of the decreases that I have just described.

Mr. REGULA. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to this amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition because in part it takes money from very important programs, Child Care Development Block Grants. We are all concerned about child care. We have heard earlier today statements about the impact of September 11 on children, and that is just part of the needs that face this Nation.

Likewise, we have just had a discussion on the importance of the Center for Disease Control for research and training, again a response to the impact of events over the recent time.

I would want to point out that I do not quarrel with what the gentleman's goals are, and I think this program should be increased, and we recognize that. We went $10 million more than the President requested in his budget. We went $20 million more than last year.

It is not that we are ignoring this program. It is not that we do not think it has great potential. I talked to a lady in my district who is working with this program, and she pointed out to me a number of effective things that are being done in the schools. But I think it needs to be developed incrementally.

I believe that the money that we have put in, working to improve the program, will accomplish the goals; and I would hope that in the future we will have more evidence, such as what I have heard from one of my constituents, that will persuade us that we should have another sizable increase in the future.

But obviously if we are $10 million over the President and $20 million over last year, we are recognizing the value of this program, and when I have to balance this off against the Centers for Disease Control and all the items that the gentleman from Wisconsin mentioned that are part of the Child Care Development Block Grant, it just does not balance out in terms of equities.

We have tried to have a balanced bill here. We have tried to recognize all the different programs that are important. I think in adding $10 million over the President, $20 million over last year's budget, we are being fair in what is available for this program.

I would urge Members to vote against this amendment.

Mr. PENCE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong support of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma (Mr. ISTOOK), my friend and colleague; but I would begin my brief remarks on this bill by commending the chairman and the ranking member for their very sincere commitment to abstinence education and acknowledging the increases in the current bill, $20 million over last year, as the chairman said, and $10 million even over the President's request.

But I, nevertheless, rise today in support of that noble, right, pure, and true belief that we as a people should reconsider our approach to family planning and to sex education and treatment in America today. The truth is that we have a problem. Mr. Chairman, 3 million teenagers a year are catching sexually transmitted disease. The United States has, Mr. Chairman, the highest teenage pregnancy rate of all developed countries in the world, despite billions of dollars spent over decades in traditional methods of birth control. Mr. Chairman, 1 million teenagers become pregnant each year, and one-third of those pregnancies end tragically in abortion.

Not only do we have a problem, Mr. Chairman, but we have a solution. Abstinence education, as the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. REGULA), the chairman of the subcommittee, just reflected passionately works. We know that it works. From the district that I serve in Indiana, we have seen church organizations and civic organizations come together to promote abstinence as an alternative. Here in Washington, D.C. where 15 percent of girls become sexually active in the eighth grade, according to statistics, there is a program known as the Best Friends Foundation, which has reduced that number to 5 percent in real terms. In the District of Columbia, 27 percent of girls age 15 to 19 become pregnant each year, but among the Best Friends girls in that age range, only 2.5 percent have ever become pregnant. Abstinence, as the gentleman from Oklahoma (Mr. ISTOOK) says and as the chairman and the ranking member reflect, abstinence works and we ought to be making a serious and concerted commitment.

Another example: in Rochester, New York, the Not Me Not Now program achieved remarkable results over a 4-year period. First intercourse incidents among 15-year-olds dropped from 47 percent to 32 percent, and among 17-year-olds it dropped from 54 percent to 40 percent. Mr. Chairman, these are real gains; these are real improvements. But we have a real need, despite the outstanding work of the committee on this important piece of legislation. I, along with the gentleman from Oklahoma (Mr. ISTOOK), believe that we can and should do more; that, in fact, by adding $33 million to the annual title V SPRANS Community Abstinence Education program, we will do much to meet what is a real need in America today.

The title V program received 359 applications last year in its first year of operation in funding abstinence programs around America. That was the largest number of applications for a single new grant program that anyone at HHS can even remember. It would have required $165 million in authorization to fund all of the applicants. This modest increase of $73 million still will not meet the need; but it will move us closer to a new vision, a balanced vision when it comes to sex education in America today.

So again, with great respect to the chairman and to the ranking member for their commitment to abstinence education, which I acknowledge today, Mr. Chairman, is real and is heartfelt and is genuine; and with appreciation for the increased commitment to abstinence education in this bill I, nevertheless, very respectfully stand with the gentleman from Oklahoma (Mr. ISTOOK) and others to say that we can and should do more.

Mr. DOGGETT. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, abstinence education. With all due respect to the good intentions of the author of the amendment, as far as this amendment and the priority-setting that produced this amendment on the floor of Congress today, I think the whole matter is a true embarrassment.

The Pentagon held a memorial service this morning. It had a memorial service for the men and women that we lost on September 11. Their loved ones were not killed because of inadequate abstinence education; they were killed because of major security breaches in our airports, and it is high time that this Congress do something about it. Across our country, millions of Americans have honored the victims of September 11 with a moment of silence. Well, this House has acted with more than a moment; it has had a month of silence and inaction on the security issue that lies at the heart of this tragedy. We can talk about the pros and cons of abstinence education all night long, and I guess some would like to do that, but when are we going to talk about effective measures to ensure abstinence for terrorism?

I think that it is long past time to stop wasting our time talking about safe sex and start talking about safe flight. In the 30 days that have now passed since four airplanes were hijacked and crashed, the Congress has failed utterly to provide for airline security. This inaction borders on indifference, and it is a disgrace. If four crashes were not enough to make this body respond, what in the world will? Can we not devote at least as much time to this issue that every family in America is concerned about tonight as we devote to talking about abstinence?

One week after this attack, and this is part of a series of problems; it is not just this amendment, one week after this attack, what was this House doing? We were debating a family court in the District of Columbia. Two weeks after this attack, we were establishing National Character Counts Week. Three weeks after this tragedy, we were considering the farm bill and approving the Virgin River Dinosaur Footprint Preserve. This week, we are looking at Fast Track trading authority, more tax breaks for corporations, and abstinence.

When in the world is this Congress going to deal with what Americans are really concerned about: Will my wife get home safe tonight? Can the kids come home for Thanksgiving? Those are the issues that we ought to be establishing as our priorities.

We will not decrease terrorism by hoping that terrorists abstain from further attacks. We will not be able to trade our way into the hearts of the Taliban, and we will not make our families safer by spending millions of dollars on abstinence education instead of substituting skilled federal law enforcement on our airlines to search the bags and be there when we go through the screening process instead of some minimum-wage worker who could not get a job anywhere else. And of all times, on a day when we are more and more concerned about Anthrax, to fund this increased abstinence education by cutting the Centers for Disease Control borders on insanity in terms of the priorities of this Congress.

It has been 30 days, 30 days since September 11; and while most Americans would have said, if asked, and if they had been here on the floor of this Congress, do something about airline security, do something about bioterrorism, and leave all of this other stuff alone. This Congress is not doing it. This leadership will not permit us to debate the issue of aviation safety and the needs on bioterrorism tonight in this Congress because there is a hard-line idealogical commitment that if we add one worker to the federal workforce, even if they are to screen our bags, even if they are to screen the passengers, that that is somehow a bad thing.

Mr. Chairman, I think we need to put a stop to the old way of dealing with these problems and the old ideologies and recognize that we have a new world after September 11. It is time to reject those old ways. The failure to discuss airline security results from those old ways that some refused to abandon.

Mr. Chairman, at 4:28 this afternoon, another headline out: ''FBI Issues Terrorist Strikes Warning,'' which says that either inside or outside the United States, during the next several days, we may face additional terrorist attacks. Whether they are through Anthrax or through airlines, this Congress ought to be dealing with these security issues are a top priority.

The fact that our National Guard, and now our border guards, are being pulled off the border and put into the airports, the fact that this is happening results from the inaction of this Congress. The failure of this Congress to act, which caused one Member of the other body, Senator MCCAIN from Arizona, to say it last night, this in his words ''a farce''; and today is a continuation of that farce, resulting from our failure to deal with this security priority tonight.

Mr. HAYES. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, let me say that the last time I checked, the item before this Congress at the moment was the Labor-HHS bill. I totally and thoroughly disagree with the gentleman's characterization of the activity of this Congress. Twenty-four hours a day, 7 days a week for the last 30 days we have been working very hard to deal with the issues that he says we are ignoring.

Back to the bill. I want to thank the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. REGULA) and to the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. OBEY) for their consideration in increasing spending for a very crucial issue, which is abstinence-until-marriage funding. I do not know of too many things from a security standpoint that is any more important than the health of our young people today. As we look at ways to increase the funding which will improve health conditions for our young people, I appreciate their concern, their approval of the funds; and I hope if this is not the right place, I am sure that my colleagues will find the right place to do this.

In North Carolina we have a law that we worked very, very hard in a bipartisan fashion to pass; and that law says that we will have in our health education curriculum that abstinence until marriage is the expected standard of behavior. Young people, teenagers in particular, are very, very bright. They respond to proper leadership and good examples. If we tell them that this promiscuous behavior is going to happen, they cannot make the right choices, and then offer them contraceptives which have a 20 percent failure rate, we have not done our duty. We have not protected our young people. But if we say to them, abstinence until marriage is the healthy way to 100 percent provide protection from sexually transmitted diseases and unwanted pregnancies, then I say to my colleagues, we have done our job.

So I want to thank the gentleman from Oklahoma (Mr. ISTOOK) and the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. REGULA) and the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. OBEY) for their attention to this matter. I commend the amendment, I support it very strongly, and I would love to work with my colleagues in any way to make sure we make this happen. By the way, the President in a recent letter does support funding at the $73 million level.

Mrs. LOWEY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong opposition to the Istook amendment. The Labor-HHS bill contains many programs that are very important to the American people. At this time of crisis and increased concern about the public welfare, we have a greater obligation than ever before to prioritize. The chairman of the subcommittee and the ranking member have made an extraordinary effort to bring this good, balanced bill to the floor, and I thank them.

The Istook amendment, I believe, undermines the bipartisan commitment we have made to move this bill without unnecessary conflicts. It would increase funding for a single health education grant program by $33 million. Funding began 1 year ago at $20 million, and the chairman's mark already increased a promised $30 million by an additional $10 million. The gentleman from Oklahoma (Mr. ISTOOK) wants to go from this $40 million program, a 100 percent increase over last year, to $73 million. Not only would this increase eclipse that of any other program in the bill, the gentleman from Oklahoma (Mr. ISTOOK) offsets the cost of this excessive increase by cutting funds for the CDC, the Child Care Development Block grant. His cuts in CDC would force the CDC to make reductions in these areas: infectious diseases, chronic diseases, STDs, breast and cervical cancer. Which should we choose?

I will repeat it again, it means cuts in infectious diseases, chronic diseases, STDs, breast and cervical cancer. This is outrageous and irresponsible.

Equally disturbing, the gentleman from Oklahoma (Mr. ISTOOK) proposes to cut the child care development block grant. These funds are desperately needed to ensure that children receive quality child care, especially low-income families.

I want to make this clear to my colleagues: I know how important this program is to the gentleman from Oklahoma (Mr. ISTOOK). In fact, despite my strong reservations about the effectiveness of teaching abstinence only until marriage, I have worked with my colleague, I have worked with the gentleman from Oklahoma (Mr. ISTOOK) in designing these community-based grants, because I believe abstinence is an important message for our youth. We have worked together.

However, with the tremendous needs, Mr. Chairman, as a result of September 11, and I feel so privileged to serve on a committee that can meet these needs, and we cannot even find enough money for CDC. I know my good chairman, the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. REGULA), would like to do more. So now is not the time, in my judgment, to allocate a three-fold increase, and that means 200 percent, to one health education program.

Even if our Nation was not in the state of emergency, a drastic increase in this program is premature because it has only been in place 1 year. As part of our agreement, and the gentleman from Oklahoma (Mr. ISTOOK) and I had an agreement with the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. OBEY) and our former chair, Mr. Porter, to include rigorous evaluation in this program, an evaluation which would include a range of sexuality programs, not just abstinence-only programs, has not even begun.

Finally, our funding needs for CDC bioterrorism, the public health emergency fund, worker training, unemployment insurance, mental health counseling, to name just a few, are just enormous. They are great. While we each continue our interest and advocacy for particular programs, seeking an increase of this magnitude I feel is inappropriate at this time. So let us give this program some time before providing an even larger funding increase, especially considering our budgetary restraints.

I want to thank the Members again. I hope my colleagues will vote no on this Istook amendment, and I want to appreciate the good work of our Chair, the gentleman from Ohio (Chairman REGULA), for bringing us together working on a bipartisan agreement.

I really feel that it is unfortunate that one of our members of the subcommittee chooses to violate the agreement and ask for a 200 percent, 200 percent increase in this program, which has not been evaluated. It will not be evaluated until 2005.

I would be delighted to work with my colleague to make sure that we continue to look at this program very carefully.

Mrs. MALONEY of New York. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to be associated with the comments and remarks of my colleague, the gentlewoman from New York (Mrs. LOWEY), and really every Member that has risen in opposition to the Istook amendment.

Mr. Chairman, since the September 11 attacks, the objectives of our Nation have changed dramatically. We are focused on combatting terrorism, enhancing intelligence, and upgrading our public health system. Each of these efforts costs money and deserves additional funding.

The Istook amendment would give $33 million, a three-fold increase, to a narrowly-focused program that puts teens at risk and is rooted in wishful thinking. Abstinence-only education works only when it is combined with comprehensive sexuality education. Evidence shows that comprehensive sexuality education helps delay sexual relations among young people, and increases contraceptive use among those who become sexually active.

Telling independent-minded teenagers what not to do and depriving them of information they might use to decide is a recipe for unplanned pregnancies and sexually-transmitted diseases.

Ninety-three percent of Americans support teaching sexuality education. We should follow the numbers and reject the Istook amendment.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. ISTOOK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. ISTOOK. Mr. Chairman, I think it is very important that we give credit where credit is due. The gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. OBEY) and the gentlewoman from New York (Mrs. LOWEY) earlier mentioned that they have helped get this program off the ground. Despite this opposition to this amendment, they deserve credit for that. I want to acknowledge that publicly.

However, as the gentleman from Wisconsin said when someone else was speaking earlier, I would rather have their support than their praise. I would like to have the gentlewoman's support now, not just her praise for getting the program under way but her support at this time, as well.

I hear people argue, well, we really cannot afford this extra $33 million. Mr. Chairman, this is in a bill with discretionary spending, not even counting the mandatory, discretionary spending of $123 billion, $11 billion more than last year, and $6.8 billion over the President's request. It has a half-a-dozen accounts in it that are more than $100 million over the President's request. It has over a dozen accounts in it that are more than $100 million over last year's amount.

Then we are told, on one of the major problems of our time, with teenage pregnancies and sexually-transmitted diseases, with 3 million young Americans each year getting sexually-transmitted diseases, 3 million teens, we are told with all this money in the bill, it is a good idea, but we really cannot afford it.

Give me a break. It is a question of where our priorities are. Do Members want to fund the things that reinforce America's values? Do Members want to fund the things that are having the first success in three decades in combatting teenagers who are involved sexually, get disease, get pregnant, drop out of school, turn to alcohol, turn to drugs, do not get their education, cannot support themselves, go on public assistance, raise kids in that environment? Is that what we want?

Mr. Chairman, if we had more of these abstinence education programs, we would not need all the other billions of dollars in this bill. Yet, I hear people say, it is a good idea, but we really cannot afford it, despite all the other billions of dollars in the bill. The real question is getting our priorities straight.

We had $2 billion that was added to this piece of legislation in the last week. Of course we can afford this.

The President's support? This is the letter dated September 24 from his office, the Executive Office of the President, Office of Management and Budget: ''The President remains strongly committed to funding parity between abstinence education and teen contraception. With this in mind, the administration would support efforts in Congress to increase funding to $73 million for abstinence education activities under the administration's title V special programs of regional and national significance within the Health and Human Services Department.''

That is what this amendment does. The President has talked to us about getting parity. That is what this amendment is about. In a bill with all these billions of dollars, we do not have $33 million to put into this high priority; $33 million that prevents disease, that prevents children being raised in poverty?

I heard someone say, well, we have not done enough evaluations on these abstinence education programs. These family planning programs, title X programs, we have had since 1971, for 30 years; they have never been evaluated. We spend over $200 million a year on them. We have not evaluated them. But we are told that is a reason for not promoting abstinence education, when teen pregnancy rates have only started coming down once these programs got under way.

It is time we put more support into them. I would like to have the support, not just the verbal support but the support in votes, of people that have indeed helped to get this program under way. It needs a little bit of nurture and nourishment right now. The demand is huge in the United States. They are overwhelmed with applicants for these grants. They cannot fill that demand.

Let us save some kids. Let us help people not get into this cycle of disease and poverty. Let us support this amendment. I move its adoption, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. REGULA. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that further debate on the pending amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma (Mr. ISTOOK) and any amendments thereto be limited to 40 minutes, to be equally divided and controlled by the proponent and myself, the opponent. We could have less.

Mr. OBEY. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I would simply ask if we could get an idea how many Members actually have a burning desire to speak on this. Then we might be able to shrink it to less than that, which I think everybody would appreciate.

Mr. REGULA. We have no further speakers on this side.

Mr. OBEY. There are three on this side. Would it be acceptable to have 3 minutes apiece?

Mr. REGULA. Mr. Chairman, strike my original unanimous consent request.

I ask unanimous consent that further debate on the pending amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma (Mr. ISTOOK) and any amendments thereto be limited to 20 minutes, to be equally divided and controlled by the proponent and myself, the opponent.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. REGULA. Mr. Chairman, I yield my 10 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. OBEY).

Mr. OBEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the distinguished gentlewoman from California (Ms. ESHOO), who has worked a long, long time on one of the issues involved in this amendment.

Ms. ESHOO. Mr. Chairman, I thank the distinguished ranking member and the distinguished chairman of the committee for their work and for the bipartisan bill that they have brought forward. Mr. Chairman, this is never an easy bill for a ranking member and a chairman to work out, so I salute them, and I recognize the work that has gone into this.

But I rise in opposition to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma (Mr. ISTOOK). Let me tell the Members why. The amendment cuts the Centers for Disease Control. It is the account, not an account but the account that funds the CDC's disease detectives who are right now looking for anthrax in Florida.

It speaks to the dollars that are spent for controlling infectious diseases: tuberculosis control, research into birth defects and childhood disabilities, and asthma treatment and prevention.

Mr. Chairman, I want to zero in on another area of this budget, and what this amendment would essentially cut and really hurt, and really hurt. That is the issue of breast and cervical cancer screening.

In the last Congress, if there was one thing that I worked harder on than anything else with my Democratic and Republican colleagues, it was to come up with a bill that would take care of those women that are underinsured or not insured at all, because when the CDC screened for breast and cervical cancer, that was one part of it, but the part that the Congress had never finished, had never done, was the next chapter. That was that once there was detection, that we would help them.

We cannot afford to have that effort go down the drain. Mr. Bliley was the chairman of the committee. There were over 300 cosponsors to that bill. It was a great bipartisan effort. Everyone embraced it. They understood that we could in fact take the next step and make a difference for women and their families in this country. I think it is one of the great accomplishments of the last Congress.

This amendment hurts that. It does not have to be the case. The gentleman's amendment is not bragging about how much the 100 percent increase over last year is already taken care of in the bipartisan bill, going from $20 million to $40 million.

Maybe that is not my top priority, what the gentleman is doing, but I salute him for what he cares about. But do not do this at the cost of the anthrax cases that we need to look into, breast and cervical cancer screening, and the care of women that absolutely need it and depend upon it.

There is tuberculosis control. These are all things that the American people rise up and say, good job, Congress.

Vote against the amendment. It hurts. It is not necessary, and it is wrong.

□ 1815

Mr. ISTOOK. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

I simply want to point out, Mr. Chairman, that the account that is the offset of this is an account that has received an increase of $1.1 billion. It has received an increase in excess of the President's request. We are not sacrificing anything of value to make sure that we provide for abstinence education and fund it accordingly.

Mr. Chairman, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana (Mr. HOSTETTLER).

Mr. HOSTETTLER. Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong support of this amendment and wish to commend my colleague, the gentleman from Oklahoma (Mr. ISTOOK), for his constant support on this issue. This amendment does not seek to address the constitutionality or morality questions inherent in the abstinence education debate. Rather, this amendment seeks to promote the health and safety of our children.

Each year, three million teens contract sexually transmitted diseases; and nearly one million become pregnant. These statistics, Mr. Chairman, are simply appalling. However, as appalling as these statistics are, we must note that these rates have declined in recent years. According to the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, abstinence programs have played a role in the decline in teenage birth rates, which have dropped by 22 percent since 1991. As the CDC states, ''Many initiatives have focused on the prevention of pregnancy through abstinence and many teenagers have heard this message.''

Currently, the Federal Government spends more than $5 billion per year on HIV/AIDS, STD, and unintended pregnancy prevention combined.

Most of these dollars go towards the provision of services such as screening, pregnancy tests, free contraceptives and condoms and referrals. About $15 million goes towards promoting ''safe sex'' messages and education.

Federally funded abstinence education programs receive only about $80 million per year, practically all of it promoting the fact that sexual abstinence is the only method to be completely safe for preventing unwanted pregnancies and diseases.

The need to support abstinence education is significant. More than 700 State and community-based abstinence education programs are funded through title V. Much of this money is provided to volunteer organizations that have annual budgets of less than $20,000. A small grant of $2,500 or $5,000 means they can purchase some curriculum, some videotapes, maybe a combination VCR/TV, and devote instructors to serve and educate kids about how sex can wait and that many of the consequences of early sexual activity are incurable and deadly.

Mr. Chairman, Federal abstinence education funding is making a difference in my home State of Indiana. For example, the Peers Educating Peers, or PEP program educates adolescents about sexual health in nearly 20 Indiana counties serving more than 10,000 adolescents per year. PEP uses high school role models to educate junior high school age students about refusal skills, open communication, and responsible decision-making.

PEP has demonstrated its effectiveness as teen birth rates have dropped an average of 43 percent in the five counties where the program has been operating the longest.

Because of a SPRANS, or Special Projects of Regional and National Significance grant, the PEP program will expand their successful program to Evansville in my congressional district where the teen birth rate is 40 births per thousand, the second highest birth rate in Indiana.

This amendment, which would increase funding for abstinence education, makes both common sense and public health sense. It makes common sense because abstinence education works, and I have already highlighted the success of programs like PEP in Indiana.

It makes public health sense because Federal abstinence education funding goes towards prevention of sexual activity, just like public health messages like ''wash your hands,'' ''do not smoke,'' or ''do not drink and drive'' prevents communicable diseases, long-term disease, accidents and death.

Finally, it puts the money where it is needed. The CDC reports that about half of our children are sexually abstinent and about half of our children have become sexually active. If those are the proportions, according to CDC, then let Federal support reflect those proportions.

This amendment to increase abstinence funding is a good first step to achieve a fair distribution of resources based on the needs of young people.

As President Bush has stated, ''For children to realize their dreams, they must learn the value of abstinence. We must send them the message that of the many decisions they will make in their lives, choosing to avoid early sex is one of the most important. We must stress that abstinence is not just about saying no to sex; it is about saying yes to a happier, healthier future.''

I urge my colleagues to support the proposed amendment and provide increased funding for abstinence education.

Mr. OBEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes and 45 seconds to the distinguished gentleman from Washington (Mr. INSLEE).

Mr. INSLEE. Mr. Chairman, this is, I am sure, a sincere amendment; but it probably sets a record for ill timing. Because on the day where I just walked out of the cloak room and I saw CNN running a headline that the FBI is warning that we should be on the highest alert for terrorist attacks, on a day when the country is extremely concerned about our ability to deal with bioterrorism, we have a Member amendment on the floor of the House to cut money out of the CDC people whose job it is to find out if there is dangerous bacteria in our environment.

I cannot imagine a worse timed amendment, but I think there is a bigger problem with what we are considering on the floor of the House than just that. The fact of the matter is our House is on fire, and we are dealing with all these ideological issues. We should be dealing with the security of the United States of America now that we are 30 days past this tragedy.

Let me tell my colleagues why that is of concern. When my colleagues and I get on a plane next Friday or tomorrow to go back to our districts, did my colleagues know that almost all of the bags that go into the belly of the airplane we get on will not be screened for explosive devices? Over 90 percent of the bags that are going to be in the luggage compartment of the plane we get on on Friday will not have been screened for bombs.

Now, what are we doing about that problem today? Nothing, not a single thing for a month after this terrorist attack. We have not done a dang thing on this issue.

What have we done? We gave $15 billion to the airlines. Have we done anything to require employees to walk through magnetometers so they cannot carry bombs on to airplanes. We have not done anything.

The fact of the matter is these ideological concerns are trumping the security interest of the United States. We have got a bill to deal with airline security so that the people who guard the magnetometers will have some modicum of training, will get maybe a little more than minimum wage.

Many people think they ought to be Federal employees. I think they ought to be Federal employees like FBI, like Marshals, like fire department. But these ideological concerns are keeping even a vote on the floor of this House to do anything like that. I just hope that, number one, this amendment will fail; and I hope that the leadership of this House will bring to the floor of the House in quick order, starting at about noon tomorrow, some security bills so this House can vote on them because that ought to be the order of the day.

Mr. ISTOOK. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. PITTS).

Mr. PITTS. Mr. Chairman, this amendment does not take money out of the accounts for bioterrorism. I rise in support of the Istook amendment because I believe we should honor the President's pledge to increase funding for abstinence education to a level equal for funding for title X abortion counseling programs.

Mr. Chairman, over the past few decades, we have been subjected to the propaganda of the safe sex and the abortion lobbies. They would have us believe that more contraceptives are the answer to the problems of sexually transmitted disease and teen pregnancy despite evidence to the contrary. We need to start teaching our young people the truth. Sex outside of marriage is risky business, and it has physical and emotional consequences. There is no substitute for abstinence when it comes to avoiding problems associated with premarital sex.

We need to stop lying to our Nation's youth and stop assuming that promiscuity is an inherent part of adolescent life. Instead, through absence education, programs which have proven to be successful, we need to promote their health and safety. We need to encourage them to exercise self-control. We need to teach them about the benefits of saving sex until marriage. If we believe that children can exercise self-control to avoid smoking, what about premarital sex?

Our Nation's children deserve more than free contraception and abortion counseling. Our Nation's children deserve our love and our commitment that we will help them seek the best future for themselves, a future that is free of the emotional and the physical pitfalls that accompany premarital sex.

Mr. Chairman, I urge my colleagues to support the Istook amendment to increase the funding for abstinence programs.

Mr. OBEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. TIERNEY)

Mr. TIERNEY. Mr. Chairman, I thank the ranking member for yielding me time.

Mr. Chairman, I want to say to my colleague who is presenting this motion that, in fact, he has already done well what he purports to represent. He has increased the amount of his package well over what it was last year. The base bill does that, and he can feel that he has had an accomplishment there. But when we talk about priorities, and I understand that is a priority of his, and as I said he has addressed it, America's priority right now is security.

If you walk down any street, any main street in my district or anyone else's district, people are talking about security. They want to make sure that they are safe in their homes, safe in their neighborhoods, their children are safe in their schools, that our water is safe, that our transportation is safe.

They are also talking about security of their income. Thousands and thousands of people have lost their employment as a result of what went on September 11; and those are issues which should, in fact, be a priority of this country.

We have done nothing about them since September 11. We had an opportunity when we bailed out the airline industry, excessively in my opinion, when they could only identify $2 billion worth of losses occasioned by the activities of September 11, but got $5 billion. We had an opportunity then to do something for people that became unemployed, to make sure they had health care for their families, to make sure they had an adequate income so they could sustain themselves and their families and their communities. We had an opportunity then to do something about security on our airlines, in particular, as well as other places.

The CDC does need money so it can make sure we are safe from anthrax and other problems like that. We need to know that the pilots are secure in their cockpit and that our luggage is getting checked. We need to know our water is safe and that we are being protected. These are going to be costly matters.

When you talk about the American people's priorities, rather than be debating on what we have been debating here, excessively over this bill's base amounts, we would better spend our time addressing what people want, a job or employment security or income security, a way to know they will have health care coverage for their family in a time of need, and a way to know that when they travel they will be safe.

Mr. Chairman, I suggest that that is what this Congress should have been doing over the past several weeks. It is a disgrace that we have not been doing it. We should get on to that business now. That is America's priority.

Mr. ISTOOK. Mr. Chairman, how much time is remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma (Mr. ISTOOK) has 3½ minutes remaining. The gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. OBEY) has 2 minutes remaining.

Mr. ISTOOK. Mr. Chairman, does the gentleman from Wisconsin have the right to close?

The CHAIRMAN. That is correct.

Mr. ISTOOK. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, we are here because we need to be here, because we are trying to take care of the things that we are responsible to take care of, not only the security of the United States of America but the welfare of its people. That is why we have this bill on the floor. Yes, we could spend all of our time talking about foreign affairs; but if we did, we would not be trying to have normalcy. And, yes, it is normal that we get on the floor of this House, we have debates, we have disagreements, and we have bills such as the annual appropriation bill for the Departments of Labor, Health and Human Services and Education.

If we did not have that, then things such as the Centers for Disease Control and public health programs would not have their funding and where would the welfare of the Nation be?

Right now the congressional authorizations for these measures expires unless we take action such as passing this bill. So of course we should be here. We should be talking about the issues that are timeless and timely, and this is among them.

We have, Mr. Chairman, according to the Centers for Disease Control that is charged with, among other things, trying to stop the sexually transmitted diseases which this amendment addresses. According to CDC and the Institute of Medicine, 12 million new cases are reported each year of sexually transmitted diseases, one-fourth of them among teenagers.

It is 89 percent of all reported diseases that constitute the top 10 in the whole U.S. of all diseases. Twenty-nine percent of those were infected with chlamydia, which causes sterility. Young women often do not find out until they reach their childbearing years they are not able to have kids now because they got involved in teenage sex, they got chlamydia, now they cannot have kids. Twenty-two percent had herpes, 32 percent had HPV, human papilloma virus, which causes 80 percent of all genital cancers.

The Institute of Medicine concluded public awareness and knowledge regarding STDs is dangerously low. It is unfocused. The disproportionate impact on young people has not been measured.

That is what we are trying to get at, Mr. Chairman. We are trying to make sure that kids get the message that ''safe sex'' does not stop these sexually transmitted diseases. They happen with or without use of contraceptives, with or without use of condoms or other devices trying to prevent pregnancy. The only sure message is to say, ''wait until you are married.''

That is what abstinence education is about. It is the best course; it is the safest course. And this Congress needs to get on course, not giving it just minor funding within a huge bill, with huge increases in so many other programs, with more than twice as much being spent to promote these safe sex programs, as they are called, as to promote abstinence.

Let us bring some equality into this. This amendment is what the Bush administration says is what we need to bring parity. I think they may have underestimated it. I think we probably need about $15 million more for parity, but I am not arguing that point, Mr. Chairman. I am arguing equal treatment, a level playing field, so that there is some reinforcement from Washington, D.C. and from groups that we help to fund to get the message out and reinforce what we teach our kids at school: wait until marriage.

It is the best course and the safest course. I move adoption of the amendment.

Mr. OBEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1½ minutes to the gentlewoman from California (Ms. HARMAN).

Ms. HARMAN. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time, and I appreciate the opportunity to speak against the Istook amendment.

Mr. Chairman, it is clear that the offsets to this amendment will hurt our counterterrorism effort, something most of us, all of us, feel passionately about. It is also unfortunate that an issue on which everyone agrees, the need to prevent teen pregnancy, is presented in this amendment in an ideological form that splits us and hurts achieving the goal.

As a mother of two daughters and two sons, I know that abstinence-only education does not work. What does work? One, basic accurate information on the risks of teen pregnancy; two, education on types of and proper use of contraception; and, three, the message that abstinence is the only 100 percent effective way to prevent teen pregnancy.

Preventing teen pregnancy still matters, even in the post-September 11 world, but this amendment is the wrong solution. Vote ''no.''

Mr. OBEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself the balance of my time.

Mr. Chairman, we have had some 14 amendments on this side of the aisle that we have discouraged from offering today. I do not believe we have offered a single one from this side of the aisle. I would urge that we have the same response from all quarters of the House.

When, in fact, we measure accurately the amount of money in title I which is aimed at teenagers, the resulting numbers will demonstrate that we spend at least as much on abstinence directed to teenagers as we provide in direct family planning services of the traditional variety aimed at teenagers. The gentleman has already achieved parity, and this bill gives him twice as large an increase in the programs he is for as we have in the other traditional family planning programs.

Mr. Chairman, I urge a ''no'' vote on the amendment. Let us keep this bill together and get out of here at a reasonable time.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma (Mr. ISTOOK).

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. ISTOOK. Mr. Chairman, I demand a recorded vote, and pending that, I make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The CHAIRMAN. Pursuant to clause 6 of rule XVIII, further proceedings on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma (Mr. ISTOOK) will be postponed.

The point of no quorum is considered withdrawn.

Are there further amendments?

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. ISTOOK

Mr. ISTOOK. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. ISTOOK:

At the end of the bill (before the short title, insert the following:)

SEC. (a) None of the funds made available in this Act may be used to implement, administer, or enforce Executive Order 13166.

(b) The limitation established in subsection (a) shall not apply to an agency that is subject to Executive Order 12866 after it has complied with the requirements of such Executive Order, which has been issued pursuant to law.

Mr. ISTOOK. Mr. Chairman, I might mention that I am certainly amenable to any unanimous consent request to limit total debate time on this measure.

Mr. Chairman, this amendment states that until the Office of Management and Budget issues a cost-benefit analysis of a series of Federal regulations, those regulations are to be held in abeyance. They are what is commonly called ''limited English proficiency'' regulations.

What is all this about? It is about an executive order that was issued last August and regulations that were issued pursuant to it mandating that not only Federal agencies but also State and local agencies, businesses, nonprofit groups, anybody who has received any funds to administer or handle or be involved with a Federal program must make all vital documents, it says, available in multiple translations; basically into any language group involving 3,000 people or more.

Mr. Chairman, there are over 200 language groups in the United States involving 3,000 people or more. If we are required to translate everything into each one of these languages, the average cost for billions of pages is $40 a page per language. Multiply $40 per page by over 200 languages, by billions of documents, and my colleagues can begin to see the nature of this problem, the huge unfunded mandate that this puts on businesses and on local governments. In fact, nine or 10 States officially have petitioned for these not to go into effect because of the unfunded mandate.

After all, Mr. Chairman, there are some large language groups; and we have plenty of efforts to try to accommodate them. This amendment does not restrict anyone from trying to accommodate a language group or to make something available in another language. It simply removes the Federal mandate that we have to do so in this unlimited number of languages. It lets common sense prevail instead. It follows what the U.S. Supreme Court ruled just April of this year is the law of the land: there is no right to force somebody to translate civil documents or civil activities for you.

Now, if an individual is charged in a court proceeding, yes, they will make sure they have a translation as a defendant. But we are not talking about that. There is no right, constitutional or statutory. Yet, usurping the powers of this Congress, of this body, this executive order and the regulations issued under it are putting that burden on people all over the country.

Imagine being called up for a violation of Federal law because you did not provide a translation, for example, into western Farsi, with a million people in the United States speaking it; or because you did not provide a translation into Kabuverdianu, that has hundreds of thousands of people that speak it. My colleagues can pick whatever language they want, I am not going to pick on any of them, but with over 200 languages, to be told, well, if there are more than 3,000 people affected, you have to translate all vital documents, anything that this person might need, any documents made generally available to the public.

Mr. Chairman, we have thousands of informational brochures, bits of information, guidance that go to people constantly. How much are we going to pay for this? We ought to wait until we have the cost-benefit analysis from the Office of Management and Budget. That is their job. They ought to be doing it. We should not go into this thing blind.

I realize there will be some people, Mr. Chairman, who talk about constituents they have that are not proficient in English. I understand that. But that does not mean that we go out and put this mandate out there to try to solve the problem.

The American Medical Association has said these will cause doctors to stop seeing Medicare patients and Medicaid patients because they cannot afford the cost of paying for a translator. The regulations even say it is not good enough if they have a family member come with them to the doctor to do a translation. Oh no, that is not permissible. The doctor has to go out and hire a translator at hundreds of dollars an hour that costs more than he is reimbursed, usually something about $30 or $40, more than he is reimbursed for seeing the patient in the first place. That is why the AMA, as well as so many States, wants us to pull back on this.

Let us make a common-sense test. Let us apply the law under an earlier executive order that says OMB is going to do cost-benefit analyses when we have legislation that is this far-reaching.

I move the adoption of the amendment, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. REGULA. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that further debate on the pending amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma (Mr. ISTOOK), and any amendments thereto, be limited to 20 minutes, to be equally divided and controlled by the proponent and myself, the opponent.

Mr. OBEY. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, could I ask that the gentleman amend that to 12 minutes per side?

Mr. REGULA. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. OBEY. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. REGULA. Mr. Chairman, I will agree to 24 minutes.

Mr. OBEY. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

Mr. REGULA. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw my original request and to amend it so that further debate on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma (Mr. ISTOOK), and any amendments thereto, be limited to 24 minutes, to be equally divided and controlled by the proponent and myself, the opponent.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma (Mr. ISTOOK) and the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. REGULA) each will control 12 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. REGULA).

Mr. REGULA. Mr. Chairman, I yield 12 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. OBEY) will control the time.

There was no objection.

Mr. OBEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentlewoman from California (Ms. PELOSI).

Ms. PELOSI. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time; and once again I want to take the opportunity to commend our new chairman, the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. REGULA), for his first Labor-HHS bill on the floor; the ranking member of this subcommittee and the full committee, the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. OBEY); and the chairman of the full committee, the gentleman from Florida (Mr. YOUNG), for their great leadership in crafting this legislation and bringing it to the floor.

I rise in defense of the committee position and in opposition to the Istook amendment. Mr. Chairman, this guidance which is contain in the bill does not create any new requirements or place any new mandates on recipients of Federal funds. It simply clarifies the Department's long-standing policy so that recipients have clear, concise, and constructive information about their responsibilities under title IV.

This information helps grantees be sure that they are in compliance with the law, as it has been in effect for over 30 years. This guidance is intended to be flexible and recognizes that there are no one-size-fits-all solutions. The guidance on limited English proficiency also clarifies that recipients only have to undertake reasonable steps to ensure meaningful access and that recipients are not required to take steps that would incur unreasonable costs or burdens.

This amendment ignores the positive impacts of limited English proficiency. They ignore the Department of Justice's reasonable direction. Many limited-English proficiency persons work in some of the lowest paid jobs, are more subject to abusive employment situations, and need more help with complicated government bureaucracies.

For example, a Cambodian refugee worked as a landscaper to support his family of five children. After he was laid off, he made repeated attempts to file an unemployment claim. He could not communicate with his State agency, and often received contradictory information. For most of the winter, he was without income and unemployment insurance compensation.

The costs of providing assistance to persons who have limited English speaking abilities does not have to be expensive. In California, the limited-English speaking population is estimated to be over 3 million people. Since 1973, we have had a State law with more specific interpretation of translation requirements than title IV, which this guidance addresses; and this law has not created a burdensome financial strain on the State of California's Department of Social Services. That department spends a total of $648,312 to staff an internal team of 13 employees to translate documents into Spanish, Chinese, Cambodian, Russian and Vietnamese; and not that much more in outside contracts for vendors for translation into other languages.

This is a very small cost for an $18 billion social service budget. This guidance simply fulfills the goal that Secretary Chao expressed in her welcoming ceremony remarks, making sure that no worker gets left behind.

Mr. Chairman, I urge my colleagues to vote ''no'' on the Istook amendment and defend the committee's position.

Mr. ISTOOK. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. REGULA).

Mr. REGULA. Mr. Chairman, I reluctantly rise in opposition to this amendment. The committee understands the concerns raised by the amendment, but now is not the time to proceed with this amendment. I understand that this executive order is under review by the administration.

Furthermore, the committee report accompanying the bill recommends that both Secretary Chao at the Department of Labor and Secretary Thompson at the Department of Health and Human Services, quote, ''carefully review the guidance and revisit its implications, impacts and consequences both practically and fiscally.''

I think we should give the administration time to address this in the regular order and not adopt the amendment of the gentleman to shut off funds. I might add that the administration will be able to address it with a subsequent executive order once they have had time to review it. I think out of courtesy we owe the administration time to review the implications of this order. Therefore, I think the amendment would be premature and should be rejected.

Mr. ISTOOK. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, with all due respect to the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. REGULA), this amendment does give them time. It just says until they do their job, the rest of the country should not be put under this incredible burden.

Right now there are groups that are being pursued by HHS, pursued by Federal agencies for supposed noncompliance with these regulations. We ought to say you do not go after agencies pursuing these regulations until we do that cost-benefit analysis. That is exactly what the amendment does.

Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from California (Mr. DOOLITTLE).

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Mr. Chairman, Executive Order 13–166 issued by President Clinton is unwise, illegal and unconstitutional; and I urge the Bush administration to rescind it forthwith. We would be doing them a favor to avoid all of their complex review by simply adopting the Istook amendment.

We cannot possibly impose on counties and cities and local jurisdictions, States, and indeed on the Federal agencies the policy inherent in this executive order which on its face is unreasonable. There are 6,800 languages in the world today, many of these present in the United States. Even the U.N. only has six official languages; and here in the absence of congressional action, we already have the Federal agencies setting forth the requirements of this executive order and beginning to implement them.

For example, regulations applying Executive Order 13–166 have already been issued by the Department of Health and Human Services, the Department of Transportation, the Department of the Treasury, the Department of Justice, the Department of Labor, the Corporation for National Community Service, General Services Administration, Consumer Products Safety Commission, the National Aeronautics and Space Administration, the National Council on Disability, the National Science Foundation, and the Pension Benefit Guaranty Corporation.

Mr. Chairman, we need to bring this to a halt now. We can do something reasonable. In the absence of this executive order, something reasonable is already set in place. But requiring all of our States and localities to struggle to spend money they do not have, to produce materials in any language any person requests up to I suppose 6,800 languages, is unreasonable and outrageous on its face.

The gentleman from Oklahoma (Mr. ISTOOK) is to be commended for this amendment. We should have done this long ago, but I guess this is our first opportunity since it has come up on this appropriations bill. I urge Members to support his amendment.

Mr. OBEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Texas (Mr. GONZALEZ).

Mr. GONZALEZ. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to this amendment. The first thought that comes to my mind, are we debating the same executive order? I have heard allegations and assertions made from the other side that truly are misrepresentative.

What we are talking about with this executive order, and the whole basis of the executive order was accountability and responsibility of those who are providing services and receiving Federal dollars in providing those services to make sure that they effectively deliver those services. This is what it is all about.

The other thing, the other matter that really stands out is where have we been. The census tells us much of what is going on in this country. While individuals are perfecting their ability to speak English, while we have these clustered groups of individuals from different countries, they still require services in a language that they would understand for their benefit. That is why we are providing it.

Mr. Chairman, prior to this amendment we were arguing abstinence and how we teach it, how we promote it. If my colleagues had their way, they would basically be espousing abstinence in a language never understood by the individual that Members seek to assist. This is what is so crazy about this whole debate.

There are other matters I think which have been misrepresented. The Sandoval case does not stand for the proposition that Americans do not have a legal right to have everything in a particular language. It simply states an individual citizen does not have a right to bring a cause of action, but that the Federal Government does.

The gentleman from Texas (Mr. RODRIGUEZ) and I met with the members and representatives of the American Medical Association who had certain concerns. Once we discussed it and they understood the intent of the executive order, it was something that was acceptable. It was something that was doable.

We are making it impossible by scaring individuals out there that they will never be able to comply with the intent of this executive order. That is an unfair characterization.

The executive order and the implementing guidance that follow it stress the importance of complying with title VI of the Civil Rights Act without unduly burdening the fundamental mission of the agency. That is the standard. This goes contrary to the whole motive behind it. Do not stand in the way now with misrepresentations. Face the facts. Face the reality of our society, and let us deliver those services in a meaningful way.

Mr. ISTOOK. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, let me first mention, the gentleman from Texas (Mr. GONZALEZ) may or may not have read the executive order and all of the regulations that have been issued pursuant to it from a number of agencies. I have read them, and they get frightening in their impact.

Rather than being a reasonable effort to try to communicate with people that may be receiving Federal services, it puts an affirmative burden on groups that participate in a Federal program, such as the police department or county health center, whatever it may be. It puts an affirmative burden on them to take all documents that they make available to the public, as well as everything that may relate to an individual, and translate it into what becomes an unlimited number of languages. That is where the unlimited expense comes from.

Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Colorado (Mr. TANCREDO).

Mr. TANCREDO. Mr. Chairman, Executive Order 13–166 is essentially another attempt to construct an even higher level of the Tower of Babel. Not only is that executive order an unfunded mandate, it is incredibly wrongheaded.

To encourage non-English speakers to stay outside the mainstream of America and thereby indirectly condemn them to a life of impoverishment is essentially despicable. As the population of non-English speakers increases, so too will the pressure to divide this Nation along language lines. It will also contribute to the increased balkanization of the Nation. We do none of these folks a favor by encouraging their exclusion from the majority society.

Mr. Chairman, I urge support of the Istook amendment.

Mr. OBEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute 55 seconds to the gentleman from Texas (Mr. RODRIGUEZ).

Mr. RODRIGUEZ. Mr. Chairman, contrary to what is being said, if what the gentleman was saying is accurate, I will be there for the gentleman.

When the gentleman from Texas (Mr. GONZALEZ) and I met with the medical association, we discovered what they were being told was not practical and it was not correct.

We are not saying that we ought to consider those 200 languages. That is not practicable. We are not saying if there is one person who is Spanish speaking they ought to be responsive to them. That is not what the law says. If Members look at the law, it is very specific. The law says specifically that the size of the limited English proficient population that is served needs to be considered. So allow the administration that opportunity.

Secondly, it says the frequency of the visits in terms of the hospitals. Most important, it also talks about the severity. If the person has tuberculosis, cancer, and it is serious, there has to be a real need to make sure that that person understands if it is a life-or-death situation, so depending on the severity of the case and the numbers of the population.

Mr. Chairman, I will again tell the gentleman that I will be with him if they start forcing agencies to do it in the number of languages that the gentleman says. That is not the intent. In addition, this is not new. It is the 1964 civil rights legislation. What this does is allows the Government, in this case the administration, an opportunity to establish the guidelines that allow them to put it into effect. It is nothing to get all bent out of shape over and to raise all of those contrary items because that is not the case. If it is, I promise the gentleman that I will be there for him in ensuring that the administration does not do that.

In addition, let me state that it is going to be very important that as we look at this, that we also consider the seriousness of the situation. I had a case of a person who was told in English that they were positive for AIDS, and that person understood positive as everything being okay.

Mr. ISTOOK. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

I would like the gentleman to be aware that the guidelines issued by the Department of Justice on the same day as this executive order, and the executive order expressly incorporated the DOJ guidelines, I quote from the DOJ's document they titled Commonly Asked Questions and Answers Regarding Executive Order 13166:

''Programs that serve a few, or even one LEP person are still subject to the title VI obligation.''

If there is even one person that speaks some language other than English and wants things translated, the Department of Justice says that one person is enough to invoke this requirement. That is not common sense. That is not meeting a major public demand. That is going way overboard, when they require this multitude, these millions if not billions, of pages to be translated into an unlimited number of languages.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. OBEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute and 55 seconds to the gentleman from Guam (Mr. UNDERWOOD).

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

Mr. Chairman, this issue has been posed as one where we are going to subject the Federal Government and State and local governments and everyone else to a multitude of languages. I think we heard the number 6,800, all the remaining languages in the world that have speakers represented in this country.

I speak one of those very small languages. I think we number about 100,000 in the entire world, and about 50,000 inside the continental United States and I can assure everyone that under these guidelines, I have no ability to force anybody to produce documents in the Chamorro language. This is simply about access and the protection of civil rights. This is what this is all about.

We have lots of limited English proficient people in this country. Instead of spending our time trying to deny them access to health care, instead of putting forth more barriers to their exercise of their civil rights, we ought to be contemplating how to facilitate that while they are learning English, while they acquire the kind of English that is necessary to survive in this society. This is not about a right to use a certain language. This is about a time-honored, court-tested provision emanating from the 1964 Civil Rights Act which says that when national origin and the language that you use, if that can be used as a way to impede your access to the resources of this country, then the government is required to take a look at those processes in order to allow you that access. This is what this is about. It is about access.

Mr. ISTOOK. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 1 minute.

Mr. Chairman, it has taken a lot of time to review that executive order and these regulations. I would submit, Mr. Chairman, that were this actually something that had been part of the civil rights acts adopted in the 1960s, it would not have taken until August of 2000 for someone to notice and start saying, now we have this new requirement. Because that is what happened, August 8 of 2000, when former President Clinton issued the executive order, had the guidelines of the Justice Department that were issued the same day incorporated into them, and set in motion a whole series of midnight actions. Most of the Federal agencies that adopted these did so on January 17, just before Inauguration Day. That is an inherited problem for the current administration and one they still have not come to grips with.

This simply says, do not put your multibillion-dollar unfunded mandate burden on the rest of the country until you get the cost-benefit study done on this. That is what you are supposed to do on major new initiatives and that is what this was, a major new initiative.

Mr. OBEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 55 seconds to the gentleman from California (Mr. HONDA).

Mr. HONDA. Mr. Chairman, what I have is going to take a little bit more than the time allotted. It is interesting in this country, in America, we talk about diversity and understanding. We also talk about inclusion rather than exclusion. This amendment is exclusionary. What the executive order does from 1964, as the gentleman had explained, was that this is fine-tuning, and people need direction.

As an administrator myself, when I take a law, an administrative regulation, the right to be able to extend it even further is our prerogative. That is probably what that department did when you read that memo. That is all about service. That is about client service. We in this office, we in our jobs, we understand client service and we want to extend ourselves the best that we can.

The real point of this in terms of language is comprehension. If you do not have comprehension, you are not going to be able to take medicine properly. You are not going to be able to understand things properly. As an educator, comprehensive input is key.

Mr. ISTOOK. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Maryland (Mr. BARTLETT).

Mr. BARTLETT of Maryland. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of this amendment for two reasons. First of all, in a former life, I was a small businessperson who did contract work with the Federal Government. The imposition of this on small business would just be devastating.

Secondly, and this is probably the best reason to support this amendment. English is the language of commerce in our country. To encourage people to not learn English does a great disservice to them. That is exactly what this executive order does. It tells people, ''You don't have to learn English, because we'll communicate with you in your language.'' That just is not fair to them. If they are not conversant in English, they are not using the language which is the language of commerce in this country. As is so often the case when we try to help people, we really hurt them. What this does to those who are not fluent in English is really hurt them because we discourage them from learning English.

This is a very good amendment and it is especially good for those for whom English is not their primary language because they need to be encouraged to learn English, not discouraged from learning English because it is the language of commerce in this country. And the sooner they learn it, the better they will do in this country. It is unfair of us to discourage them from learning it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma (Mr. ISTOOK) has 2½ minutes remaining. The gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. OBEY) has 1¾ minutes remaining and the right to close.

Mr. ISTOOK. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself the balance of my time.

Mr. Chairman, when these regulations were issued, when the executive order was issued and then regulations were issued by Federal agencies, we heard from a number of States, Michigan, that asked, quote, the policy should be held in abeyance until, at the very least, a cost-benefit analysis is conducted and adequate additional funding is provided.

New Jersey complained that they would have to be translating things into at least nine different languages and wrote, ''It is respectfully requested that the published Department of Labor policy be temporarily suspended pending a cost-benefit analysis.''

That is the normal way of proceeding. That is not the way we are proceeding. Right now, people are being placed at risk because they are being told, ''You're not complying with this law.'' At the very time that people are concerned about bringing America together, we are being told that you have to translate what you do into a multitude of other languages as a condition of being involved in any sort of Federal program. That is not right. That is going to cause a huge amount of resentment.

There was a columnist that wrote in the New York Times, just wait until an Hispanic shopkeeper is told they have to translate what they do into Farsi. This hits everyone, Mr. Chairman, no matter what may be your primary language. But it is right that we need to ask people to focus on what brings us together. We spend billions of dollars that are supposed to be helping people to learn English. Are we not going to reinforce that with a policy that says we are not going to put billions of extra upon ourselves to translate things into you rather than helping you to learn English? That is a much better policy.

It is great to be bilingual, trilingual, however many languages you may be able to speak. But let us keep us unified. This is not the time to balkanize America and to say, you have to spend billions of dollars, private money and public money, translating everything you do into a multitude of dozens or scores of different languages.

We need to support the amendment, Mr. Chairman. We need to bring common sense into place. And until common sense is brought into place, until we have a cost-benefit analysis and they amend these proposals, we should not be imposing them upon the country.

I move the adoption of the amendment.

Mr. OBEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Texas (Mr. HINOJOSA).

Mr. HINOJOSA. Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong opposition to the Istook amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I would urge my colleagues to oppose Mr. ISTOOK's amendment to impede the implementation of the Executive order to ''Improve Access to Services for Persons with Limited English Proficiency.''

The Executive order is about fairness. Individuals with limited English proficiency should not be blocked from accessing vital services paid for by their, and their families', tax dollars.

The Executive order simply gives guidance on how the Federal Government and Federal Government contractors can comply with existing civil rights law that bars discrimination based on national origin.

Until this Executive order was issued, existing civil rights law to protect limited English proficient persons went largely ignored.

The Executive order is reasonable, flexible, and accommodating to small contractors and government agencies. It recognizes that only critical services, directly affecting health and livelihoods, are required to be translated. Implementing the Executive order makes sense.

Imagine what would happen if someone with weak English skills who has a communicable disease, like small pox or tuberculosis, is unable to understand the advise of health professionals. A public health hazard could ensue, harming many more people.

Mr. Chairman, I hope my colleagues will join me in opposing the Istook amendment.

Mr. OBEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute and 10 seconds to the gentleman from Oregon (Mr. WU).

Mr. WU. Mr. Chairman, we are all products of our own past, I suppose. I came to this country not understanding a word of English and I am still working on my limited English proficiency. But when I was in the fourth grade, my dentist, Dr. Sadao, my doctor, Dr. Linnertz, would say to me, ''David, let me tell you something and then you translate it for your mother. And then your mother can tell you and then you can tell me.''

To me, my mother spoke perfectly fine English and so did Dr. Linnertz and so did Dr. Sadao. What we are really talking about are all those people out there who do not have a little fourth-grade David to translate for them. I want to ask the gentleman from Oklahoma who he proposes to leave behind: My mother? Another little old lady from somewhere else in the world?

I would like to read something into the RECORD: ''I believe that every right implies a responsibility, every opportunity an obligation, every possession a duty.'' Those are the words of John D. Rockefeller. I tell children all the time, you have got to learn the king's English. But if you are asking children to learn the king's English, for God sakes you cannot leave their parents behind. You cannot leave their grandparents behind.

I would like the folks on the other side of this argument to say, who are you leaving behind? Who will you cut out of the ability to participate in our self-governing democratic society?

Mr. OBEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself the balance of my time.

There is an executive order which the gentleman from Oklahoma does not like. A Republican President, a Republican White House, is now reviewing that executive order. Let us have the Congress get out of the way and give him time to do it before we jump to conclusions.

As the gentleman has indicated, when you are in a doctor's office and you need help, you do not have time for an English lesson.

Ms. WOOLSEY. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the Istook amendment.

This abstinence-only amendment is a narrow and unrealistic approach to addressing adolescent sexuality. We're not saying that our young people should not be encouraged to abstain from sexual activity. We're just saying they also need to be informed about how to protect themselves from unintended pregnancy, HIV/AIDS, and other STDs.

The truth is, comprehensive sexuality education programs expose young adults to important information that they will not learn from an abstinence-only program.

To date, there is no real evidence that can defend the effectiveness of abstinence-only programs. Without such evidence, we cannot justify spending additional dollars on a program that's already well funded.

However, family planning and comprehensive sexuality education programs have clearly shown their effectiveness and ability to help curb teen pregnancy.

Let's protect our Nation's future by providing teens with the educational tools they need to be responsible.

I urge my colleagues to vote against the Istook amendment.

Mr. NADLER. Mr. Chairman, I rise to oppose the Istook amendment calling for a $33 million increase in abstinence-only education.

First, everyone should understand one thing—this program is already receiving a 100 percent increase in its funding over last year. That is without the Istook amendment.

To put that in perspective—the President's number one priority during his campaign (besides tax cuts) was education—and that receives a 17 percent increase.

So, make no mistake about it, the Congress is already spending large sums on the abstinence-only program, and we won't know the effectiveness and results of the program until the congressionally mandated report comes due in 2005.

What we do know is that publicly funded family planning has a significant effect on teen pregnancy. Each year, family planning services prevent an estimated 386,000 teenagers from becoming pregnant.

Title X funding plays a critical role in the lives of teens across America—in preventing unwanted pregnancy and in providing needed services to young people. Through title X teens receive gynecological exams, screening for breast and cervical cancer, STD treatment, HIV testing, contraceptive care, and counseling.

These services are desperately needed since we know that more than 750,000 teenagers become pregnant each year, and 80 percent of those pregnancies are unintended. We know that nearly 4 million teenagers acquire a sexually transmitted disease by age 24; and that an average of two young people are infected with HIV every hour of every day.

It takes a comprehensive approach to address these problems and that is why more than 120 national organizations support comprehensive sex education including: American Academy of Pediatrics, American College of Obstetricians and Gynecologists, American Medical Association, American Public Health Association, National Education Association, National Medical Association, National School Boards Association, and Society for Adolescent Medicine.

Americans overwhelmingly support sex education—more than 8 in 10 Americans favor comprehensive sex education that includes information about contraception.

I urge my colleagues to heed their call and to continue to push for comprehensive education. This is not the time to increase funding even more than we already have for an untested program that is so limited in scope.

I urge my colleagues to reject the Istook amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma (Mr. ISTOOK).

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. ISTOOK. Mr. Chairman, I demand a recorded vote, and pending that, I make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The CHAIRMAN. Pursuant to clause 6 of rule XVIII, further proceedings on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma (Mr. ISTOOK) will be postponed.

The point of no quorum is considered withdrawn.

Mr. REGULA. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly, the Committee rose; and the Speaker pro tempore (Mr. SIMPSON) having assumed the chair, Mr. COMBEST, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H.R. 3061) making appropriations for the Departments of Labor, Health and Human Services, and Education, and related agencies for the fiscal year ending September 30, 2002, and for other purposes, had come to no resolution thereon.

□ 1915

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. YOUNG of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days within which to revise and extend their remarks on H.J. Res. 68; and that I may include tabular and extraneous material.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. SIMPSON). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida?

There was no objection.

FURTHER CONTINUING APPROPRIATIONS, FISCAL YEAR 2002

Mr. YOUNG of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Appropriations be discharged from further consideration of the joint resolution (H.J. Res. 68) making further continuing appropriations for the fiscal year 2002, and for other purposes, and ask for its immediate consideration in the House.

The Clerk read the title of the joint resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida?

Mr. OBEY. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I yield to the gentleman from Florida (Mr. YOUNG) to explain the resolution before us.

Mr. YOUNG of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding to me just to explain briefly.

Mr. Speaker, this is a continuing resolution. The CR that we passed last week runs the government until the 16th of October. It is obvious we are not going to complete all of our conference reports by then. This would extend the present CR for an additional week, until the 23rd of October, by which time we will hope to have most, if not all, of the conferences on appropriations bills completed.

In addition, this CR does make a technical change to a provision in the previous CR relative to the Export-Import Bank. Also it allows the Defense Health Program to make payments under the TRICARE for Life program at rates that have already been authorized by the fiscal year 2001 National Defense Authorization Act.

In addition, Mr. Speaker, this provides authority to the agencies to begin the preparation of the benefit checks that will be mailed on the first of November in order to begin processing those payments. It is important that we include that in this CR.

Mr. OBEY. Mr. Speaker, under my reservation, I would simply say I agree with the gentleman on the need to pass this.

Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the joint resolution, as follows:

H.J. RES. 68

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That Public Law 107–44 is amended by striking ''October 16, 2001'' in section 107(c) and inserting in lieu thereof ''October 23, 2001''; by adding the following before the semicolon in section 101(b)(1) '': Provided, That the rate for operations of the Defense Health Program may exceed the current rate as may be necessary to fund a pro rata share of the program expansion authorized by section 712(a) of the Floyd D. Spence National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 2001 (Public Law 106–398)''; by striking section 115 and adding the following: ''Sec. 115. Notwithstanding the dates specified in section 7 of the Export-Import Bank Act of 1945 (12 U.S.C. 635f) and section 1(c) of Public Law 103–428, the Export-Import Bank of the United States shall continue to exercise its functions in connection with and in furtherance of its objects and purposes through the date specified in section 107(c) of this joint resolution.''; and adding the following new section: ''Sec. 123. Notwithstanding section 107, funds shall be available and obligations for mandatory payments due on or about November 1, 2001, may continue to be made.''.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

DEPARTMENTS OF LABOR, HEALTH AND HUMAN SERVICES, AND EDUCATION, AND RELATED AGENCIES APPROPRIATIONS ACT, 2002

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the order of the House of today and rule XVIII, the Chair declares the House in the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the further consideration of the bill, H.R. 3061.

IN THE COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE

Accordingly, the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H.R. 3061) making appropriations for the Departments of Labor, Health and Human Services, and Education, and related agencies for the fiscal year ending September 30, 2002, and for other purposes, with Mr. GUTKNECHT (Chairman pro tempore) in the chair.

AUTHORIZING SPEAKER OR CHAIRMAN OF COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE TO RECOGNIZE MEMBER AT 2 P.M. ON OCTOBER 12, 2001, TO LEAD HOUSE IN PLEDGE OF ALLEGIANCE TO THE FLAG

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on October 12, 2001, tomorrow, the Speaker or the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole be authorized to recognize a Member at 2 p.m. for the purpose of leading the House or the Committee in the Pledge of Allegiance to the Flag.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. SIMPSON). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

Mrs. MYRICK. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman if this is because Secretary of Education Paige has asked that all of the schools in the country say the Pledge of Allegiance at 2 p.m. tomorrow?

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, will the gentlewoman yield?

Mrs. MYRICK. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I would say to the gentlewoman that is exactly the purpose of the House taking this action tomorrow.

Tomorrow, Friday, October 12, America's schoolchildren, all of the schools across the country, are invited to join in delivering simultaneously the Pledge of Allegiance. This is a nationwide synchronized Pledge of Allegiance that will take place in schools across the country. It will be 2 p.m. here on the East Coast, 1 o'clock central time, noon mountain time, 11 a.m. in my home State of California, Pacific time, 10 a.m. in Alaska, 8 a.m. in Hawaii. Students and teachers will all join at that time in reciting those simple words, ''I Pledge Allegiance to the Flag.''

The President is also going to join in this national ceremony tomorrow at the precise time from the White House. It is going to be an unprecedented moment, and I think a poignant one, to honor our country, our dead, and our freedom.

I would add also that the Pledge across America is not a government program or a government initiative. We did not come up with the idea. It came from the people, from a grassroots effort started by one very determined woman. Her nonprofit organization, Celebration USA, was created to strengthen classroom instruction on the basic principles of American democracy.

It all started in a California classroom with this teacher named Paula Burton. She is an immigrant. When she was a schoolgirl, at the age of 9, she fled with her family from the Nazi occupation. She grew up here in America to realize her American dream of becoming a public school teacher and noticed one day, when her students were reciting the Pledge of Allegiance, that they seemed bored, uninterested or apathetic. She sensed they did not even understand the meaning of the words of the Pledge. So she went to the blackboard and she wrote down the word ''indivisible.'' She wrote indivisible on the board and asked the class what it meant, and they said it means you cannot see it.

This started her educational campaign to teach students to understand the words of the Pledge and to stimulate pride in being an American. She discovered the Pledge of Allegiance was originally written for a national school celebration, a patriotic national observance in 1829, accompanied by a proclamation from the President. Now her nationwide program of informed patriotism is helping to lead our troubled Nation.

For 4 weeks, teachers in every community in America have been working with students to help them understand what happened on September 11 and to overcome their fears and concerns. They have also worked to teach them more about our national history and the foundations of our free society. Thanks to Paula Burton, whom I am proud to say is my constituent in the 47th Congressional District in California, our Nation will truly be united tomorrow.

I want to thank especially my colleague, the gentlewoman from North Carolina (Mrs. MYRICK), for her work on ensuring that Congress will participate in the Pledge Across America, and congratulate the leadership on the Democratic side, because this is truly a bipartisan national effort. As I said, President Bush will participate from the White House and Paula Burton will be in Orange California with her Catch the Spirit singing group and the boys and girls of Serrano Elementary School.

I thank the gentlewoman for permitting that explanation of this procedure on the House floor tomorrow.

Mrs. MYRICK. Reclaiming my time, Mr. Speaker, I would say that it is an exciting show of unity in this country.

Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

SPECIAL ORDERS

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the Speaker's announced policy of January 3, 2001, and under a previous order of the House, the following Members will be recognized for 5 minutes each.

GUNS, MONEY, AND A GREAT BIG BOOMERANG

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentlewoman from Georgia (Ms. MCKINNEY) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Ms. MCKINNEY. Mr. Speaker, what has the al-Qaeda organization, a heavy 50-caliber sniper rifle designed for elite troops, and a firearms manufacturer in Tennessee got in common? Guns, money, and a great big boomerang.

Last Sunday, October 7, 2001, the Violence Policy Center issued a report entitled ''Voting from the Rooftops,'' which detailed, among other things, the sale and supply of 25 50-caliber sniper rifles manufactured by a local gun manufacturer, Barrett Firearms Manufacturing, in Murfreesboro, Tennessee, to the al-Qaeda terrorist organization.

The report cites evidence given earlier this year in New York during the African Embassy bombings trial that Essam al Ridi testified that in about 1988 or 1989 he had purchased 25 Barrett 50-caliber sniper rifles for $150,000 and shipped them to al-Qaeda. The report went on to detail other sales of the special 50-caliber Barrett weapon to members of the IRA and other groups. Tragically, the report cited numerous incidents of British soldiers being shot and killed with sniper rifles.

The report said that there is no evidence yet available about whether Ronnie G. Barrett, the 1993 trading name of Barrett Firearms Manufacturing, actually knew that the 25 guns being sold to bin Laden's al-Qaeda, nor do we know whether the guns were sold directly from the factory or through a dealer or dealers. Jane's International Defense Review reported in 1989 that, ''Barrett will not identify its weapons purchasers.'' But the unavailability of evidence is not reassuring.

The fact is we should know all of the people who were in this country buying and selling these kinds of specialist weapons to terrorists and the hands that these specialist weapons pass through before they left this country. The events of September 11 have now made that kind of information vital to showing the links between the al-Qaeda members.

The Barrett and M82A1 50-caliber sniper rifle is a tremendously powerful weapon providing heavy hitting power with high accuracy out to an estimated 1,800 yards. U.S. Marines used the Barrett 50-caliber in the Gulf War to knock out Iraqi armored vehicles from 1,750 yards away. Mr. Speaker, for those of us in Washington, D.C., that is roughly the distance from the Smithsonian Institute metro stop to the west front of the Capitol.

These weapons are state-of-the-art firearms and can be used against vehicle armor, fuel tanks, penetrating concrete walls, aircraft and helicopters. These weapons should not be in the hands of terrorists. These weapons should not be in the hands of civilians. These are specialist weapons which should be sold and supplied only to the military.

Barrett Firearms Manufacturing company's Web site ironically states that ''long-range shooting competitors and large caliber rifle enthusiasts throughout the world rely on Barrett products.'' Well, Mr. Speaker, I can think of a lot of adjectives to describe members of al-Qaeda and the IRA, but large caliber rifle enthusiasts is not among them. Now, not only might our young servicemen and women be confronted by the stinger missiles sold by the CIA, but it appears that they might be confronted with sniper rifles from Tennessee.

I understand that Senator FEINSTEIN and other Members of the Senate have introduced a bill to curb the sale and supply of these specialist 50-caliber weapons and that the NRA has already come out against it. Mr. Speaker, the NRA and its followers are fond of saying that ''guns don't kill, people do.'' Well, in this case, the boomerang of unbridled arms sales and bad public policy might just come back to hurt us in Afghanistan. Arms sales are a boomerang.

TRIBUTE TO PENTAGON VOLUNTEERS

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. SCHROCK). Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. GEKAS) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. GEKAS. Mr. Speaker, soon after the tragic events of September 11, I went down to the Pentagon so that I could witness firsthand the destruction that was visited upon that spectacular building. As I made my way through the security lines and came to the perimeter that had been set up about 75 to 100 yards away from the actual destruction, I looked up and saw in full glimpse what a gaping hole that really was. The smoke and the ashes were still wafting from the rubble.

The next noticeable thing, which everyone had to observe who visited that scene, were hundreds of people still working in the rubble, sorting out different objects, pulling bodies and parts of bodies from the wreckage, and engaged in humanitarian efforts the like of which I hope we never see again but which were part of the normal scene at the Pentagon in that moment.

What was more amazing than anything was that in the second perimeter back of the immediate stage of recovery was something like a ring of covered wagons that we used to see in the Wild West movies, and these wagons were the American Red Cross, the Salvation Army, McDonald's, and different food and beverage outfits that had, in effect, set up what they called a unity village, where the workers, who were exhausted, could go back and lie down for an hour, they had rest areas, or they could get a cup of coffee, or a full meal at some of the places.

These people were there 24 hours a day, volunteers from various sectors of the country, to aid and to help the people who were helping the victims and who were sorting out the wreckage. This was an amazing site, one that requires us to make sure that it finds its way into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. That is why I am here tonight.

Among those outfits was a Salvation Army unit from Harrisburg, Pennsylvania, the heart of my district. I spoke with some of the Salvation Army people there and was informed that within minutes of the crash into the Pentagon, within minutes, there were people on the scene rendering assistance.

Within an hour, most of the governmental authorities were on the scene. Within 2 hours, most of the philanthropic and service organizations like the American Red Cross and the Salvation Army had established these extra perimeters. Out of this supreme tragedy, like in New York and the Pentagon, arose the American spirit which we still celebrate and which we have learned tonight will be further celebrated tomorrow with a nationwide Pledge of Allegiance coordinated at 2 p.m. eastern time. That is part of what has come out of rubble in real effect.

I will be providing for the RECORD the names of the people from central Pennsylvania, the 17th Congressional District, who did participate in the events of recovery in New York and at the Pentagon. The State of Pennsylvania Emergency Management Agency rushed to the scene with its volunteers. We had the National Guard from Pennsylvania and other entities eager to do what they could in the wake of those tragedies in New York and the Pentagon.

Mr. Speaker, I am very grateful to our fellow citizens for coming to the aid of their fellow citizens; and as we begin the work of amassing the recovery efforts with the help of the funding from the Congress and the volunteer work that is yet to be done, I think we can all be proud of the fact that tragic as it was, that tragedy bore fruit in the renewed spirit exhibited in our country.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. SCHROCK). Under a previous order of the House, the gentlewoman from California (Ms. SÁNCHEZ) is recognized for 5 minutes.

(Ms. SANCHEZ addressed the House. Her remarks will appear hereafter in the Extensions of Remarks.)

ECONOMIC EFFECTS OF SEPTEMBER 11, 2001

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Indiana (Mr. PENCE) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. PENCE. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to offer a few brief comments about the continuing impact of the events that happened on the calendar 1 month ago today. As we, each of us in our own right, dwell on the devastation of the Pentagon and at ground zero, the World Trade Center, I think it is altogether fitting that we think about the impact that the events of September 11 have had on that part of the American economy where most of Americans get up and go to work every day, and that is small business America.

The largely rural and medium-sized city district that I serve across eastern Indiana is driven by businesses large and small, but truly by businesses that fall in the category of small business. Today I held a hearing in the Subcommittee on Regulatory Reform and Oversight of the Committee on Small Business, where I have the privilege of serving as chairman, where we took a hard look at the impact of September 11 on small businesses. What we found out from witnesses who gathered from as far away as Iowa and Maine was truly disturbing.

The shutdown of aviation facilities known as general aviation facilities and businesses is the first place we looked for impact, and it was not a pretty picture.

A small charter flight that leaves St. Thomas in the United States Virgin Islands for Tortola in the British Virgin Islands, some 40 miles away, and then flies to the Bahamas to return to the Virgin Islands is just one example of the regulatory burdens that are being placed on charter businesses upon which many of the businesses that I serve depend, and many smaller communities around America rely.

Due to restrictions on general aviation in what is known as Class B air space, pilots cannot get their planes to avionic maintenance facilities, flight schools cannot provide flight instruction, and other aviation businesses are simply withering on the vine as we speak.

According to one witness, after the immediate grounding was lifted for general aviation facilities, while business has come back, business remains at 40 percent from levels of a year ago.

Even if the FAA removes restrictions from general aviation, the costs that they face may make it more difficult to continue. One proprietor of a general aviation business was quoted a war-risk insurance annual policy increase from $2,300 a year to $57,000 in a single year. In the airline bailout legislation, as the media has described it, wherein we rendered some $15 billion in assistance to major commercial airlines, we dealt with the issue of insurance for commercial airlines; but general aviation struggles similarly as well.

Of course the problems are not just among general aviation and small charter facilities, but they extend to small businesses that are affected by business travel all over America.

A travel agent from Lewiston, Maine, spoke with great emotion that despite all of the benefits that her creditors have allowed, her landlord giving her free rent for the next 3 months, she was in 3 weeks, according to her estimate, losing $4,000 a week; she was on track to lose her travel agency of 33 years' business. When I asked her how far in the future are people canceling their travel plans, she simply responded under oath, ''I cannot see that far in the future.''

Here in Washington, D.C., hotels are facing major losses of business due to the perception that National Airport and the Capital of the United States is not open for business. One small hotel lost $100,000 due to the cancellation of World Bank events. A hotel operator was one of 25 in the D.C. area that suffered similar losses. The question remains, what will Congress do?

Airport concessionaires also spoke of the fixed rent that they pay these small business operators, most of which come from the minority community, small business operators who have fixed rent payments at arenas and airports; and two of the over 400 airports in the United States have allowed some accommodation in the fixed rent payments of concessionaires.

Mr. Speaker, we are about to lose a plethora of small businesses in America. As we approach an economic stimulus package, let us keep in our hearts and minds small business America, and let us remember that 50 percent of those that file in the top marginal rate are actually small businesses filing as individuals under subchapter S. Let us bring relief to small business as well.

DUTY-FREE STATUS OF CANNED TUNA PRODUCTS FOR ANDEAN COUNTRIES SHOULD BE OPPOSED

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from America Samoa (Mr. FALEOMAVAEGA) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. FALEOMAVAEGA. Mr. Speaker, the entire United States tuna industry, with the exception of StarKist, opposes granting duty-free status to capped tuna products from Andean countries as contemplated in the Andean Trade Preference Agreement. Shame on Charlie the Tuna. Shame on StarKist for threatening an American industry, American consumers, and even American workers.

Mr. Speaker, the fact of the matter is there is enough tuna production capacity in Ecuador to supply the entire U.S. market with canned tuna. Put another way, there is enough production capacity in Ecuador to wipe out the U.S. brands of tuna that our Nation has come to love and trust. No more Chicken of the Sea. No more Bumble Bee. If canned tuna is not exempted from the Andean trade agreement, the only thing America consumers will know is private-label tuna packed in Ecuador and other Andean countries.

How safe is it? Consider this: Ecuador and Colombia incurred more than 706 fishing violations in the years 1998 and 1999 and still counting. Of those violations, only three actions were taken. In other words, Ecuador goes unchecked. Ecuador keeps fishing beyond the closure of the fisheries, past the quota, and breaks the rules; but America lives by the rules, Mr. Speaker.

Our U.S. purse seining fleet, which conducts tuna fishing operations, also plays by the rules, our rules. Chicken of the Sea lives by the rules. Bumble Bee lives by the rules, but StarKist wants us to ignore the rules. I say to Charlie the Tuna, sorry, rules are important.

The Andean pact countries are not up to the same standards utilized by the U.S. canned tuna processors. How safe will canned tuna be if Ecuador is allowed to dump its products in the United States? What does this mean for the American consumer?

The fact of the matter is that canned tuna represents the third fastest moving product category in the entire U.S. grocery business. Canned tuna provides a high-quality affordable source of protein for 96 percent of U.S. families. Shame on Charlie the Tuna. Shame on StarKist and H.J. Heinz for putting the American consumers at risk and for putting Americans out of work.

Mr. Speaker, I wish to reiterate that the entire U.S. tuna industry with the exception of Heinz and its subsidiary, StarKist, is opposed to the inclusion of canned tuna in the Andean trade agreement. Every U.S. processor, with the exception of StarKist, is about the business of protecting America's tuna industry. I also wish to note that Bumble Bee is the only American company that has invested in the Andean pact region. Yet despite its presence in Ecuador, Bumble Bee does not support the inclusion of canned tuna in the Andean trade agreement. Chicken of the Sea does not support the inclusion of canned tuna in the Andean trade agreement. The U.S. fishing fleet does not support the inclusion of canned tuna in the Andean trade agreement.

Today, the Andean pact nations have the largest fleet in the eastern Pacific region controlling more than 35 percent of the total catch, growing from about 20 obsolete fishing vessels now to 87 large fishing vessels.

Mr. Speaker, Ecuador and others fail to adequately cooperate with international conservation and abide by the Inter-American Tuna Commission regulations. Elimination of duties will result in product dumping, threatening American consumers and American industry. The U.S. International Trade Commission conducted studies of the tuna industry for 5 years, verifying canned tuna is an import-sensitive product.

Mr. Speaker, if Ecuador is allowed to send its tuna into America duty free, canned tuna will become a foreign-controlled commodity instead of a branded product U.S. consumers have trusted for over 95 years. If Ecuador is allowed to send its tuna into the U.S. duty free, U.S. tuna operations in California, Puerto Rico, and American Samoa will be forced to close. I am talking about American workers losing 10,000 jobs if this industry closes.

Mr. Speaker, I say respectfully shame on Charlie the Tuna. Shame on StarKist. Shame on H.J. Heinz for threatening an American industry in a time of national crisis.

REVISIONS TO ALLOCATION FOR HOUSE COMMITTEE ON APPROPRIATIONS

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Iowa (Mr. NUSSLE) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. NUSSLE. Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Sec. 314 of the Congressional Budget Act and Sec. 221(c) of H. Con. Res. 83, the concurrent resolution on the budget for fiscal year 2002, I submit for printing in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD revisions to the allocations for the House Committee on Appropriations.

As reported to the House, H.R. 3061, the bill making appropriations for the Department of Labor, Health and Human Services, and Education, and Related Agencies for fiscal year 2002, includes an emergency-designated appropriation providing $300,000,000 in new budget authority for the Low Income Home Energy Assistance Program. Outlays totaling $75,000,000 are expected to flow from that budget authority in fiscal year 2002. Under the provisions of both the Budget Act and the budget resolution, I must adjust the 302(a) allocations and budgetary aggregates upon the reporting of a bill containing emergency appropriations.

In addition, the bill contains appropriations for continuing disability reviews (CDRs) and adoption assistance payments. The CDR appropriation provides $433,000,000 in new budget authority and $381,000,000 in outlays in fiscal year 2002. The adoption assistance appropriation provides $20,000,000 in new budget authority and $3,000,000 in outlays this year. I also must adjust the 302(a) allocations and budgetary aggregates upon the reporting of a bill containing appropriations for those purposes, up to the limits contained in the Budget Act. The amounts provided by the appropriations bill are within those limits.

To reflect these required adjustments, I hereby increase the 302(a) allocation to the House Committee on Appropriations to $663,499,000,000 for budget authority and $683,378,000,000 for outlays. The increase in the allocation also requires an increase in the budgetary aggregates to $1,628,687,000,000 for budget authority and $1,591,076,000,000 for outlays.

These adjustments apply while the legislation is under consideration and take effect upon final enactment of such legislation. Questions may be directed to Dan Kowalski at 67270.

AIRLINE BAGGAGE SCREENING

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the Speaker's announced policy of January 3, 2001, the gentleman from Washington (Mr. INSLEE) is recognized for 60 minutes as the designee of the minority leader.

Mr. INSLEE. Mr. Speaker, several of us have come to the well of the House to address what is the most pressing national issue of the moment that unfortunately the U.S. Congress has not dealt with adequately, and that is the security of our families and our communities.

We just heard the President of the United States talking about the existence of threats in this regard, that it is appropriate to be on high alert for these particular threats. We have come to the House tonight with a message that basically the House needs to act and act quickly on measures designed to enhance our national security in our homeland.

Unfortunately, although we are now a month past this terrible attack, this Chamber has not had a significant vote on bringing a security package for adoption by the U.S. Congress. We are very disappointed by that. We think that the threat is real, that we have the ability to respond to these threats, but to date we have not had the House deal with these issues in a satisfactory fashion. We would like to talk about a few of those issues tonight.

First, an issue that was brought to my attention about a week and a half ago, Americans realize the threat we are under with airlines. We Americans have an expectation, for instance, that the luggage that goes into airlines will be screened for explosive devices. We in America have the technology, fortunately, and this is good news, we have very, very good technology that is available to screen 100 percent of the luggage that goes into the belly of our airplanes.

Unfortunately, that is not happening. In fact, the truth is the vast majority of bags that go into the luggage compartment of jets is not screened, is not screened by X-ray, CAT scan, sniffing, human eye or otherwise. A small percentage is.

Clearly, given the nature of the threat, this Chamber needs to adopt a law that will require 100 percent screening of our baggage that goes into the baggage compartment of airplanes. We do this now fortunately for carry-on baggage and we do it relatively effectively. But we have equipment that will screen very, very effectively for the baggage that goes into our aircraft. We need to make sure those are used with 100 percent of the baggage that goes into the aircraft.

I have introduced the Baggage Screening Act, with others, some of whom are here tonight to address this issue. Unfortunately, we have not had a vote on this. We have had votes on birth control issues, we have had votes on gay partners' rights, but we have not had a vote on security issues. We have come here tonight to urge the leadership of the House to bring to the floor, amongst others, the Baggage Screening Act so hopefully we can increase the security.

With that, I would like to yield to the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. STRICKLAND), a cosponsor of the Baggage Screening Act who has been very active in this regard.

Mr. STRICKLAND. I thank my friend from Washington for yielding. I think most Americans believe that when they go to an airport and they check their luggage, that that luggage will be screened for explosives before it is loaded on the plane that they are going to be flying on, with their families perhaps. I thought that was the case until a couple of years ago when one of my constituents, a young woman, went to Jamaica with two friends for a week's vacation. On the way back as they were screening her luggage in Jamaica, they discovered a handgun in that luggage and she was thrown in jail and remained in a Jamaican jail for several days. It cost her family a lot of money for legal help and so on to get her back to this country. As I was discussing this with her, I said, ''Why did you take a gun with you to Jamaica?'' She said, ''I had no idea the gun was in the luggage. I borrowed the luggage from my mother,'' her mother who had gone on a camping trip the summer before. And I wondered how did this luggage get out of the airport in Columbus, Ohio with a handgun without that being recognized, and that is when I first discovered that luggage is not routinely examined for contraband and weapons and explosives when you check it.

As you know, only about, I think, 5 percent of the luggage is even checked today. The theory has always been, well, if someone checks luggage and then gets on the plane and is a passenger, that they certainly would not have put an explosive on the plane, otherwise they would end up killing themselves. We now know after September 11 that there are people who are willing to kill themselves in order to kill Americans. But even the theory that if you check your luggage and you are getting on the plane that it is not likely to have an explosive does not hold up because we do not even follow that procedure well.

Two weeks ago in Denver, I had some friends who were flying from Denver to Columbus, Ohio, a young man and his wife and a young child. They went to the Denver airport and they checked their luggage, and they waited to get on their plane. As they were waiting to get on the plane, they became increasingly nervous about flying. At the last minute they decided not to fly but to drive to Columbus, Ohio. But their luggage remained on that plane and a relative picked it up in Columbus, Ohio.

So even the procedures that we are supposed to have in place now are not being adequately followed through with. It is a serious thing. I think the American public, the traveling public, will demand that this luggage be screened, because I think that most people assume that it already is.

I am glad you are bringing this to our attention and I am really very, very pleased to be a cosponsor of this legislation with the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. INSLEE. I thank the gentleman from Ohio. The good news here is that Americans have the expectation that these bags will be screened for explosives. They have the current expectation. And the good news is we have very good technology to accomplish that. There are several machines, several new generations of technology which have a very, very high probability of finding an explosive device, any explosive material; in fact, it can distinguish the density essentially of explosive material and with a high degree of success they find if there is a bomb in the luggage.

The problem is that we do not have enough of those machines deployed in airports today and the ones that are deployed have not even been used fully. They have only been used in a very small percentage of passengers.

So we believe it is incumbent on the U.S. Congress to pass a requirement that 100 percent of these bags be screened, and it is also appropriate for the Federal Government to assist the airports in which these will be located with the significant costs of these machines. They are not cheap, but it is my belief that the airline flying public believes this is a very worthwhile investment that ought to be made and if it is a dollar or two on tickets, we believe it ought to be paid and we think it ought to be part of our security package.

I would now like to yield to another cosponsor of the Baggage Screening Act, the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. JACKSON).

Mr. JACKSON of Illinois. Let me begin by thanking and congratulating the distinguished gentleman from Washington (Mr. INSLEE) and the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. STRICKLAND) for this very timely special order. I cannot think of an issue that is more pertinent and more relevant that the Congress of the United States should be addressing than airline and aviation security.

I came to Congress fighting for aviation issues when I was first elected in 1995. We have been fighting to expand capacity before the events of September 11. I used to always joke whenever I would fly with my brother Jonathan about flying coach. Jonathan would always argue that flying coach was so much cheaper than flying first class, and he would almost always quip, ''The coach section of the aircraft gets there at the same time that the first class section does.''

So now we have 100 percent security from the first class section to coach. That is looking at the aircraft from the nose of the aircraft to its tail section. But underneath the aircraft, while every American is now being subjected to an unusual and necessary amount of security and screening, the gentleman from Ohio indicated that only about 5 percent of baggage underneath the aircraft is being presently inspected. Not only do we support in this critical piece of legislation the 100 percent screening of all baggage on aircraft, in the interim we should allow manual inspection of all baggage on aircraft. If it requires more National Guardsmen, more national U.S. Marshals, more Air Marshals, the failure to inspect from one end of the aircraft to the other, including those bags up underneath the aircraft, at a 100 percent rate is the false illusion of security while we fly in our country.

To not inspect baggage, to give the illusion of security in the cabin but not underneath the aircraft is called Pan Am 103, and we are supposed to learn from our mistakes, having witnessed the tragic events of Pan Am 103.

So in the interim, I would argue that yes, we must pass this piece of critical legislation immediately. I talked with the ranking member of the committee, the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. LIPINSKI), who indicated that we may be 3 to 4 years away from being able to fully inspect every bag underneath the aircraft. But we are in a war against terrorism at this hour, with almost guaranteed reprisals. Even the FBI Director at 4:30 this afternoon said we can expect some reprisals from the al Qaeda organization in the not so distant future. But we need not repeat the mistakes of the past.

I would go one step further, because I fly like all Members of this institution. The Congress of the United States should not only be responsible for security above the aircraft but also security beneath the aircraft. The airline industry does not believe that it is feasible to inspect all aircraft, all baggage underneath the aircraft, except for here is the problem: If there is one domestic incident on an aircraft as a result of a device making it past our security screening measures, we are going to stop flying the planes anyway. They are going to bring them all to a halt again, with further erosion of confidence by the American people in the aviation system, and that is ultimately what this Congress must seek to avoid. We must save the lives of Americans by ensuring that from the nose of this aircraft to the rear of this aircraft, there is a complete inspection of that vehicle and all baggage that is allowed on it.

Presently the only inspection devices that we have are above the ground, that is, through the cabin security. I would make the argument that until we are able to provide 100 percent inspection and security for all aircraft in this Nation that the baggage compartment of these aircraft ought to be sealed and no baggage should be allowed on these aircraft unless it is physically inspected by marshals. That means that only baggage that we can carry above the aircraft must be carried on board and inspected at the point of entry of the aircraft, which we presently do. And until the Federal Government can guarantee that every bag on that aircraft is inspected, we should not allow baggage in those compartments whatsoever, regardless of what the airline industry says, regardless of what the airlines themselves are saying, until there is 100 percent inspection of this baggage. If it is 3 to 4 years away from the technology because we cannot produce the machines fast enough, then we are 3 to 4 years away from being able to have two bags per customer on these airplanes. I am for the traveling public, but I am also for the public interest above private interest. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. INSLEE. I thank the gentleman from Illinois. It is a very important point, it seems to me, that I think we are going to be successful without too much debate improving cockpit security in response to the last tragedy. There seems to be momentum here in Congress to do that. But we cannot just fight the last battle, the last act of terrorism. We have got to be thinking ahead of the terrorists. We have got to be ahead of the wave of terrorism. We have got to think about the next potential act. And if we are going to take away nail clippers from passengers, we certainly ought to be getting the bombs out of the baggage in the belly of the jets. That is what this bill will do. I really appreciate the gentleman from Illinois joining us tonight.

I now want to yield to the gentleman from Texas (Mr. DOGGETT). I want to note something before the Representative speaks. We did a $15 billion assistance, or bailout, depending on your perspective, of the airline industry a couple of weeks ago, and the gentleman from Texas asked some very, very good, salient questions about the use of that taxpayer money. It concerned many of us, because in that assistance package to the airline industry, and I believed some was appropriate given the nature of the need for this infrastructure, critical infrastructure, we did not require the airlines to do anything, to provide additional security. So now we are 30 days past this terrible attack on America, we are almost 2 weeks past a $15 billion package of taxpayer money to the airlines and we have not required one single additional security measure for the airlines yet. This Congress, this House, they have not allowed us a vote, the leadership, who schedules the agenda, unfortunately we are not setting the agenda at the moment, have not allowed a vote on these security measures.

I really appreciate the gentleman from Texas' leadership on this to insist that the Congress act for safety when the airlines will not, because the airlines have not because they have not wanted to spend a buck to do this. That has been a big, big mistake. It is penny-wise and pound foolish.

Mr. DOGGETT. I thank the gentleman for his leadership on this legislation, which is a very important part of the answer to the security concerns that millions of Americans have tonight, and for organizing this discussion for us to come together after hours and talk about this problem, because this is really the only forum we have to discuss this matter.

I reflect back, as I am sure my colleagues do, on the fact that only today they had a major memorial service at the Pentagon. I am sure there were similar ceremonies up in New York City. Thirty days have gone by. Across America at various times, I am sure, at events in your State, out in Illinois and Ohio, we have taken time from something we might be doing to have a moment of silence because of the tragedy that our country has endured. In this Congress, in this House of Representatives in particular, we have had not just a moment of silence, we have had a month of silence and inaction on the security concerns that are at the heart of this tragedy.

We know that somehow, and we do not have all the details yet, that some thugs with box cutters and other kinds of devices got past the minimum wage workers at the airports, at some of these airports being paid less to ensure the security of hand baggage and the passengers going through, being paid less to do that job than the people that clean the bathroom at the same airport, that those folks, without the training and without the pay that they need, because they have tremendous turnover in those positions, that we have not dealt with that problem, we have not dealt with the screening of baggage which the gentleman seeks to do, and the Congress, it is not that we have not had enough time, we could be here doing this tonight in regular order.

We have taken up everything from the farm bill to a debate about an issue in the District of Columbia that was a family court, to this afternoon having a debate about whether there should be additional millions spent on abstinence. I think we need abstinence from terror. Unless we adopt some of the constructive measures like you have suggested, like some of our other colleagues have advanced and get out here and debate them here on the floor of this House, the people of America are not going to have the confidence, with good reason, they need to have in our air security, in our defenses against bioterrorism, in knowing that a bag is going through and does not have something in it that it should not have that could be an explosive.

It is with some irony, I heard our colleague from Illinois a few minutes ago point to the recent alert from the FBI, that we could face another threat within days, that almost at the same time that that report came out I received another report that afternoon here in Washington that our colleague, the gentleman from Texas (Mr. DELAY), one of those who was eager to shovel that taxpayer money out to Continental Airlines almost before they asked for it, within hours of this tragedy, that he says that even if Senator MCCAIN, who called this situation quite properly a farce that the Congress would sit here for 30 days and not act on this, he said that even if Senator MCCAIN and the bipartisan majority over in the United States Senate send over a bill to take action to protect the American people at the airports and ensure that some of those folks that are out there doing these jobs have the training and the pay and the status really as a part of Federal law enforcement at O'Hare, at Dallas-Ft. Worth, in Cleveland and Cincinnati and Columbus and across the country, he says even if they do that, and they have a strong bipartisan majority for it, he is going to stop it here, because they have some kind of rigid, backward, old thinking before September 11, maybe before the 21st century, that if you add another worker to the Federal workforce, that that is an evil, even if that is a worker that is going to be there to protect your family and your family and mine and ensure that we can feel safe getting on and off a plane and that somebody is not going to be on there with some device that is going to cause another tragedy that has torn asunder thousands of families across this country.

So I think that we have our work cut out for us because we have not been given the opportunity to debate my colleague's, the gentleman from Washington (Mr. INSLEE), very appropriate measure, ideas that the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. JACKSON), the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. STRICKLAND), and our colleagues, Republican and Democrat alike, could offer, could work together in a bipartisan way, trying to cooperate and say what is the most effective way to work with our President and address this issue of security.

The baggage screen is important. The people that are out there, that are a part of Federal law enforcement, the cockpit doors, so many other ideas that we may have on not only airline safety but on dealing with the threat of bioterrorism and the other possible challenges we might have. But so long as we have a bunch of ideologues here who are more concerned in presenting some kind of ideological purity than dealing with whether someone's family is going to get home safe next weekend, we are not going to be able to do that.

I thank my colleague for his leadership on this.

Mr. INSLEE. I will yield to the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. JACKSON) in one second.

One comment following up on that. There is some good news here. We have bipartisan support for this bill for the Baggage Screening Act, the gentleman from Connecticut (Mr. SHAYS), who has been a great leader for some great reform efforts, the gentlewoman from Maryland (Mrs. MORELLA). We are going to pass this bill if we get a vote. We are going to have tons of Republicans vote for it if we can get a vote, because we have a bipartisan belief we do not want to be on airplanes with bombs in the baggage compartment. We feel very confident we are going to succeed on this if we can simply ask the leadership of the House to schedule a vote.

I will now yield to the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. JACKSON).

Mr. JACKSON of Illinois. I thank the gentleman from Washington for yielding.

I just want to respond to the ideological point raised by my good friend the gentleman from Texas (Mr. DOGGETT). One of the beautiful things about this period in American history is we have beyond our State flags, beyond our corporate banners, beyond where we work, where we were elected, where we are from and the tragedy of September 11 for this moment in American history has forced all of us to seek security in that which makes us one, the ideals that we believe in fundamentally as Americans.

We have turned to our national flag. We have turned to our national government, and even our President is experiencing unparalleled approval ratings because the American people are rallying behind the concept that we can defend ourselves as a Nation from these attacks.

So when the gentleman from Texas (Mr. DOGGETT) raises the questions about petty ideology keeping us from moving forward on some of these critical issues, that is no small claim that the Member is advancing.

In order to provide inspection of every bag, in order to provide security of equal high quality at every airport, in order to ensure that there is an armed marshal on every flight, we would have to expand the Federal Government on the issue of security so that every single American can have some security, but no one in this Congress wants to be accused of being part of any effort that would expand the Federal Government. All of the American people at this hour on their cars, hanging out of their windows, hanging out of their buildings are waving the American flag because they expect their Federal Government for which they pay enormous taxes to be able to provide a response that provides ultimately then the kind of security they seek.

For ideological reasons, we want the airlines to be responsible for security. We want the local States to be responsible for airports. We want the local National Guard to be responsible. We do not want to support a big Federal Government aviation bill that might force every bag to be inspected on an aircraft because that would be a Federal mandate. And who is going to pay for it?

We are caught up in an ideological argument at the moment. The American people are expecting us as their Congress and as their representatives to do something about that.

I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. INSLEE. I will yield to the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. STRICKLAND). Just one comment first.

This should not be a theoretical or a rhetorical argument. We had an experiment with private enterprise in the airlines making decisions about airline security. We had our experiment. It ended unsuccessfully on September 11, and there really should not be a debate here. We have had our test, and it failed.

The Federal Government needs to now mandate safety, and I will tell my colleagues some good news. I think we can get a 100 percent inspection a lot quicker than I think one of our fellows indicated. I will tell my colleagues why. We have already been talking to some of the manufacturers, and they can ramp up dramatically their production rate above what we have had when we put out a Federal contract to buy these machines, give them a guarantee.

We produced what, I do not know, 5,000 P51s in a year and a half in World War II. That is the same type of mobilization we need now. We need to mobilize the industrial resources in this country to build these machines and other things. I am very confident we can do it.

I now yield to the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. STRICKLAND).

Mr. STRICKLAND. I thank the gentleman for yielding. I think what we are dealing with here is a matter of honesty, honesty with the American people. I just heard the President in a press conference a few minutes ago urge the American people to go back to normal lives. And I want the American people to go back to normal living as well, but we also need to be honest. And we need to say to the flying public, when you get on a plane and the bags that are on that plane have not been screened for explosives, that plane is in danger. The people who travel and who fly need to know that information.

This argument about the training of those who do the inspection, I would like to share an incident that I had at Dulles airport last Saturday morning that I think my colleagues may find surprising. Saturday morning at 20 minutes after 6 I went to the ticket counter at Dulles airport to catch a flight from Dulles to Columbus, Ohio. I had one bag with me, and I put it there. And I said to the woman behind the counter I would like to check this bag.

She fixes my ticket and she gives me the seat assignment, and then she says, sir, your bag has been chosen at random to be further screened, certainly to be screened for explosives. She says this is what I would like you to do. I would like you to get your bag, and if you walk down this corridor about, I do not know, 40 feet, you turn to your left and then you come to the next corridor and you turn to your left, you will find the machine where they are doing the additional screening over to your right. I said to her, ma'am, with all due respect to whoever may have devised this system, what makes you think that if I have got an explosive device in that bag that I will willingly and voluntarily pick it up and carry it out of your sight to a place and have it screened? I would simply take that bag perhaps and leave the airport and come back another time and hope that it was not selected at random for further screening.

So even what we are doing now at least on my experience does not make sense. That is why we need, I think, a federalization of this effort. We need standards for training. We need to pay people a decent wage, and we need to hold them accountable as a Federal Government for providing this kind of safety and security to the traveling public.

It is just beyond belief that on the one hand we would be saying we want the traveling public to fly, we want to rescue the airline industry from the slump that it is in, we want to restore confidence to the American people. Well, we can do all of these things that we are talking about in terms of stronger cockpit doors, better screening devices for carry-on luggage, we can do all of that, but unless we deal with this giant loophole, unless we screen the baggage that is put into the bellies of these planes, we can never tell the traveling public that they are safe.

Just this week, my colleague and I and some others met with two fathers who lost their young sons in the flight that crashed at Lockerbie, Scotland. One father lost a 20-year-old son; one father lost a 24-year-old son. Those two fathers shared with us that for the last many years they have been trying to get this done, and they have just constantly been running up against roadblocks and brick walls.

The airline industry does not want to do this, but as was said in our press conference earlier this week, if there is another plane that is blown out of the sky, then the airline industry will suffer perhaps unimaginable devastation because if this happens again, and it is something that could have been prevented, people will give up flying. They will use the train, they will drive, or they will just simply not travel.

So, in the long run, it is in the best interest of the airline industries themselves to come on board and say we are going to do this. It is something that makes so much sense. It can be done technologically. It will cost some money, but I fly sometimes twice a week. I am willing to pay a little more if that is what it takes to make sure that when I get on that airplane it is safe, and it will never be safe to fly as long as the bags that are placed in the bellies of these planes are not checked and checked thoroughly.

I agree with the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. JACKSON). A person may choose to do it, they may choose to fly today, even though those bags are not being checked, but they deserve the truth and they deserve to know that those bags are not being checked. And until we check them, we will never be safe as this government is capable of making us.

Mr. INSLEE. I appreciate the gentleman's comments. I want to tell my colleagues I particularly appreciate his comment about maintaining the confidence in this industry. I represent thousands of Boeing workers, and let me tell my colleagues that if we do not act in this Chamber and if the majority leadership does not allow us to act in this Chamber for airline security and another plane goes down, I have got Boeing workers by the thousands that are going to be out of work more than already.

This is an economic issue, in addition to a safety issue, but I want to know what the coming debate will be in the next week in this House; and which I am, frankly, concerned about, one of the reasons I came here tonight.

The only reason that has been advanced not to give Americans this peace of mind when they ride in an airplane is some dollars. That is the only reason. There is no technical reason. There is no value reason. There is no constitutional issue. It is simply some dollars.

We are going to have a debate in this Chamber in this week because one side, predominantly the aisle, is going to want to take the dollars from a Federal Treasury, do about 60 to 120 billion dollar tax cut, most of which for large corporations, capital gains or something, and many of us believe the first dollar that is spent ought to be on security because security is the biggest demand for this Nation right now. We believe the money that it is going to take to mobilize the industrial base to build these machines, which are already designed, and there are four of them already at Seattle International Airport, I saw them in operation the other day, they are good machines that I know work, that ought to be the first dollar that we spend in this stimulus package that is going to come up.

If we are going to stimulate something, we should stimulate airline security because it creates jobs, it creates wealth, and it creates safety. With a known threat that we have right now, we are going to have debate with some of the Members across the aisle who want to give that money away in capital gains tax.

Mr. DOGGETT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. INSLEE. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. DOGGETT. I serve on the Committee on Ways and Means, and we already have scheduled tomorrow morning bright and early an attempt to do just that. And I think our colleagues are aware that none of those people who suffered the loss of life in New York or out here at the Pentagon were killed because their taxes were too high. Rather, they were killed because one of the reasons was, immediate reason, we did not have the kind of security in our airline industry that we needed to have.

Instead of dealing with that airline security, it is amazing but the same old agenda that our Republican colleagues were advancing the morning of September 10, they are back with it again and talking about capital gains cuts. They are talking about cutting the tax for the biggest corporations in the country, cutting the taxes for the most wealthy people in America.

That is something we have already done at least once this year, I believe. And instead of dealing with security, they want to talk about those old ideas. It is not going to help us get this job done of assuring the safety of this industry to cut taxes. There may be some legitimate changes in the Tax Code, but we ought to focus on the stimulative effect of raising the wages of the workers that are charged with the responsibility of protecting our lives on these airplanes and getting them the skills that they need to do the job effectively.

Putting those machines on the line and hiring the workers that will build the machines to scan the baggage, as the gentleman proposed; doing the other kinds of upgrades on security at our water systems, at our utilities, at our other places that could be endangered by a terrorist attack, those are stimulative effects that will cause people to be hired in good-paying jobs and help our economy move along and, at the same time, will give us the peace of mind that when we get on an airplane or when we get a drink of water, it is going to be safe from terrorists.

Mr. JACKSON of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will continue to yield, the operative word here is ''confidence,'' and the American people have to have confidence in our security; they must have confidence in our economy.

At the end of every aviation disaster, the National Transportation Safety Board starts looking for the black box. Let me show my colleagues just how irrational the present approach to security is. We are going to end up with a National Transportation Safety Board looking for a black box and a strong door, because that is going to be all that is left is a black box and a strong door if we do not pass the gentleman from Washington's bill in the event that a device, a foreign device is allowed to get into the cargo area of these aircraft. That is a fact.

What does the gentleman's legislation have to do with the economic stimulus? It has a lot to do with the economic stimulus. Because confidence in the aviation industry, which is confidence in tourism, which is confidence in the ability to stay in a hotel, which every cab driver in America needs, which every tourism board needs, which every convention center needs, is a factor in why the economy needs to be stimulated in the first place, because four aircraft were slammed, essentially, into buildings, and one in Pennsylvania.

So unless we are prepared to provide the American people with the security that they want, after this Congress votes and passes the stimulus package, if there is another disaster in the aviation industry, the Congress will have wasted the economic stimulus package, because the American people are not going to leave their homes, they are not going to travel, they are not going to go on vacations because of the failure to provide security.

So the gentleman's bill is the centerpiece of any economic security package or stimulus package for our Nation's economy.

Mr. STRICKLAND. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield, I was just listening to the gentleman here, and I thought of something that happened on the day of September 11 in the afternoon in Columbus, Ohio. There were gas stations that started charging $5 for a gallon of gasoline on that day. These were individuals who were obviously using what had been a national tragedy in order to enrich themselves.

Now, I have been watching what has happened around here over the last couple of weeks; and I have become concerned that there are those who are using the national tragedy that we have all experienced as a way of enacting a preexisting agenda. When the gentleman talked about people thinking on September 12 the way they did on September 10, I think that is exactly the case. What we are seeing here with some of these tax programs is an attempt to get these tax bills passed now when they could not have been passed before this tragedy and, somehow, tying the need for these tax breaks to what happened on September 11.

There is much we need to do as a result of the tragedy that has befallen us, and we may need to cut some taxes in a way that gets money to the consumer so that they can spend and get this economy jump-started, but to use this tragedy to advance tax benefits for corporations while leaving out the little guy and the working person and those who have lost their jobs as a result of what happened; we have yet to do anything for the airline workers who lost their jobs. We took care of the airline companies with a $15 billion bailout; but we have yet to step up to the plate and say, the individual men and women who lost their jobs as a result of what happened on September 11, they need our help too.

Mr. DOGGETT. Mr. Speaker, I yield back to the gentleman from Washington, because the gentlewoman from Texas has come; but I want to yield back with his words, because so much of what the gentleman just said, and he said it in words that are going to be long remembered in this body, when he posed the question during the airline bailout, ''Why is it that in the Congress the big dogs always eat first?''

That is what has happened here and that is what is about to happen tomorrow. Because there are those, as the gentleman from Ohio just said, who want to exploit this tragedy for their own agendas and they are doing that instead of dealing with important legislation, like the gentleman has advanced tonight, to assure the safety of families across America who do not care whether we have a Republican or Democrat or right or left or upside down kind of solution. They just want to be sure their families are safe, and that is why we are here tonight demanding that this be made the top priority of this House.

I think it may come to a point where we have to say, until the House addresses this issue, we are going to see it addresses none other. Because unless we can get the kind of bipartisanship that has been occurring in the Senate and get people to come together to address the security concern, we are going to have to take additional steps to force that action on to the agenda of the House. I thank the gentleman for his leadership.

Mr. INSLEE. Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the aggressive advocacy of the gentleman from Texas in the Committee on Ways and Means, and we are going to need that. Because, unfortunately, the proposals we have seen are $60 to $120 billion worth of tax cuts, largely for corporate interests, and not a dollar to screen luggage from bombs in aircraft. So we need this message, and I appreciate the gentleman coming this evening to do that.

One other note and then I will yield to the gentlewoman from Texas. It is important that when we talk about security that we say we are not blaming the airlines for this tragedy. These evil, rank, low-lifes with no respect for human life are responsible for this tragedy. But it is incumbent on us to act reasonably as stewards for the safety of our people. Right now, until we get votes on these bills, we are not able to do that.

Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentlewoman from Texas (Ms. JACKSON-LEE).

Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the gentleman from Washington for the vision, and I thank my colleagues, because I cannot think of a more important discussion than what has been engaged in this evening.

Let me simply say to my colleagues that there were several memorials today. There was one in New York; there was one at the Pentagon led by the President. Many of my colleagues may not have been aware that there was one at the Lincoln Memorial, the U.S. Coalition for Child Survival. Its focus was ''remember the children.''

The gentleman is aware that I chair the Congressional Children's Caucus. The idea was, in this time, our children, some who have lost parents, guardians; as far as we know, we do not even have a count between the airplanes and the tragedies in Washington, New York and Somerset, Pennsylvania of how many children are impacted.

Now, this may seem that I am deviating from security issues, but I am not. The focus is on the people. The fact that people were the ones impacted on September 11, 2001, it is the people of America that we must say to them that we have your interests at heart. We want you to be secure in the highways and byways and the airways of America; we want you to be secure that we are taking care of the children who may have lost their parents, guardians. We do not even know if some are being taken care of by neighbors. We know that there were a lot of single parents that worked in those buildings. We know how the living structures in New York are apartment buildings; we do not know if some children are with neighbors or with relatives.

What should we be doing in this stimulus package? I think certainly we should be giving the extended benefits on health and unemployment benefits. I met with airline stewardesses on Monday, or whenever I was in the district, I guess on Monday, and tears were in their eyes, the fear, the need for security and those who were laid off, in addition to other employees. I would say to the gentleman that part of the legislation is, let us put the people first. Let us secure the airways of America.

I believe that in fact we can do some partnerships. I believe we can do some partnerships with the airlines maybe at the checkpoints. But I am familiar with the technology that the gentleman is talking about. I am familiar with the checking of what we call interline bags or check bags. That is a key element to the comprehensive approach to safety.

Mr. Speaker, I am not going to be the Department of Justice and put on the Web page fearful comments that I understand have been put on the Web page across the Nation. I am very disappointed in that, because I believe we have the responsibility that if we have something to say to the American people, let us make it a public announcement about the seriousness of their condition. I am concerned about that. That is another issue that we have to address. I am shocked that we are finding messages on the Web page telling Americans about possible incidences.

We should be here telling America how we are going to secure them. So I believe that legislation and emphasis on securing them economically, and tomorrow I will be in caucus to speak and raise the question of these tax cuts, not because I do not believe in business success as well, but because I believe that we do not have the focus.

I support the gentleman's legislation. I believe we should have this equipment. I heard the cost of it. It does not overwhelm me. We can begin step by step moving across the country with this equipment that requires the intensive checking or the technological X-ray type checking that is necessary to check these bags. I do not want to be a nay-sayer here, but I am familiar with Pan Am 103. How many of us are? I am very closely familiar with it. I am intimately familiar with it. I represented an individual tragically impacted by Pan Am 103. We know the story of what happened with that, an unaccompanied bag.

I do not want to leave this floor to the distinguished gentleman from Washington (Mr. INSLEE) with fear in our hearts and the distinguished gentleman from Ohio and the distinguished gentleman from Illinois and the distinguished gentleman from Texas. I do not think we are here trying to create hysteria. But what we are saying is, I want to work through the weekend, through October, through November, whatever it takes, to look the terrorists in the eye and tell them, no, we are not on the run; but we are the most powerful Nation in the world. We believe in our values, we believe in democracy; and what we are here to tell you is we are going to take care of our people.

The children who do not have parents at this point and need our assistance, nobody has been on the floor debating what do we do about children who have lost their parents. By the way, as I close, let me say we will be having a briefing tomorrow, if I may just add this, on the children who have lost their parents. We will have a family come in from New York, a man who lost his wife who had to leave his job and he has three children. We know these stories are all over the country, but this is a particularly unique situation. Has the Congress even dealt with his case, his mental anguish, the funding we need to support him? No. We need to put people first.

Mr. Speaker, I am gratified for the opportunity to join the gentleman from Washington, to applaud him for this initiative, and to be able to say to him that we have to roll up our sleeves and, as I have heard us say on some occasions in the past, work, work, work. I guess I am animated about this because I want to be able to say to the American people, I am concerned and I am leading. And how am I leading? I am putting you first, your security and your families and your children and your ability to be able to provide for your families.

I appreciate the gentleman's leadership, and I hope he will join me on my children's efforts as we work toward doing the people's work.

Mr. INSLEE. Mr. Speaker, I really appreciate the gentlewoman's comments, because our message tonight is not one of fear, but of confidence and of belief in ourselves. We believe we can screen 100 percent of these bags and the cost is about 1 percent of the stimulus package that we are going to adopt, about 1 percent, that is all we are talking about, about the billions of dollars that will be invested in this stimulus package. We are talking about 1 percent to make sure a plane does not get blown out of the sky.

We do not think that is unreasonable.

The good news, the confident news, the positive news is we can do this. We have the technology and ability to do it. We just have to get the vote.

We have to get some of the bipartisan spirit that we have seen over in the Senate, where JOHN MCCAIN has agreed to this airline security bill, not this specific one but another one. But that has been blocked here in the House. We need some of that bipartisanship here, because Republicans and Democrats are going to vote for this, if we get a vote on this.

Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. JACKSON).

Mr. JACKSON of Illinois. I thank the gentleman from Washington for yielding, and I thank the gentlewoman for her critical and important comments.

We think there is a lot of hysteria out here. The hysteria is the illusion of security without ensuring that 100 percent of the bags underneath these aircraft have been inspected.

But the gentleman raised the question also about the stimulus package and what a real stimulus package in light of today's threats should be. Why not critical investments in the real needs of the American people?

Before the events of September 11, Jane Garvey, the head of the Federal Aviation Commission, said that we needed 10 new airports the size of O'Hare Airport. That is 10 new airports that could be in every region in the country.

The construction of these 10 new facilities alone would put hundreds of thousands of Americans back to work, regardless of the next series of events that this war might bring, even to our own shores.

How about high-speed rail? Every State in the Union could benefit from a stimulus package that included high-speed rail, including the steel industry, including the locomotive industry, including Amtrak, including putting millions of Americans to work laying the track for high-speed rail?

Regardless of the next series of events that this war might bring to our own shores, high-speed rail is a project that would continue, and is not subject to the fear factor associated with these events.

Before the events of September 11, we needed $322 billion to repair the critical infrastructure of our schools. How many carpenters and how many painters and how many teachers would we put to work if we had an economic stimulus package that was a downpayment on rebuilding the critical infrastructure for the 53 million kids in the 85,000 public schools in the 15,000 school districts across our country?

Health care for all Americans: Economic stimulus. But beyond aviation security, I know there are people in the country who think Congress is obsessed with airplanes these days, we need train security. We need security in our subways. The economic stimulus package must make every American feel more secure in going about their daily lives.

So I thank the gentleman for beginning this process by arguing about aviation security. But the broader economic stimulus should not be something that, because of fear, the Congress comes back in several more weeks or several more months needing an additional economic stimulus package, simply because we did not invest in the critical needs of the American people, which would be a long-term investment and stimulus package that would keep millions of Americans working even through this great war on terrorism.

Mr. INSLEE. Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the gentleman's remarks.

I hope people understand, this is not the only security issue that we are concerned about; it is one of many. Perhaps it is the most glaring omission in our entire security system, but there are many that we need to make sure of. That is a package that we should have been voting on tonight. Instead of just talking about it, we should have been talking about a security package to increase security at our borders.

We have had a porous border, both north and south. We now are trying to improve it, and as a result, we have lines that are 5 hours long for honest citizens to try to get across the Canadian border. This is killing the economics both of Canada and the State of Washington.

Instead of putting on additional security personnel and funding that out of our general funds, we are arguing about all these other things here instead of security. We need to talk about border security. It should be part of our stimulus package; not just $60 billion as a tax cut for corporations, but let us talk about security.

Public health. We know, and this is hardly a secret, that we are not where we should be and can be in dealing with biological and chemical threats in the United States. Our people are concerned about that. We do not want to be overly concerned. We want to respond in a rational, confident way of developing a public health system that can give Americans confidence that we can deal with this type of threat. We are not there yet.

But instead of proposing and giving us a vote on a security measure that will significantly increase our ability to respond to bioterrorism and chemical threats, we are going to see a stimulus package with $60 to $120 billion more tax cuts.

I have to tell the Members, when I go home to Edmonds and Bainbridge, Washington, people are coming up to me and saying, ''Jay, what are you going to do about bioterrorism and making sure my airplane does not get blown out of the sky?'' That is what they are asking me to do. That is what we should be doing.

We have been here for 30 days since this terrible attack and we have not had a chance to vote. The gentleman from Ohio (Mr. STRICKLAND) and the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. JACKSON) and myself, we have not had a chance to vote. This is our job.

The Speaker, the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. HASTERT), who has done I think a great job trying to help us find unity in the first several weeks since this tragedy, I think he has been very sincere in trying to find bipartisan consensus, and we have had other Republicans support us on this security effort.

But somewhere in there somebody is blocking bipartisanship here. We are very hopeful that the gentleman from Illinois (Speaker HASTERT) will be successful in an effort to free these security measures for a vote on this floor. We need to have a bipartisan vote, because I think we are going to pass these things.

I yield to the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. STRICKLAND).

Mr. STRICKLAND. Mr. Speaker, I would just like to say that I think many of the security issues perhaps will be addressed in the bill. The one aspect of security that I am fearful will not be included is what we are talking about tonight specifically. That is the screening of all the luggage that is placed in an airplane.

For some reason, this has been something that the airlines have objected to for a long, long time. After we introduced the bill this past week, I got a call from a young man in New York City. He said that he had heard about the bill. He said, ''I am outraged because I am going on a vacation in a few weeks with my wife and child, and I thought the plane I was flying on would have the luggage screened.'' He said, ''What can I do to help get this bill passed?''

I said, ''Well, the best thing you can do is contact your Senators and your Congressperson and urge them to sign on to this bill. I think the American people want this.''

I have not talked to a single person in the last few weeks about this bill without encountering enthusiastic support for it. When people buy a ticket and they get on an airplane, they want to be sure that that airplane is not going to explode. It did over Lockerbie, Scotland. There was a suitcase bomb. That plane exploded and killed a lot of young people.

One of the fathers this week said that plane that exploded was like a traveling schoolbus, because so many of the people on that plane were very young, in their early twenties, most of them.

The fact is that the American public will never be able to feel as safe as they have a right to feel if we do not pass this bill. I have said something that I do not think is an extreme statement. I have said that if we pass this legislation, lives will be saved. If we fail to pass this legislation, it is inevitable, in my judgment, that lives will be lost.

What we are talking about tonight is something that is of critical importance to the American people.

Mr. INSLEE. I appreciate the gentleman's statement. His sentiment is shared in a lot of different places.

In my flight back to Seattle, a flight attendant came up and said, ''Are you Congressman INSLEE?'' And you never know when people ask you, you think they might bite your head off when they ask this question.

But she said, ''I just kind of bless your efforts, because we have got to have this. We just have to have this.'' This is an expert talking. This is a person who spends her working life in the air. I am hearing that sentiment all across America.

I appreciate the support of the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. JACKSON) and the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. STRICKLAND) for this bill.

I want to leave this discussion on an upbeat and confident note. I believe if we get this word out to Americans and Americans contact their Representatives and their Senators, justice is going to prevail here. We are going to adopt or we are going to use these technologies, we are going to fund them so airports do not go bankrupt in doing it, we are going to have the Federal Government help local airports do this, and we are going to use the industrial and technological might of this country to put these machines in.

We are going to hire qualified, certified, well-trained, stable employees to make sure they are operated right. I believe this is in our ability to do, and I believe we are going to do it, and this is going to help us, that the American people know what is at stake here.

So I am very appreciative. Did the gentleman have a final comment?

Mr. JACKSON of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I just want to congratulate the gentleman for his noble efforts on behalf of the American people. My wife and my 18-month old daughter are enormously grateful for the gentleman's efforts, and I am sure all of us who have family members, as much as Members of Congress travel, are very greatful for the gentleman's efforts.

But for the millions of Americans whom many of us have never met and still do not know, in the gentleman from Washington (Mr. INSLEE) they have the kind of leadership on the floor of the Congress that is thinking about them and that is going to make a significant difference.

Mr. INSLEE. Mr. Speaker, I appreciate that. Let me give a note, too, to thank the two gentlemen, for the families of the Lockerbie tragedy, that have helped us so much. The families of the Lockerbie tragedy for 13 years have been asking Members of the U.S. Congress to act. Tonight we are adding our voices to the effort. Let us make sure this happens for the flying public.

AMERICA'S DEFENSES IN THE CURRENT WAR

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. SCHROCK). Under the Speaker's announced policy of January 3, 2001, the gentleman from Colorado (Mr. MCINNIS) is recognized for 60 minutes as the designee of the majority leader.

Mr. MCINNIS. Mr. Speaker, obviously, I hope all of the Members have had the opportunity at 8 o'clock, so about an hour and a half ago, to listen to the President of the United States address the Nation. It was a press conference, but I think the President made several pertinent comments.

Let me begin by saying this: I think the President of the United States and his team, whether it is the Vice President, Dick Cheney, whether it is Condoleezza Rice, whether it is Don Rumsfeld, whether it is John Ashcroft, I think they are doing a heck of a job.

If this kind of horrible tragedy had to occur, I think that it could not have occurred with a better team in place than the team we have today. I think it was indicated and reflected by the President's comments during his press conference this evening.

Mr. Speaker, I want to go through a few of those comments and discuss them at length. I, of course, want to finish what I started yesterday, and that is a discussion, I think a good discussion, of missile defense and why this Nation needs missile defense, and why we as Congressmen have an inherent responsibility for the security of this Nation to provide missile defense. I want to talk about that tonight.

But let me talk, first of all, about a few comments that the President made. I also want to visit briefly about civil liberties. I also want to talk for a few moments about the great fight that we are involved in.

We have heard people use the term ''war.'' That is exactly what this is. As the President very ably said tonight, ''This is not a conventional war that we are fighting. This is a war unlike we have ever experienced in the past. First of all and foremost, we have been attacked by the enemy within the borders of the United States. We have suffered horrible losses in civilian casualties. These people, as the President said, they did not agitate this, they did not provoke this kind of thing. It was a blind attack of cold-blooded murder. There is no justification.''

By the way, kudos to Mayor Rudolph Giuliani today, who received a $10 million check, a $10 million check from an individual. But that individual, in handing that check, issued a statement that said that the United States, as a result of this action, should reexamine its policies in regard to Israel.

Rudolph Giuliani in New York City today said ''Look, you may have just given us $10 million for our recovery fund for New York City, but do not dare try and justify or say that perhaps there is some legitimacy; to take a message across, regardless of the merits of the message; do not try and legitimize this as a vehicle for communicating that message, the act of terrorism. It is not justified.'' These were the acts of evil men, as the President said this evening.

So Rudolph Giuliani gave the $10 million back and said, ''We do not want the money. Do not come to us, no matter how much money you have, do not come to the United States, do not come to New York City and offer a lot of money, which was appreciated for the recovery effort, but to have a little string attached to it that says, hey, maybe if terrorists commit these kinds of acts against the United States of America, America will adjust its national policies as a response to that terrorist act.''

That is the wrong thing to do. We should not let this kind of act that occurred on September 11 gain any kind of credibility whatsoever, zero credibility, because if we begin to give those kinds of attacks credibility; in other words, allow them to legitimize their cause, even a slight legitimization of their cause, we in fact are contributing, in my opinion, to the awful acts that are a result of terrorism. They should not do that. Thank goodness, the Mayor stood up to that tonight.

I thought the President's comments about this war, it was amazing to me. I thought the reporters on a couple of occasions tried to trap the President: ''Can you give us an assurance, Mr. President, just how long we are going to be engaged in this?''

Of course the President did not fall for that trick. He said, ''We are going to be engaged in it until we get the job done.'' Congratulations, Mr. President. That is exactly the response that the American people wanted to hear. That is exactly the response that the American people feel in their heart.

This country cannot afford to do this job half-heartedly. We cannot do the job halfway. We have to complete this job. We have to do everything we can to minimize the threat of terrorism anywhere in the world. Terrorism has no legitimate spot. Terrorism has no legitimate spot anywhere in this world with any country.

It must be eradicated, or as close to eradication as we can possibly get. And the President said he is committed; that as long as he is the President, he will stay the course. Did my colleagues hear that? He will stay the course.

And that is exactly the kind of commitment that the United States Congress has to give to the President as well. There will be lots of trials and tribulations that we ourselves as leaders in this country will come across, but we need to stay the course, keep her steady as she goes. Keep her steady as she goes. As the President said, slowly but surely, slowly but surely we are gaining ground; and we are gaining victory in this battle against these evil people.

Now, I say they are evil people. I compared them in comments I made yesterday and in comments I have made since the September 11 tragedy to a cancer. There is no way to justify a cancer, ever. There is no medical doctor in the history of the world that has come up with some kind of a justification for not the cause, but some kind of a justification to say that the cancer helps the human body. Cancer never helps the human body. It is a foreign agent inside the body, and it has one purpose in mind and that is to destroy the human body. That is what cancer is about, to destroy the human body. It has one mission: destruction, destruction, destruction.

There is no difference between bin Laden, between all of his followers and between other terrorists in this world; there is no distinction between those terrorists and cancer. They all are out for the same thing. They are out there, as the President said tonight very ably, and with a lot of credibility, he said what they have done is hijacked a religion. They are trying to cloak themselves in Islam. Islam does not allow terrorism. Islam does not permit the striking of innocent people. Certainly Islam does not preach striking down other people of the same faith, of those practicing Islam, that same faith.

Keep in mind that these terrorists, these evil people, when they hit that tower, they did not just kill Americans; they killed the citizens of 80 separate countries. They killed fellow Muslims, they killed people who practice the Islamic faith. They killed Irish, they killed black, they killed Canadians, they killed British, they killed Belgian, German. Eighty countries suffered. These terrorists did not discriminate amongst their victims, and now they have the audacity to cloak themselves in religion, one of the great religions, as President Bush said tonight, the religion of Islam.

Come on. We know that is a falsehood. And we have an obligation to continue to look through that falsehood. As the President said tonight again, and well said, I think, that bin Laden is just one part of the puzzle, just one part of the cancer. And there is more than one element to that cancer. Bin Laden is just one of the cells there. We have a number of cells that we have to eliminate to cure ourselves, to cleanse ourselves of this horrible cancer that has found its way to us.

So I thought the President spoke well. He spoke of our determination, our will and our patience. The President has been very methodical in his planning. He and his team have been very focused, and they are determined, and they are strong, and they are patient. And I think the President said it very well this evening.

I was very dismayed in the last week or so when one of our colleagues here criticized the President, saying how could the President launch an attack in 4 weeks; that he does not have enough preparation; he had not done enough planning. Well, that colleague of mine was out of order, in my opinion. Our constituents should know that we do not sit in the war room and help design the day-to-day combat activities of our military forces. Thank goodness, we do not. That is not our job. We are not military experts. A lot may think they are military experts, but the fact is we are not military experts. So to stand up at this point in time and criticize our President, saying the President did not do enough planning, when this colleague of ours did not spend 2 minutes in the assistance of that planning, how the heck does he know what went on down there?

What you do, as the President said tonight, you measure by performance. And you can go turn on the TV tonight and look at the performance. Slowly but surely, as the President said, we are gaining ground. Obviously, we are gaining ground, and we are going to gain ground every day. Now, some days we may get set back a little. But every time we are set back, the sun will come again and we will gain a little more the next day. The end game is that America will prevail. America and its allies will prevail.

This Nation is too great, its civil liberties are too strong, its freedoms mean too much to the world for the United States of America to fail, and it will not. Failure is not even an option. Failure is not even something to be discussed. The United States will be victorious at whatever the cost, at whatever the sacrifice, at whatever amount of time it takes. Mark my words, the United States of America will prevail over this evil cancer.

Now, I want to mention a good friend, a good colleague of mine, the gentleman from California (Mr. HERGER); and he and I were talking about missile defense. We were also talking about civil liberties. Now, the gentleman from California and I agreed, and we agree on most things; but we were talking about the fact that I want the American people to know that in our anti-terrorist bill, for example, that we bring up tomorrow on this House floor, that we need to let the people know that we are not out there violating the constitutional rights of privacy or the constitutional civil liberties guaranteed under the Bill of Rights. That is not what is going to happen in this Congress.

What is happening is this: we are saying, look, we all have to pitch in together. So what if they check our baggage a little more closely at the airport? In fact, the previous speakers were talking about how necessary that is. So what if someone decides they want to cross the borders where they have a computer, a television face measuring computer that will tell them whether or not an individual is wanted anywhere in the world? So what if someone is requested to give a fingerprint if they want to cross the borders into America? The fact is America is going to have to tighten its borders.

We cannot afford to have 2½ million students, students who are guests of the United States of America, we cannot afford to have 2½ million of them stay in our country after their visas expire. Of course, we have a huge gap in regards to our student visa program. And it was amazing to me the other day, even in my own State, that some of the colleges and universities in my own State said that we should not clamp down on student visas. The reason is because they need the money. They want the money. They may charge high fees for these foreign students to be educated in the United States. Well, it is about time the United States thought of the United States.

Our homeland security requires that we have a border policy that makes sense; that we have a border policy that protects America; that we have a border policy that lives within the philosophy of America. That philosophy of America is that America has always opened its arms to citizens of other parts of the world; but we have to do so within a system that is regulated. We just cannot open the borders and allow anybody in here that wants to come in here. As we have seen, unfortunately, on September 11, not everybody has good intentions in mind. Some of those people are cancerous; and they want to lay cancer on every woman, every child, and every man they can, regardless of their religion, regardless of their ethnic background. These people want to destroy.

We have every right, without violating the Constitution, to tighten up our borders. We have every right, and it is not a violation of our civil liberties, if someone wants to fly on an airplane and checks on baggage, they should expect that someone is going to look in their suitcase. They may even be looking through your nighties or your pajamas. The fact is there are certain inconveniences, not civil liberties, but there are certain inconveniences that all of us will now have to suffer to try to keep our country safe from this active cancer and the acts that these terrorists are trying to put upon us.

I think the President handled very well tonight this general threat, this seemingly high level of confidence of a legitimate threat against the United States. Obviously, the President and the law enforcement arms in our country, and by the way, kudos to our law enforcement people that are so dedicated and put themselves out there on the front line, and all of our emergency personnel, whether firemen, ambulance drivers, et cetera; but the President made it very clear he does not have specific information.

Obviously, if they did, if it was a train that was threatened or an airplane that was threatened, they would shut it down. They just have a general threat against the well-being of the United States.

I almost thought I heard criticism of the President not being more specific, when the President did not have more specific information as far as what the targets would be. The President made it very clear this evening that the targets were not specific. I think the President did an excellent job in his communication to the people that he leads, to the people that he has assumed a major responsibility, the ultimately responsibility for their security.

So the fact is, as the President said this evening, all of us have to be more aware of our surroundings, and that is not just for the next 2 or 3 days; that is kind of something we are going to have to permanently put into our minds. If we see something that looks odd, it probably is out of place; and it probably arouses enough suspicion we should call the authorities. The old saying, if it looks unusual, it probably is. That is the kind of thing that we are facing here.

I used to be a police officer, and we did not develop any sixth sense, as people say, that police officers develop. What we actually did is develop common sense. Common sense that if in the middle of the night you see somebody coming out of a window of a retail store that is locked up, you might think that is a little unusual, and you would then take appropriate action. That is what the President is cautioning the American people to do, to just use common sense. If it does not look like it makes sense, report it to the authorities. That is how we are going to get ahead in this ball game.

Let me move on from the President's comments, although I want to repeat once again that I thought the President did an excellent job. I think the President and his team, the Vice President, the Secretary of Defense, the national security advisers, Condoleezza Rice, this entire team, combined with all those young men and women that are serving in our military forces throughout the world, combined with our people like our volunteers in the Peace Corps, with the Government employees, with all the law enforcement agencies across this land, the firemen, et cetera, et cetera, we are all coming together as a team to provide the security that every citizen out there has a right to expect from their government.

And thank goodness we live in the strongest country in the history of the world. Thank goodness we have a country that has freedom of religion, that has freedom of speech, that allows its borders to be open to the world with reasonable regulations. That is what has made this country such a strong country. And the blow we suffered on September 11, and the blows that we will face in the future, if we stay together as a team, if we bring together as a group but act as one, we will survive this and come out of this stronger than we were before. Sadder than we were before, because of the friends and the family and the good people that were lost in this terrible tragedy, but stronger.

Let me visit about the question that the President was asked this evening, an area that I spend a lot of time on, and that is missile defense and the Anti-ballistic Missile Treaty. Let me put out the premise right now that I think every one of us in these Chambers, every Congressman, every Senator in Washington, all of us had better not live on a hope that we never get attacked by a missile. The far left in this country, the radical left, wants the American people to hope and believe that a missile will never be launched against the United States, and that a missile probably will not be just based on that hope. It is like hoping away cancer. It is not going to happen.

At some point in the future, the United States of America will face a missile attack. It may be one missile that is accidentally fired against the United States, or it may be a series of missiles that are intentionally fired against the United States.

Today we have time to prepare for it. That is exactly what we need to do. There are several steps that we need to do. First of all, this body has to stay together. We have to give the President the support that he has asked for in building a missile defense system for this country. Keep in mind what the country has today. This country has tremendous capabilities as far as detection of a missile launch is concerned. In fact, within moments after that missile was launched by accident by the Ukrainian military during military exercises and hit a commercial airliner one week ago, the United States of America, it was the United States of America that knew about the launch. We picked it up at NORAD in Colorado Springs.

We were within a couple of seconds able to figure out what kind of missile it was or at least a good guess, the direction, the target, et cetera. But once our NORAD defense system determines that a missile launch has taken place, and after they figure out what size missile it is and where its likely target is, all they can do is call up the victims of the likely target and say, say a prayer, it is over. You have an inbound missile. Its expected time of arrival is 15 minutes. Nothing we can do for you.

Mr. Speaker, we have an obligation. We are required to protect the American people, the American continent and our allies. How can we stand up in front of our constituents, colleagues, how can we stand in front of them and say that we have chosen not to provide an actual missile defense system. Instead we have chosen the policy of the far left which is let us hope it never happens, and it is crazy to think that someone will attack this country with a missile.

I think a lot of people have thought some crazy things that we never thought would happen, i.e., a terrorist attack would occur that would kill thousands and thousands of American citizens. It occurred on September 11. Who would imagine during a military exercise that a military, under strict discipline, under careful scrutiny, would accidentally launch a missile that brought down a commercial airliner. The concerns we have in the future are not entirely focused on an intentional launch of a missile against the United States. It could be an accidental launch.

Mr. Speaker, I think the likelihood of an accidental missile launch against the United States is pretty high. I think there is a good likelihood it could be as much accidental as it is intentional. That is why I think it is imperative that the Congress of the United States follow the lead of the President of the United States, and that is to deploy a missile defense policy in this country.

Let us go through the different arguments brought up. The gentleman from California (Mr. HERGER) and I talked about, we do not have the technology. That technology is almost there. We have the laser technology. We have the satellite technology. We have the detection technology. Two months ago we were able to intercept an incoming practice target missile. That technology is going to be there. Sure it is going to take some trial and error to get there.

People say what if we fail. One way you can guarantee failure is not to try at all. That guarantees it. So my colleagues in these Chambers who do not want to try at all to provide missile defense for this country, you have guaranteed failure to your constituents. We have the capability to come up with the technology. We have the resources to deploy a missile defensive system to protect the people of this country, and we ought to do it.

Some people will say what about the anti-ballistic missile treaty. That was the question tonight to the President. When you meet with President Putin from Russia, are you backing off, abandonment of the anti-ballistic missile treaty, and the President said that treaty is obsolete. It does no good for Russia or the United States.

Let me tell you a little history about the anti-ballistic missile treaty. A few facts about it. First of all, the anti-ballistic missile treaty is a treaty between two countries. Only two countries are signatories to the treaty, the United States of America and the Soviet Union. This treaty was signed in the 1970s. The treaty is well over 30 years ago. It went on a theory that was abandoned a long time, a theory whose premise was questioned from the very first day.

What is the theory? At the time of the Cold War, at the time the anti-ballistic missile treaty was drafted in the 1970s, there were only two countries capable of delivering such weapons in the world, the United States of America, and the Soviet Union.

Some people, that administration, thought it was logical for the United States and Russia to get together and say look, you are the only two in the world capable of delivering these types of missiles. Make a treaty that will give you the ultimate resistance to fire a missile in an offensive state against Russia or against the United States.

So the treaty they came up with is called the Anti-ballistic Missile Treaty, and it works like this: Russia agrees not to build a missile defensive system, and the United States agrees not to defend itself with a missile defensive system. The theory being if you do not have the capability to defend yourself, you would not fire a missile against the Soviet Union because you know the Soviet Union would retaliate, and your fear of retaliation would be enough incentive not to fire your missile in the first place.

Well, the one good thing they did when they drafted this treaty was they put a clause in there. The people that drafted this said, justifiably, Look, we are not smart enough to be able to read the future. We do not know what the future holds for the Soviet Union. We do not know what the future holds for the United States of America. So as we draft this treaty, the Anti-ballistic Missile Treaty, let us make a provision, let us put a right within the treaty for the treaty to be modified for either party, the Soviet Union or the United States, to withdraw from the treaty.

Let me show Members that specific language. This is it right here. Article XVI of the Anti-ballistic Missile Treaty. That treaty is called the ABM. This treaty shall be of unlimited duration. Each party, and look at this emphasis that I have put on here. This is a guaranteed right. The parties have a right to abrogate this treaty. This is not a breach of the treaty. It is not a breaking of the treaty. It is exercising a right contained within the four corners of the treaty. That is exactly what this language is. Let us go through it.

Each party, remember there are only two parties to the ABM, the Soviet Union and the United States of America. Each party shall, in exercising its national sovereignty, have the right to withdraw from this treaty. See the word ''right.'' It is not iffy. It is a guaranteed right of the treaty. The treaty has it within its provisions. Have the right to withdraw from this treaty if it decides that extraordinary events related to the subject matter of this treaty have jeopardized its supreme interests.

So we know that the right to abandon the treaty is contained within the four corners of the treaty if in fact extraordinary events have occurred. So the argument here is have extraordinary events occurred to the extent that the supreme interests of the parties have been impacted? Of course they have. I am going to show Members that in just a moment.

It shall give notice of its decision to the other party 6 months prior to withdraw from the treaty. Such notice shall include a statement of the extraordinary events the notifying party regards as having jeopardized its supreme interests. What are extraordinary events.

Take a look at what has happened in the world in the last 30 years. This is ballistic missile proliferation. Remember at the time the treaty was drafted, there were two countries, the Soviet Union and the United States of America, that were capable of ballistic missile delivery against each other. Only two countries. That is why only two countries signed the Anti-ballistic Missile Treaty. Take a look at what has occurred in proliferation in countries throughout the world as indicated by the purple color on this chart. This is the proliferation of ballistic missiles. Ballistic missiles do not have to contain a nuclear warhead. They can, in fact, contain a warhead that has got a biological weapon. So these can be missiles with incoming biological weapons.

The fact is numerous countries throughout the world have acquired the capability to deliver a ballistic missile against the United States or against other countries or against allies of the United States or in fact against Russia. It is in Russia's best interests as well as the best interests of the United States that we acknowledge the fact that the world, that extraordinary events have occurred, and at the very top of that list is the capability to deliver a biological or nuclear weapon in either one of our countries by people who have not signed this treaty. That is the proliferation.

That is an extraordinary event. On that alone, this treaty should be abrogated. Let us look here. Remember again when we signed the treaty in the 1970s there were two countries with nuclear capability. Two of them, the Soviet Union and the United States. Now take a look. These are countries that now possess nuclear weapons: Britain, China, France, Pakistan, Israel, United States. I would add to that list North Korea. Of concern over here, I think North Korea has already accomplished it, Iraq, Iran, Libya.

Mr. Speaker, we are seeing, unfortunately, extraordinary events take place with the proliferation of countries, rogue countries, Third World countries, that are doing everything they can to acquire nuclear weapons. We stand back and say we should not build a missile defense. We are doing an injustice to future generations of this Nation. We see the disaster coming. We see the disaster coming. We have the opportunity today, the American people, the leaders of the American people, the government of the American people, we have the opportunity today to build a system that will stop missile delivery of nuclear weapons. That will stop missile delivery of biological weapons. That is our obligation. We can do it.

So any kind of argument that we see in these Chambers about the fact that the United States does not need missile defense are ill-founded on their face. Of course this Nation needs it. Thank goodness the President of the United States recognizes the fact that the Anti-ballistic Missile Treaty, which is the only thing standing in the way of an effective missile defense for this country, thank goodness that the President recognizes that extraordinary events which trigger the ability to leave the treaty have occurred.

The President's response tonight, which I thought was very eloquent, he talked about it is to Russia's benefit as well. The United States is not developing a missile defensive system to the exclusion of every other country in the world. It is our intent to develop a system that we can share with our close friends like the British, like Canada, and Mexico and frankly be willing to share with other countries. If we build the right kind of system, satellite laser system, we actually could assist any country in the world, friend or foe, from a missile attack against that country.

Just imagine for a moment if Russia, for example, by accident launched a missile on this country. A nuclear missile. Let us say that it hit Philadelphia or some city and wipes out a city. You know, the retaliation or the repercussions of the actual hit, the result of that missile, would be so significant none of us can even imagine. It is as hard to imagine those kinds of results as what we saw occur in New York City on September 11.

What would it mean? Would it mean a new world war? Would it mean such massive retaliation by the United States that Russia then would fire whatever they had left at the United States? We have an opportunity to avoid that disaster by providing this country with the capability to stop incoming missiles whether they are accidentally fired at the United States or whether they are intentionally fired against the United States.

Now, some people will say to you, ''Well, now look, you know, Scott, this kind of missile thing is not going to happen. Let's hope it away.''

And I just tell you 10 days ago, although the press has been very heavy on Afghanistan and our military theater of operations over there, consider the fact that about 10 days ago, a missile was fired by accident, and a missile did hit a target that no one intended for it to hit and it did in fact bring down a commercial airliner and killed everybody on board. That ought to tell you that accidents can happen. We are naive, and we are almost shameful if we do not think that in the future at some point this country is going to be challenged by a missile that is inbound, and we have the opportunity today to stop it. We have not only the opportunity today to stop it, we have the obligation to stop it. And we can do it.

So missile defense, I was so pleased that that question was asked of the President tonight. This President intends to lead this Nation not only to victory over the cancer of terrorism but he also intends to lead this country to victory in its defense of its homeland security. And a part of that is to build a missile defensive system that will give us the kind of security that a lot of us think we have right now. There are a lot of people out there that think we have the capability to stop these kind of things. So this President, as he is doing with other causes, is taking the leadership role. I for one am more than happy to stand tall behind him. As all of us are standing, most of us, tall behind his leadership against the cancer of terrorism, let us too be counted standing behind him for the missile defense system of this country.

Let me go back, leave this subject for a moment, and talk very briefly about the economy, because the President also covered the economy this evening, and I think his remarks were very important. This economy will recover. This economy has some very fundamental strengths to it. This economy has been bruised by the September 11 attacks. The economy was limping along prior to September 11. It happens. Our economy runs in cycles. It has run in cycles throughout the history of mankind. The economies of every country in the world run in cycles. We are in a cyclical state. The worst thing that can keep us in a downward cycle, the worst thing that can continue to propel us into the ground is loss of confidence. It is just like the worst thing that could work against us is the fear of fear. Our greatest fear is but fear itself. And it is the same thing, too, we should apply to our economy. We as Americans need to continue to go out and do what we can to bolster our economy, increase our job performance. Employers, you need to pay your employees what is necessary to keep them so that they can support their families. Our inventors, our capital investment, our inventors need to continue to invent the great products that this country is known for. We need to keep incentive in the system out there. I am very confident that the economy will continue through its cyclical correction but that the country will again see an uplift in our economy. So I urge people not to panic. I urge people that as the Christmas season approaches, go out and buy and spend as you would in a normal Christmas. I am not saying to do it unwisely. I am not saying to waste money. But I am saying that your consumer confidence, our constituents' confidence is the big engine that is driving this economy. And if we can, whatever we can do to sit down with our constituents and tell them just what the basic fundamentals of our economy are and how strong they are, we are not going to have a recovery tomorrow. We are not going to see the boom times with the stock market. People were actually writing and selling books about what happens when the Dow hits 30,000. We are not going to see that. But what we are going to see is a cyclical correction that also leads to the recovery of an economy. We here in the United States Congress will be acting on a stimulus package. In fact our fine chairman, the gentleman from California (Mr. THOMAS), will be chairing the Committee on Ways and Means upon which I sit tomorrow to consider debate and to report out a bill for some type of stimulus package. The government cannot do it all. I think our constituents understand that. We do not need to lecture our constituents. They understand the government cannot do it all, but the government can help. Alan Greenspan has helped by putting more money in, by lowering interest rates. Any of our constituents that are out there that are paying credit card interest that is at all above 10 percent in my opinion, I would consider it excessive. I mean, Greenspan has lowered those rates so dramatically that every American, every American that uses credit, whether it is on your credit card or whether it is for your house ought to be seeing the benefit. And if you are not seeing the benefit, if your constituents are not seeing the benefit of lower interest rates from their credit card companies, tell them to dump that company and go with a company that is going to be fair with them, that is going to give them a rate that fairly evaluates the risk that is involved in doing business with them.

There are a lot of things out there that are going to work in our favor. One of the things that I think that can come out of that stimulus package tomorrow is broad based tax cuts, not tax cuts for one specific individual or one specific industry but broad based. We need to get consumer confidence back in an upward mode. A stimulus package cannot do it all, as I said, but we can go a long ways, in putting incentive out there in the system so that once again our economic engine warms up and begins that climb up the hill. I know I can; I know I can. We know that that is going to happen. So I feel confident about our economy.

To wrap it up, I want to first of all thank my colleague the gentleman from California (Mr. HERGER) for the discussion, I thought a very thorough discussion we had this evening on missile defense. I think the President did a very commendable job. And I, like many, many hundreds of thousands of Americans, and I like most of my colleagues, if not all of my colleagues on this House floor, stand in gratitude for the leadership that the President has shown to this country, to the leadership that Dick Cheney and Donald Rumsfeld and Condoleezza Rice and the other Cabinet members and our national security team and our military leaders and our military personnel, all across this country, thank God we have got these kind of people that are dedicated, in many cases with their lives, are dedicated to the cause of the United States of America. Thank God we have got people who are willing to make it their entire focus, in a patient, strong but dedicated way to make sure that the United States of America continues to prevail for the next generation in the good way that it has prevailed for our generation. Thank goodness we have got a country that recognizes all types of different religions, that allows people of different ethnic backgrounds to thrive in this country. We are equal under our laws around here. There are some countries in this world that will not allow foreign people to come in and be citizens. Many countries do not have open borders at all. They have closed borders. There are a lot of countries in this world who discriminate very clearly against other religions. But in the United States of America, whether you practice Islam, whether you are a Catholic, whether you are a Methodist, Episcopalian, a Mormon, even being an atheist in this country is protected by our Constitution. It is the strength of that Constitution that will increase the strength of this country. It is being respected by this President and his team.

My final remark is that I stand tall with all my colleagues in backing the President and his team. Let us go out there and let us eradicate the cancer that has fallen upon us. We owe it to ourselves. We owe it to future generations. It is an obligation and a responsibility of our job. And, frankly, we can get the job done.

SENATE—Thursday, October 11, 2001

The Senate met at 10 a.m. and was called to order by the Honorable JACK REED, a Senator from the State of Rhode Island.

PRAYER

The Chaplain, Dr. Lloyd John Ogilvie, offered the following prayer:

Faithful Father, on this day of remembrance of the infamous terrorist attack on our Nation one month ago, we hear the words of the Psalmist sounding in our souls, ''Wait on the Lord; be of good courage, and He shall strengthen your heart; wait, I say, on the Lord!''—Psalm 27:14. You alone are the source of our strength and courage. Continue to heal the aching hearts of those who lost loved ones and friends at the World Trade Center and the Pentagon.

Dear Lord of comfort, we intercede for the families of the police and firefighters who died seeking to save others. We feel the incredible grief of those who endure loneliness now for those gallant people who were aboard the airplanes that were turned into missiles of destruction. All across our Nation people are gripped by fear of future attacks. Replace that panic with Your peace. Bolster our broken hearts with relentless resolve to confront and conquer terrorism. Bless the women and men of our armed services. Keep them safe as they press on to victory. Without Your help we cannot succeed; with Your power we shall not fail. You are our Lord and Saviour. Amen.

PLEDGE OF ALLEGIANCE

The Honorable JACK REED led the Pledge of Allegiance, as follows:

I pledge allegiance to the Flag of the United States of America and to the Republic for which it stands, one nation under God, indivisible, with liberty and justice for all.

APPOINTMENT OF ACTING PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will please read a communication to the Senate from the President pro tempore [Mr. BYRD].

The assistant legislative clerk read the following letter:

U.S. SENATE,
PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE,
Washington, DC, October 11, 2001.

To the Senate:

Under the provisions of rule I, paragraph 3, of the Standing Rules of the Senate, I hereby appoint the Honorable JACK REED, a Senator from the State of Rhode Island, to perform the duties of the Chair.

ROBERT C. BYRD,
President pro tempore.

Mr. REED thereupon assumed the chair as Acting President pro tempore.

RECOGNITION OF THE ACTING MAJORITY LEADER

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The acting majority leader is recognized.

SCHEDULE

Mr. REID. Mr. President, the Senate resumes consideration of S. 1477, the aviation security bill. It is my understanding that the managers are expecting to clear some more amendments this morning and are working with other Members who have indicated they have amendments to this important legislation.

The first vote—on the Daschle-Carnahan amendment—will be later today. After we vote on that, Senators may expect other votes to occur this afternoon and into this evening as we make every effort to complete action on this important legislation today and then turn our attention today, we hope—and we really need to do this—to another important matter, the counterterrorism bill, on which a unanimous consent agreement has been reached.

Because of some very important matters that some Members have, some of which are spiritual in nature, I ask unanimous consent that the previously scheduled cloture vote on the Daschle-Carnahan amendment occur at 1:35 p.m. today and that the other provisions remain in effect, with the time from 12:35 until 1:35 to be divided in the usual form.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, as Senator HOLLINGS has indicated, he also believes we can finish this legislation. I just completed a conversation with him. He has worked on this legislation, along with Senator MCCAIN, for so long. We are anxious and happy we are on this legislation. It is important for the country. We ask everyone's cooperation. If they have an amendment, come and work on the amendment. In regard to this legislation, everyone should know we are not going to wait around for people to come in with amendments. If we arrive at a point where we have no amendments, we will move on to complete consideration of the bill in its entirety.

RESERVATION OF LEADER TIME

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the previous order, the leadership time is reserved.

AVIATION SECURITY ACT

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the previous order, the Senate will now resume consideration of S. 1477, which the clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 1447) to improve aviation security, and for other purposes.

Pending:

Daschle (for Carnahan) amendment No. 1855, to provide assistance for employees who are separated from employment as a result of reductions in service by air carriers, and closures of airports, caused by terrorist actions or security measures.

Gramm amendment No. 1859 (to amendment No. 1855), to provide for the exploration, development, and production of oil and gas resources of the Arctic Coastal Plains.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, we all realize this morning that a month has passed since the disaster of September 11, and we still are confronted with the need for airline security, as the headlines in Roll Call state, ''Airport Firms Form Alliance''; as well as, ''Baggage Screening Companies Take Case to the Hill.''

So one month after this fanatical killing of 5,000 to 6,000 Americans, thousands more casualties, and as many as 10,000 children left without a parent, some without 2 parents, we are being delayed by the contractors and the lobbyists. One of them particularly, cited in this case, has banded together in a lobbying drive that so far has succeeded—Argenbright.

There is also an article in the Miami Herald published Thursday, September 13 about their efforts. I ask unanimous consent that the article in full be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Miami Herald, Sept. 13, 2001]

(By Tyler Bridges)

ATLANTA.—The security company that provides the checkpoint workers at the airports breached by Tuesday's hijackers has been cited at least twice for security lapses. In its worst infraction, Atlanta-based Argenbright Security pleaded guilty last year to allowing untrained employees, some with criminal backgrounds, to operate checkpoints at Philadelphia International Airport. In settling the charges, Argenbright agreed to pay $1.2 million in fines and investigative costs. Argenbright also came under criticism in 1999 for security breaches that caused delays of Northwest Airline flights. Argenbright was also found to have committed dozens of violations of federal labor laws against its employees at Los Angeles International Airport, an adminsitrative law judge ruled in February 2000. The violations included 40 suspensions and final warnings stemming from a strike by the employees in April 1999. The violations also include the disciplining of another union activist and threats, both written and verbal, against the Argenbright employees. Among other disciplinary action, Argenbright was required to remove warnings from files related to the strike and give suspended workers back pay.

Argenbright, a subsidiary of AHL Services, provides security workers at 17 of the nation's 20 largest airport hubs, including Newark, Logan and Dulles, where the hijacked flights originated. The company is hired by the airlines. There was a report Wednesday that two of the hijackers who flew out of Logan might have arrived there from Portland International Airport in Maine. A spokesman there said the airlines at the airport use another security firm, not Argenbright.

Argenbright officials declined to speak with a reporter Wednesday. The company released a statement that expressed sorrow for the ''tragic events'' and said officials are ''working closely with and providing full support to its airline customers as they deal with the aftermath of yesterday's major terrorist attack.'' Argenbright also provides checkpoint security at Miami International Airport. Gary Dellapa, the airport's former director, said the company got average marks for its work.

In the Philadelphia case, Argenbright hired more than 1,300 untrained checkpoint screeners form 1995 through 1998 without checking their backgrounds. Among these employees were ''dozens of criminals,'' according to the government's sentencing memorandum. Argenbright falsely certified that the company had done the background checks and fraudulently charged airlines for this work, the government said. U.S. Attorney Michael R. Stiles in Philadelphia said the violations of Federal Aviation Administration Regulations did not harm any passengers or the airlines. But his office said that ''if corporations such as Argenbright Security Inc. fail to meet their obligations and responsibilities, then the millions of people who fly on commercial aircraft every day are put at risk.'' Edwin R. Mellett, vice chairman and co-chief executive officer of AHL Services, said at the time that the company fired the employees directly involved in the fraud and cooperated with the investigation.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Argenbright is a contractor at Logan Airport, at Newark Airport, and at Dulles, all three airports from which the planes on that disastrous day were taken over.

The article relayed how the firm was fined for misgivings and misdeeds at Philadelphia. It says Argenbright, a subsidiary of AHL Services, provides security workers at 17 of the Nation's 20 largest airport hubs, including Newark, Logan, and Dulles, where the hijacked flights originated.

The company is hired by the airlines. Incidentally, the major amendment we have is for airline worker benefits. I thought we passed a $15 billion package so we could stabilize the airlines so they could continue the health care and pay for their workers. But, no, we have to have an additional amendment to take care of the unemployed airline workers. I do not know what the $15 billion did, whether or not it took care of the airline bonuses that we all know about.

Let me read. In the Philadelphia case, Argenbright hired more than 1,300 untrained checkpoint screeners from 1995 through 1998 without checking their backgrounds. Among these employees were dozens of criminals. That is in quote marks—''dozens of criminals.'' According to the Government's sentencing memorandum, Argenbright falsely certified the company had done the background checks and fraudulently charged the airlines for this work. In other words, they lied about the background checks and charged the airlines for the background checks they lied about. Yet they hold us up for an entire month because we want to prevent further negligence. As has been stated, we had a pretty sobering lesson with Pan Am 103 and we knew how security was lax at that particular time, so we were working to strengthen it. We were going to have higher standards. We were going to have more training. We were going to have supervision and more pay.

And then in 1996, TWA 800. Guess what. We had all kinds of studies, commissions, hearings. All this debate about contracts has been ongoing now for 15 years. What did we come up with? More higher standards, more training hours, more supervision, and more pay. But you have to contract out.

No one would ever think contracting would help the Border Patrol. No one would think of contracting out the FBI. No one would ever think about contracting out the security and protection of the President, the Secret Service. No one would think about contracting out our security, the Capitol Police.

Walking into the Capitol today, I was asked, should we get the National Guard around the Capitol? We have the Capitol Police. They are not only adequate, they are more than adequate. They have been doing an outstanding job. We don't need any more National Guard troops running around and everything else of that kind. Terrorists would do better than getting a Senator or two or a bunch of them. They would be replaced by the Governor by sundown, so you couldn't get rid of them.

In any event, here we come. No one would think about contracting out the Customs agents or any of these other security workers or the 669,000 civilian workers in defense. They are Civil Service, they get health care. They get retirement benefits. They are stable. They are reliable. They are professional. They are accountable. That is what we are trying to do in a bipartisan fashion.

Who is holding the Senate up? The lying, thieving lobbyists who said contract, contract, contract out.

We have federalization in the bill. I want to see who comes to take it out of the bill. The unmitigated gall of that crowd running around here after learning what we've learned for 15 years, and particularly after the September 11 hijackings and terrorist killings, they have the unmitigated gall to say that is what we ought to do again.

They don't have any idea of security. They have an idea of their political issue and their reelection because they pledged to downsize, get rid of the Government—the Government is not the solution, the Government is the problem. So they can't viscerally, ideologically, or philosophically, even think in terms of security. They are like a chicken with the line in the sand: In my reelection, I pledged to get rid of the Government, and I'm not about to vote for 28,000 professionals.

If we get the bill to the House, we can negotiate what is necessary. The traveling public are ready, willing, and anxious to pay for it. Heavens above, we ought to at least take away the threat of being shot down. The day before yesterday, and yesterday again, somebody hands a note to the pilot, and good gosh, you have F–16s, A–10s, F–15s flying above ready to shoot you down. Who wants to get on a plane and get shot down?

This bill, S. 1447, will take care of that. We lock the cockpit door; it is never open. Let me emphasize, the chief pilot of El Al said: My wife can be assaulted in the cabin, but I don't open that door. The intended hijacker knows he will not be able to hijack the plane. He can start a fight. He can maybe kill some people. He is going to get killed himself.

You can see how the traveling public is ready to take them out. They did on the flight yesterday. They did on the flight the day before. More power to these patriotic Americans. The people understand. When is the Senate going to understand and cut out this dillying around and get together to pass security, safety? It is unheard of that they would resist, having learned from all of these other experiences, having learned from September 11 to not even give it a second thought, just bite their teeth and say: We are not going to have the Federal Government do anything. We don't trust government.

I think we were elected to get the Government to work. And we have tried the so-called contracting already. We can easily lock that door. That does away with the expense of everybody being on alert, flying planes around. No one put that cost down in defense, but we will get the Defense appropriations measure, and they will find out, as a result of our dillying around, we have a charge now for guard units that are alerted—to do what? To shoot down domestic flights. Why? Because of the Senate.

We should have gotten off our backsides and seen reality and been ready, by gosh, to get moving here on an airline security measure. Yes, we federalize. We are proud of it. It is taken care of. It is paid for. The pilots are for it. The executives are for it. The flight attendants are for it. The municipal association is for it. Everybody is for it except the lobbyists, who want to continue to cheat and continue to defraud. Isn't it grand? We have put up with it long enough.

There is no reason we can't get through this bill today. We have two or three amendments. I think we can temporarily set aside Carnahan. We have the final vote at 1:35, so that time has been changed because the distinguished cardinal is coming to town and we have a prayer service. So we will go along and put it off for another hour, but they can debate that amendment. Everyone knows its merit. Otherwise, we ought to have two or three amendments here this morning and move ahead this afternoon.

I yield the floor.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, at 1:35 we will vote on the Carnahan amendment. I am proud to be a sponsor with Senator CARNAHAN. I thank Senator CARNAHAN for the thoughtful amendment she has proposed. I join in urging our colleagues to support that amendment.

As the opening prayer indicated, we all have a sense as we rise on the Senate floor about the momentous time this is, the 1-month anniversary of the terrorist attack. We are being summoned as a nation to give thoughtful prayer and consideration to those who lost their lives. Our colleagues are doing so at the Pentagon and other services throughout the day. We are all mindful of that, and supportive of it.

But we also want to carry on our Nation's business, and we are mindful of the actions that have been taken and will be taken in the very near future. We know that just after the attacks on the World Trade Center and the Pentagon that all the airlines effectively were grounded for a period of time, as a direct result of that. We found that the airline industry was compromised and was facing a very bleak and ominous future. Whether the industry itself was going to be able to survive was in question.

Those issues were talked about here, discussed, debated on the floor of the Senate. It is unusual that the Federal Government effectively closes down a particular industry, an industry that has very broad implications in terms of our economy. But, the federal government took that action and, therefore, we felt we had an additional responsibility to help, assist, and offset the losses of those airlines, particularly those losses that had been incurred as a result of the Federal action.

Of course it is a complicated issue because some of these airlines were facing difficult financial situations at best and those adverse situations were accelerated because of the actions of the Federal Government. But no one questions or doubts that the actions taken by the FAA and Department of Transportation were in the national interest. No one questions that. So we have a responsibility to address that.

In a matter of really 2 or 3 days here in the Senate we took action, some $15 billion to make sure the airline industry was going to be preserved and that there were a range of different financial supports for the airline industry. As a result, we took care of an industry and we took care of management personnel, but we failed, in a very serious way, to take care of the workers in that industry who were just as adversely impacted as those who fly the planes and the management personnel who supervise the industry, without which the airline industry would not be able to function. These workers were left out and left behind. That was a critical mistake.

The Carnahan amendment is an attempt to remedy that mistake. 120,000 workers were directly affected by the decision regarding the airline industry, which is trying to get back on its feet. As a direct result of the terrorist attack, those 120,000 workers have lost their jobs—the flight attendants, reservation clerks, baggage handlers, caterers, mechanics, those who make the spare parts and those who service and clean the aircraft—they would be working today. They would have a future of some hope and some opportunity. Now 120,000 of them have lost their jobs. The Carnahan amendment will not restore their jobs, but it will ease the pain that these workers are experiencing by extending unemployment compensation, to which they have indirectly contributed, maintaining their health insurance, and maintaining the opportunity for some training for these workers.

They lost their jobs, not because they didn't show up for work, not because they have not worked and had superior job performance over a period of years—one worker who I met on Sunday night before returning to Washington, had worked for the airline for 10 years. Yet they were cutting down, people who had worked there for 10 years—she lost her job. She had been an outstanding employee.

All this amendment is saying is, as we took care of the airline industry, as we took care of the management personnel, let us at least show some consideration for the 120,000 workers.

We know we have an important responsibility to pass this legislation. I am eager to vote for it and support the position of the Senator from South Carolina, in terms of the federalization of these workers at the airports. We can get through that today. No one is interested in undue delay.

We know we are also going to have the antiterrorism bill which we have every expectation will pass this week. Then we know we will have an opportunity to talk about the stimulus package, to try to meet our responsibility to the millions of workers who have been laid off, have lost their jobs and are suffering in all parts of our Nation. We have a responsibility to address those needs.

The Carnahan amendment basically addresses an issue of fairness. It is fairness to the workers. We are saying we took care of the industry in those emergency times in a few short days, but we left out the workers. That is unfair. Americans understand fairness. All we are saying, for those particular workers to whom we were unfair at that time when we passed the Airline Security Act, we are going to be fair to them to some extent. We are not going to restore their jobs, which would be something they would want and they would be eager to accept, but we are showing we are not forgetting them. That is why this Carnahan amendment is so important.

We have to speak for those workers. I supported the airline emergency legislation. It was important. But we recognize that at that time, as we were looking at the industry and also focused on the victims, those families who had gone through such extraordinary trauma and loss, the workers were left out and left behind. That was wrong. This amendment tries to redress that kind of injustice.

It is fair. It is sensible. It is responsible. It is a very moderate amendment in what it tries to do, in terms of the health insurance, training, and unemployment compensation. It would be wrong for this body to reject that proposal. I am hopeful that we will accept it and will vote on cloture and vote to accept this amendment.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. BREAUX. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent at this time to temporarily set aside the Carnahan amendment.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

AMENDMENT NO. 1861

Mr. BREAUX. Mr. President, I rise to call up amendment No. 1861, which is at the desk.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BREAUX] proposed an amendment numbered 1861.

Mr. BREAUX. I ask unanimous consent the reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

At the appropriate place, insert the following:

SEC. . LESS-THAN-LETHAL WEAPONRY FOR FLIGHT DECK CREWS.

(a) NATIONAL INSTITUTE OF JUSTICE STUDY.—The National Institute of Justice shall assess the range of less-than-lethal weaponry available for use by a flight deck crewmember temporarily to incapacitate an individual who presents a clear and present danger to the safety of the aircraft, its passengers, or individuals on the ground and report its findings and recommendations to the Secretary of Transportation within 90 days after the date of enactment of this Act.

Section 44903 of title 49, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end the following:

''(h) AUTHORITY TO ARM FLIGHT DECK CREW WITH LESS-THAN-LETHAL WEAPONS.

''(1) IN GENERAL.—If the Secretary, after receiving the recommendations of the National Institute of Justice, determines, with the approval of the Attorney General and the Secretary of State, that it is appropriate and necessary and would effectively serve the public interest in avoiding air piracy, the Secretary may authorize members of the flight deck crew on any aircraft providing air transportation or intrastate air transportation to carry a less-than-lethal weapon while the aircraft is engaged in providing such transportation.

''(2) USAGE.—If the Secretary grants authority under paragraph (1) for flight deck crew members to carry a less-than-lethal weapon while engaged in providing air transportation or intrastate air transportation, the Secretary shall—

''(A) prescribe rules requiring that any such crew member to trained in the proper use of the weapon; and

''(B) prescribe guidelines setting forth the circumstances under which such weapons may be used.''.

Mr. BREAUX. Mr. President, it is absolutely, critically important that the bill before the Senate pass and be signed into law, and that it be passed and signed into law as quickly as possible.

One of the biggest concerns the American public have, ever since the tragic day of September 11, is the fear of getting back into airplanes in safety. That, certainly, by any measure, is an understandable fear.

If you look at some of the incidents that have occurred, even since September 11, you see a greater degree of concern than we have ever had since the Wright Brothers started flying airplanes about airplane safety.

Yesterday a plane had to make an emergency landing in Shreveport, LA, because of a disturbed, deranged passenger. We saw just a couple of days ago a passenger breaking into the cockpit of a commercial airliner—again a deranged passenger, not necessarily connected with any terrorist incident.

But all of this points to the fact that we can no longer do business as usual when it comes to airline security and safety. Our surface transportation subcommittee of the Commerce Committee, which I am privileged to chair, is also looking at the safety and security of not only airplanes, but also whether it is safe to ride on Amtrak passenger trains, whether it is safe to take a trip on a passenger cruise line with literally thousands of working people and crew on those ships as well as, literally, thousands of passengers. So all modes of transportation are being looked at as we have never before done in the history of this country. And that is good.

This Congress, in a bipartisan way so far, has been able to respond to those threats, has been able to produce legislation in a timely fashion, like the bill of the chairman, Senator HOLLINGS, that is before the Senate today. In a bipartisan fashion it says we are no longer going to be lackadaisical about airline security.

We are no longer going to give the job of making sure airlines are secure to the low bidder. We are not going to be worried about who can do it the cheapest but rather who can do it the best.

That is what this bill before the Senate, which I strongly support, is all about. It is must-do legislation, and it should be done as quickly as possible.

Along with that debate, a lot of people have made various suggestions about how we can further secure the flying public on airlines.

Some have suggested that every airline should have air marshals aboard. I think that is a good suggestion—people who are trained in order to prevent hijacking or disturbing the operations of the plane.

Some have suggested we ought to arm the pilot, the copilot, and the navigator, if there is one on a particular plane, so they can protect the cockpit.

Actually, I think the best way to protect the cockpit is to seal it off. If you can't get into the cockpit from the back of the plane, the plane cannot be hijacked to a different location. I think it is just that simple.

The security of the cockpit door so that it is completely inaccessible from the back of the cabin, unless the pilot and the copilot want it to be, is absolutely essential. This bill would allow that to occur. That is a degree of safety that is very important.

Others have argued that the pilot and the copilot should be armed. I do not know if they want to arm them with AK–47s or .38 or .45 pistols or rifles or shotguns. But they have suggested various methods to arm the crew of a plane with lethal weapons that could be used in the event of a disturbance by passengers who are intent on bringing down the aircraft or doing bodily harm to the people on the plane. I think that goes a little further than I think most Members of Congress are willing to go.

Obviously, if you have lethal weapons in a plane, a number of things can happen. Just like when you throw a ball at a football game, only two things can happen: You can complete the pass, or have an interception; or, possibly three: You can have an incompleted pass. Only one of those is good for your team.

When you arm the cockpit, a number of things can happen. Many of them are not good: You can have those weapons get into the hands of the hijackers themselves. You can have those weapons do bodily damage to passengers or kill them on the plane, by mistake or by accident. Or you can have a lethal weapon with a high-powered bullet actually penetrate the skin of the airplane, causing decompression of the airplane and causing it to be in a very precarious position and in danger of crashing and killing everyone on the plane.

A lot of bad, unintended things can happen if you arm the pilot and the crew with lethal weapons on the plane.

Therefore, my amendment simply says that we want to take a look at other types of weapons which would be nonlethal and which also could be effective in disarming people who are intent on bringing down or hijacking the plane, thereby providing greater security to the captain and the copilot of the plane.

My amendment is relatively very simple. It requires the Institute of Justice to assess the range of nonlethal weapons for use by flight deck crew members that could temporarily incapacitate an individual who presents a clear and present danger to that aircraft and present those findings to the Secretary of Transportation within 90 days.

If the Secretary—after they get that recommendation and after it has been carefully considered—determines that nonlethal weapons are appropriate and necessary and would effectively serve the public interest, then the Secretary may authorize the flight deck crew in an airliner to carry that less-than-lethal weapon while the airline is engaged in providing transportation.

If the Secretary makes the determination that they want to go forward, the Secretary must prescribe the rules the crew members have to follow. And they also have to establish the rules that require the crew members be in fact trained in the proper use of the weapon and precise guidelines as to when those weapons can be used.

It is very interesting. I am sure the Presiding Officer, with his military background, has seen a lot of different weapons that are lethal and nonlethal, of course.

On the nonlethal weapons, I had a demonstration in my office. It is another story about how they got the nonlethal weapons into my office. They said they did not have much of a problem at all. They walked in with a suitcase full of very curious weapons and said they were bringing them to show me. And they got right in. I guess they were properly checked and that security was followed. I hope so.

The members of the Justice Department brought in a whole array of what they call nonlethal weapons that are available under current technology. They range from electronic shock weapons to stun guns. The brand name is Tasers. They are really interesting. They can incapacitate a person by merely touching them with the weapon. The new stun guns can actually deliver an electric shock to a disturbed or a terrorist individual from a distance of up to about 20 feet and incapacitate them with the stun gun in order for people to take control of those individuals while they are knocked semiconscious, not killing them but certainly incapacitating them so you can again control of the airplane. These are effective.

The technology is proven technology. And we are saying that the Department of Justice and the National Institute of Justice, which does that type of work within the Justice Department, should evaluate the potential for using these types of stun guns on airplanes. I think they can be very effective weapons in incapacitating someone who is trying to take over the airplane without doing deadly harm to other passengers and without danger of penetrating the walls of the airplane, decompressing the airplane, and causing severe problems.

These weapons can work. But I don't think I know enough about them—and I dare say most Members don't know enough about them—as to whether they can really be used on the airplane. That is why I am calling for this study and to report back to the Congress to let us know what they are doing. When the Secretary gets that report, he can authorize it if he thinks it is appropriate.

Other items that are nonlethal in addition to the stun guns are what they call chemical incapacitants, which is a fancy name for basically the pepper-spray-type system, which looks like a handgun or a pistol and shoots these little pellets that contain various pepper ingredients. They are very small.

When these pepper spray dispersants shoot these little pellets, they will hit the person in the chest. They don't break or explode violently, but they will burst open and spray the person who has been hit with it with a pepper-type ingredient which will incapacitate them temporarily and sufficiently to allow people to take control of that individual.

The anesthetizing darts are nonlethal projectiles which can anesthetize someone and incapacitate them at the same time. It is a little dart that cannot penetrate the cabin, but a dart would penetrate the individual to anesthetize and incapacitate them.

There are little things called impact projectiles, which are airfoil projectiles. They are hard plastic projectiles. If you get hit with them, you are going to get knocked down and not be able to continue doing what you were doing before you were hit by them; I guarantee it.

There are disabling devices called dazzling-laser-light devices, which are sort of interesting. They showed me these weapons in my office. You can hit a person in the face with this laser light, and the closer they come to the weapon, or the laser light, the less they can see because it really hits them with a laser light that absolutely temporarily blinds and they cannot see. This is a Flash Gordon-type of weapon that can incapacitate someone. It has a lot of possibilities.

Finally, physical entanglement devices: This is a small projectile that actually sends out a net. I have seen it used in wildlife reserves when wildlife officials try to capture a wild animal. This net covers the animal and allows the people to catch the animal for whatever purpose they are trying to catch it. It does not harm the animal, but it certainly incapacitates it. These same types of systems can be used in a plane and be very effective.

I do not know that any of these are the answer, but I do suspect one, or a combination of some of them, would be effective for the pilot, for the copilot, or for members of the flight crew, to give them extra protection.

I do not want to make a decision today in this Chamber that one of these is the best. That is why this amendment simply says we would require the Institute of Justice, within the Department of Justice, to assess the range of these weapons, and within 90 days—it is not going to take that long—to give a report to the Secretary of Transportation on their findings of whether one is good, one is better, one is not so good, or whether none of them is good, and make that recommendation to the Secretary.

Under my amendment, if the Secretary, after getting those recommendations, determines, with the approval of the Attorney General—and I have the approval of the Secretary of State—that it is appropriate and necessary and would effectively serve the public interest, then the Secretary can authorize the members of the flight deck to carry less-than-lethal weapons on board. I think it is in keeping with the chairman's desire to protect the passengers and crew.

This is a good bill. It should not be delayed. We should do it this week. It will be the added security that the American flying public will have, to give them the guarantee that, in fact, it is absolutely totally safe to get back in our planes to fly to whatever destination safely, and secure in the knowledge that everything has been done to protect them and the crew. I hope my colleagues will be in a position to realize this is the correct approach.

I yield the floor.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, I thank our colleague from Louisiana, Senator BREAUX, for his thoughtful presentation.

The chief pilot of all the pilots of El Al, in his testimony, asked for stun guns at that particular time. I know there has been a suggestion about a Colt .45. I carried one of those for 3 years-plus, and other weaponry, in combat. But you do not want anybody with a Colt .45 on a plane. The distinguished Presiding Officer, as a great West Point graduate, knows you are liable to hit what you want to hit, but then the bullet could go through and ricochet around and hit two or three other people. That is just too much firepower.

This particular approach is deliberate and thoughtful. I would be ready to accept it on behalf of our side. We are checking with Senator MCCAIN and the other side right now to see what they desire. There could be further debate. I heard a moment ago that another Senator wishes to address the subject.

Let me commend Senator BREAUX for his leadership in this particular regard because this can be analyzed. Obviously, the Senators cannot analyze everything that is necessary to give the proper security. There is no doubt that some kind of added protection would be in order.

For my part, of course, when we close that secure cockpit door, we have pilots to fly, not to fight. So it is that even then, with a stun gun, fine, all right, so they cannot really kill someone, but even that would not be necessary in this Senator's view. But whatever the decision of the body is on this particular score, it seems to me that the Senator from Louisiana is on the right track.

It can be studied, analyzed, and provided for with this particular approach—not just for us, for wanting to have done something, to say, well, we are going to authorize a .45 caliber pistol or a Thompson submachine gun or an M–1, or anything else of that particular kind. We have to be far, far more careful in some of the security initiatives that we have undertaken.

I thank the distinguished Senator. We will check with our colleague who wants to be heard on this matter. Pending that, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

The senior assistant bill clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, in urging the adoption of the Breaux amendment, there is one colleague at the memorial exercise who would want to be heard and perhaps have an amendment. The adoption of the Breaux amendment will not forgo any consideration he may have, if he thinks it is an improvement. I wanted to say that publicly because we are not trying, on the one hand, to disregard the desire of all of us to be at that memorial service and at the same time overriding the duty we have here on the floor to move this legislation.

In that light, I then urge the adoption of the Breaux amendment.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there further debate? If not, the question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

The amendment (No. 1861) was agreed to.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that we set aside the Daschle-Carnahan amendment so that we can consider both the Inouye and the Rockefeller amendments.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

AMENDMENT NO. 1865

Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, the distinguished Senator from Hawaii, Mr. INOUYE, has an amendment that I send to the desk and ask the clerk to report.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will report.

The senior assistant bill clerk read as follows:

The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. HOLLINGS], for Mr. INOUYE, proposes an amendment numbered 1865.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

(Purpose: To authorize the Secretary of Transportation to grant waivers for restrictions on air transportation of freight, mail, and medical supplies, personnel, and patients to, from, and within States with extraordinary air transportation needs or concerns during national emergencies)

At the appropriate place, insert the following:

SEC. . MAIL AND FREIGHT WAIVERS.

During a national emergency affecting air transportation or intrastate air transportation, the Secretary of Transportation, after consultation with the Aviation Security Coordination Council, may grant a complete or partial waiver of any restrictions on the carriage by aircraft of freight, mail, emergency medical supplies, personnel, or patients on aircraft, imposed by the Department of Transportation (or other Federal agency or department) that would permit such carriage of freight, mail, emergency medical supplies, personnel, or patients on flights, to, from, or within States with extraordinary air transportation needs or concerns if the Secretary determines that the waiver is in the public interest, taking into consideration the isolation of and dependence on air transportation of such States. The Secretary may impose reasonable limitations on any such waivers.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, this particular amendment has to do with waiver authority. At the time of the terrorism of 9/11, there were body parts in flight and prepared for flight in Hawaii to be used, of course, in life-saving organ operations. It was pointed out that those particular operations had to be stalled and set aside. This measure will provide emergency power to the Secretary to make a waiver for this reason in case planes have to be grounded, as was properly done on 9/11.

I urge for the adoption of that amendment. It has been cleared on both sides.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there further debate? If not, the question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

The amendment (No. 1865) was agreed to.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote.

Mr. HOLLINGS. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

AMENDMENTS NOS. 1866, 1867, AND 1868, EN BLOC

Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, with respect to the three Rockefeller amendments, one has to do with safety and security of onboard supplies that the flight personnel and pilots are concerned with.

The other Rockefeller amendment has to do with property and passengers. We have prescribed, everyone can see it on page 18 of the managers' amendment, whereby every bit of passenger luggage, cargo, and property will be screened. This provision would guarantee that all objects are checked, as I read it, by adding language on page 18, insert ''cargo, carry-on, and checked baggage, other articles.'' The other articles would be anything else. So there would be no dispute on that particular amendment.

With the third amendment, the reference is to the Secretary ensuring that the training curriculum is developed in consultation with Federal law enforcement. The Federal law enforcement has the expertise necessary. We want to make sure of this. The distinguished Senator and chairman of our Aviation Subcommittee, the Senator from West Virginia, Mr. ROCKEFELLER, wants to make sure of it.

I send these three amendments to the desk and ask the clerk to report each.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will report.

The senior assistant bill clerk read as follows:

The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. HOLLINGS], for Mr. ROCKEFELLER, proposes amendments en bloc numbered 1866, 1867, and 1868.

The amendments are as follows:

AMENDMENT NO. 1866

(Purpose: To establish minimum requirements for the antihijack training curriculum)

On page 17, line 16, after the period insert ''The Secretary shall ensure that the training curriculum is developed in consultation with Federal law enforcement agencies with expertise in terrorism, self-defense, hijacker psychology, and current threat conditions.''.

AMENDMENT NO. 1867

(Purpose: To require screening of carry-on and checked baggage and other articles carried aboard an aircraft)

On page 17, line 23, insert ''AND PROPERTY'' after ''PASSENGER''.

On page 18, line 5, after ''mail,'' insert ''cargo, carry-on and checked baggage, and other articles,''.

AMENDMENT NO. 1868

(Purpose: To ensure that supplies carried aboard an aircraft are safe and secure)

At the appropriate place, insert the following:

SEC. . SAFETY AND SECURITY OF ON-BOARD SUPPLIES.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary of Transportation shall establish procedures to ensure the safety and integrity of all supplies, including catering and passenger amenities, placed aboard aircraft providing passenger air transportation or intrastate air transportation.b)

(b) MEASURES.—In carrying out subsection (a), the Secretary may require—

(1) security procedures for supplies and their facilities;

(2) the sealing of supplies to ensure easy visual detection of tampering; and

(3) the screening of personnel, vehicles, and supplies entering secured areas of the airport or used in servicing aircraft.

Mr. HOLLINGS. I yield to the distinguished Senator from West Virginia.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. NELSON of Nebraska). The Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER. Mr. President, I urge the adoption of each of the three amendments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further debate? If not, without objection, the amendments are agreed to en bloc.

The amendments (Nos. 1866, 1867, and 1868) were agreed to.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER. I thank the Chair. They have been cleared on both sides.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote.

Mr. HOLLINGS. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DASCHLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

AMENDMENT NO. 1855

Mr. DASCHLE. Mr. President, I have come to the floor to speak to the Carnahan amendment. As everyone knows, the vote will be cast in a couple of hours. Today, it is 1 month since the terrorist attacks on America. In the days following September 11, we saw unbearable loss and unmatched heroism.

Now, as we take on those who perpetrated these attacks abroad, we have the opportunity—we have the duty—to prevent the economic aftereffects from rippling farther outward here at home.

For America's aviation workers and their families, the economic impact of the crisis is real, it is immediate, and it is devastating. Every day we see more reports of more layoffs. It is now estimated that 150,000 workers have lost their jobs in the airline industry alone. Many of these workers and their families have no income and no health insurance. What they face is not a recession; for them, it is a depression.

I think we all agree it was right for Congress to act quickly to stabilize the airline industry. It is long past the time for us, however, to help those aviation workers who got no help from that bill we passed a couple of weeks ago. That is what the Carnahan amendment would do. It is a fair, balanced, and temporary package of assistance to aviation workers.

There are those who say helping workers isn't relevant to this bill. Some are suggesting that we should again put off helping those working families. Let me ask you, how could you possibly say to 150,000 workers, who had good jobs one day and no jobs the next, that they are not relevant? How could you possibly tell 150,000 people, whose families have lost their source of income and, in many cases, their health care, that they should wait a little longer?

This is not a vote about relevance or timing. Let's be very clear about what this vote is. A vote against cloture is a vote against 150,000 aviation workers who lost their jobs as a direct result of the September 11 attacks. It is a vote against giving workers unemployment insurance. It is a vote against helping those workers and their families maintain health insurance. It is a vote against giving workers who lost their jobs training so they can find new jobs that will allow them to support themselves and their families.

A month ago today, America suffered the worst terrorist attack in all of history. All over the country, people are remembering the more than 6,000 innocent men and women who lost their lives on that terrible day. We need to remember that the people who died on September 11 were the terrorists' first victims. They were not their last. There are hundreds of thousands of other Americans who didn't lose their lives, but they did lose their livelihoods. They are the economic victims of the September 11 attack.

Right now, they are looking to us for help. They don't expect this Congress to solve all their problems. All they want is a little help to make it through one of the worst times in their lives.

Just days after September 11, when we passed that $15 billion airline bailout package, many of us wanted, even then, to include this help for displaced workers; but we were told: ''This is not the time. There will be another chance soon. We are going to consider an airline security bill. We can help the workers then.''

We reluctantly agreed to wait because we were told if we didn't get that airline bill done that Friday, the airlines would be grounded on Monday and we would see hundreds of thousands of additional workers out of work. So we passed that bill to keep our airlines flying, and keep those workers working.

After a week of delay, we are finally debating that airline security bill. Now what are we hearing? ''This is not the time. There is another bill coming, an economic stimulus package. We can help workers then.'' It is always ''then.'' It is never ''now.''

Senator CARNAHAN and others have put together a good, fair, affordable, and extremely limited assistance package for these workers. They have been remarkably flexible. They have made concession after concession. They have compromised and they have compromised.

They have cut the costs of the package by more than $1 billion. They have done everything anyone can do to build bipartisan support for this package.

It is time for Congress to show its commitment not only to the airline industry, but also to its workers. The time has come to move this package. We must not put these workers on hold yet again.

This issue is about values. We all espouse the importance of values. I have heard those speeches countless times here in the Senate Chamber how we hold our values so dear. Of all those values, I do not know of a value of greater import than the value of family, than the value of ensuring that we, as Americans, help one another. We built a country on those values—values of family, values of neighbor helping neighbor. This, too, is about values.

This is about preserving the integrity and the economic viability of those families who are the economic victims of September 11. This is about the values of people helping people in this country in a time of need.

The response since September 11th has been remarkable. Our country has responded in ways that make me proud to be an American. To watch those rescuers climb that rubble in the days following the attacks, as I did, to watch those Red Cross workers come to the site and work 20, 22-hour days as I did, to see people all over the country respond by putting up their flags, as they have, and, yes, to see Congress work together as closely as we have now for these last 4 weeks, makes me proud.

How sad it would be if we say, yes, we will help New York; yes, we will help the airlines; yes, we will try to do as many things as possible to put this country right again, but we will say no to those aviation workers.

Does that reflect our values? Is that in keeping with what we have done for these last 4 weeks? I do not think so.

I mentioned the word ''hope.'' The one thing we need to do, above and beyond anything else in our capacity as leaders in this country, is to give people hope. They need a reason for hope. That is what we are talking about this morning. That is why it is important we allow this legislation to pass. That is why we have to vote for cloture.

I hope every Member of this Senate, when they vote on cloture this afternoon, will imagine themselves sitting in the living room of one of those unemployed families. You are sitting in the armchair, and they are sitting on the sofa across the room, and they are asking you to vote. I would like you to look in their eyes and say no. No one could do that.

We have to look in their eyes in that living room. We have to say: We understand all of your anxiety and all of your pain and all of the economic concern you have for your family. And then we must say, in the context of values, and in the belief that neighbor helps neighbor in this country, we are going to help you, just as we helped the airlines, just as we, indeed, needed to help the people of New York. We are going to give you hope. We are going to say yes to you, too.

I yield the floor. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I rise today to speak in strong support of S. 1447, the Aviation Security Act. I, first of all, extend my appreciation to the chairman of the Commerce Committee, Senator HOLLINGS, for the brilliant work he has done on this matter, and to the ranking member, Senator MCCAIN, for his persistence and ability to work as a team with Senator HOLLINGS.

I see in the Chamber today somebody who has worked hard on this measure, and that is the Senator from Texas, Mrs. HUTCHISON. She also has done an outstanding job in working on a bipartisan basis to make sure airports are safe. I appreciate her help.

This bill is crucial to enhance aviation safety. It is critical, in fact, to enhance aviation safety and security for America, for the State of Nevada, for the State of Nebraska, for all States. This Aviation Security Act represents a well-crafted bill that provides a modern and effective aviation security program for our country.

This bill establishes, among other things, a Deputy Secretary for Aviation Security within the Department of Transportation; it mandates cockpit doors and locks to protect our flight crews. This is not something that is a choice; it is mandatory. And it federalizes airport screening of passengers and cargo.

This is so important. We have a system that is unique to this country where we have airlines putting out to the lowest bidder the job of protecting and ensuring our safety. It does not work. We all have been through airport security around the country. We know they are well-meaning people, but their average term of employment is 90 days, and then they are off doing something else. They are not trained well, they are not paid well, and they do not do a good job, as hard as they might try.

Democrats and Republicans alike have drawn the same conclusions: We must pass this very important legislation to protect the traveling American public. Why? Because we need to get America flying and flying a lot again.

The airline industry is a key component in our Nation's economy. My State is very dependent on our Nation's air transportation system. McCarran Airport in Las Vegas provided service for 34 million passengers last year. That is a lot of people. We expected more to come this year. We hope that still will be the case.

We are building another airport terminal. We are building a new airport in Las Vegas, one of the few places in the country where a new airport is being built. We received permission from Congress to use Federal land to build another airport about 35 miles outside of Las Vegas. That is now being done. So the airline industry is a key component of our Nation's economy. It is a key component of Nevada's economy.

The legislation we are considering today will bring our airport security system into the new century by reducing the risks that a commercial airliner will again be turned into a weapon of mass destruction. This is a goal on which we can all agree. This can never happen again.

I stress to my colleagues the need for this aviation security legislation is widely supported by the American people, and we must move forward now. The bill we are considering will allow the United States to move forward and provide our Nation the aviation security that is necessary to address this new century. It is a good bill for America.

This bill, we understand, is controversial in some people's minds. One of the reasons it is controversial is the amendment upon which we are going to vote at 1:35 p.m. today, and that is the Carnahan amendment. I applaud Senator CARNAHAN for her work on this legislation.

No one better among us can ever understand the loss in New York than Senator CARNAHAN, whose husband and son were killed in an airplane crash a short time ago. I am sure Senator CARNAHAN, being the sensitive person she is, was compelled to offer this legislation because she better understands how people feel after a loss such as this.

What does her amendment do? Her amendment would provide financial assistance, training, and health care coverage to employees of the aviation industry who lost or will lose their jobs as a result of the attack on September 11. The benefits would be distributed within the framework created by the Trade Adjustment Assistance Act. Based on preliminary estimates by the Congressional Budget Office, the cost is expected to be $2.8 billion, but this amendment is pared down. As the majority leader said, in an effort to work this through the process, we have pared this down, and rightfully so. It is not the full amount needed, but it certainly will be a tremendous shot in the arm for these people.

Who is eligible? Employees of airlines, commercial aircraft manufacturers, suppliers of airlines, and airports. Only those employees who lose their jobs as a direct result of the attacks on September 11, or security measures taken in response to the attacks as determined by the Secretary of Labor, will be eligible.

What are the benefits we are begging the Senate to approve? Provide an additional 52 weeks of unemployment insurance to people who no longer are working as a result of this incident. Fifty-two weeks of unemployment insurance benefits and training for those workers who lose their jobs. This training would allow workers who have permanently lost their jobs to receive income assistance and training to assist them in moving into a new industry or job.

There is also a provision to supplement unemployment insurance gaps; that is, provide 26 weeks of unemployment insurance-like benefits for those workers who would not otherwise qualify for unemployment insurance. They were working but maybe they had not worked long enough to qualify. This would include workers who have been recently hired, who had been working less than 6 months, part-time workers, low-wage workers, and workers with intermittent employment; for example, single parents who have had to take time off to care for their children.

This legislation would provide Federal reimbursement of COBRA health insurance premiums for eligible workers for up to 18 months and provide States the option to provide medicaid coverage for those workers who do not qualify for COBRA benefits. This would include new hires, low-wage, part-time, or intermittent workers as well as those workers whose employers did not provide health insurance or are independent contractors; for example, workers who load luggage or other cargo on the planes.

This legislation is important for the country, and this specific amendment is important for people who have been directly hurt, harmed, and damaged by this terrible act of September 11. People who step down into the well of this Chamber to vote should understand today this is more than political philosophy. It is a philosophy directed to say that this country cares, this country is concerned and wants to help those people who have been directly impacted, workers who have been directly impacted as a result of this incident of September 11.

I hope everyone will vote to invoke cloture.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mrs. HUTCHISON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Ms. MIKULSKI. Mr. President, I also rise as a cosponsor of the Carnahan amendment to help those who are most hurt by the economic impact of the terrorist attacks of September: the unemployed airline and airplane manufacture workers.

Thousands of American workers have lost their jobs during this economic downturn. These workers need our help. That's why we need to act quickly on a robust stimulus package targeted at workers.

No workers have been hit as hard as those in the airline and aviation industry; 140,000 thousand of these workers have been laid off since the terrorist attacks of September 11. Unemployment is steadily rising. Last week the largest number of people in 9 years filed for unemployment, over 528,000 people. That's nearly the population of Baltimore City; 650,000 people live in Baltimore.

These are the pilots, the flight attendants, the baggage handlers, the concessionaires, and the aircraft builders. These workers have: lost their paychecks, lost their health care and could lose their homes. They need help immediately, just as we've helped their former employers with a $15 billion stabilization package of grants and loan guarantees.

I am confident that the airline industry and the U.S. economy will recover; But help is needed today. How would the Carnahan amendment help the airline workers?

Senator CARNAHAN'S amendment would provide financial assistance, training, and health care coverage to employees of the airline industry who lose their jobs as a result of the attacks on September 11, 2001.

The Carnahan amendment would provide income support by extending the number of weeks eligible individuals can receive unemployment insurance from 26 weeks to 79 weeks. That's a year and a half. These cash payments would not create a strain on state budgets because they would be funded entirely by the Federal Government.

For many workers do not meet their States' requirements for unemployment insurance would not be left out. They would receive 26 weeks of federally financed unemployment insurance.

Some workers may not return to their jobs within the airline industry. These people would be eligible for retraining benefits. Others may find alternative jobs within the airline industry. These workers would be eligible for training to upgrade their skills.

The amendment would enable laid off workers to keep their health care by expanding the COBRA program which helps people who've lost their jobs to keep their health insurance. The amendment enables the Federal Government to fully reimburse for COBRA premiums. Yet about half of those who lose their jobs are not eligible for COBRA, so the amendment would make these families eligible for Medicaid for up to 18 months, with the Federal Government covering 100 percent of the premiums.

I strongly support the Carnahan amendment. It's a thoughtful and comprehensive airline workers relief package. It's a good starting point to address the needs of working families. It also provides a good model for a broader economic stimulus package that Congress should consider soon.

Mr. LIEBERMAN. Mr. President, I rise today to support the Carnahan amendment.

All of America was shaken by the horrendous events of September 11. America's heart still aches for the thousands of people who lost their lives and whose lives have been altered permanently in one way or another.

And now, as we watch America valiantly begin to recover, we are just starting to realize the economic impact of this terrible tragedy. As we are all too well aware, people are losing their jobs and futures are at risk.

I cannot imagine living through the tremendous stress of the past several weeks only to be told that I have now lost my job or I am being laid off because my company cannot afford to keep running at full speed. Unfortunately, the numbers of layoffs are increasing and the unemployment rate is trending upward.

One of the industries hardest hit by the economic downturn is the airline industry. In the short span of just a few weeks, hundreds of thousands of workers at airlines, airports, aircraft manufacturers and at the companies that supply the airlines, have lost their jobs. Workers from commonly known companies like Boeing, Pratt and Whitney, American and United Airlines, to name but a few, are losing their jobs and being laid off, their futures are less than certain.

The effects have been devastating. Hundreds of thousands of men and women who support the airline industry are losing their family's primary source of income and health insurance.

But we can help. We can lend a helping hand to the thousands of displaced workers at these companies. We can restore their hope. We can make a difference.

That is why I support and I ask my colleagues to support Senator CARNAHAN's displaced worker relief amendment. This amendment would provide income support, job training and health care benefits for those airline industry workers affected by the aftermath of the events of September 11. It would extend State unemployment benefits to provide income, establish job re-training or job upgrade benefits to those who permanently lose their jobs in the airline industry, and provide critical health care coverage for the workers and their families. These initiatives will go a long way to restore the economic security of airline industry workers and their families.

No one expected the events of September 11, and no one envisioned these terrible events would have such devastating repercussions in our country's most critical transportation industry. I urge my colleagues to support this amendment and help airline industry workers get back on their feet and back to work.

Mr. TORRICELLI. Mr. President, today I rise in strong support of the Carnahan amendment to provide much needed assistance to airline industry employees.

Almost a month later, we are still sorting through the aftermath of September 11th. Thousands of people from New York and New Jersey were among those lost or injured on that terrible day. And now thousands more across the country are beginning to feel the economic impact of the tragedy.

A few weeks ago, this Congress did the right thing when we passed legislation to help the airline industry. As a result of the attacks, the airlines lost billions of dollars in the days that planes were grounded.

And so many people have decided not to fly, the airlines have cut the number of flights by 20 percent since September 11th.

In my State, that has meant 300 fewer daily flights out of Newark International Airport.

This Nation's economy depends on healthy airlines to keep people and goods moving, and Congress was right to help.

And now this Congress must continue to do right by passing this amendment to help the people who work for the airlines and related industries who have lost their jobs and health insurance as a result of this slowdown.

So far, more than 140,000 airline industry workers across the nation have lost their jobs and their healthcare. Virtually all of the airlines have laid off workers:

American Airlines—20,000 people; United Airlines—20,000 people; Delta Airlines—13,000 people; US Airways—11,000 people; Continental Airlines—11,000 people; Northwest Airlines—10,000 people; America West—2,000 people; Midway—1,700 people; and American Trans Air—1,500 people.

Airlines are a crucial employer in my state, more than 19,000 people in New Jersey are employed by the major airlines. Continental Airlines has one of its hubs at Newark International Airport.

But just a few weeks ago, 2,000 of those Continental workers at Newark were laid off.

And it is not just airline workers who are feeling the cuts. The people who provide the meal services and run the airport concessions have also suffered thousands of lay-offs.

We cannot continue to delay. We must pass this amendment to help these workers who have bills to pay and children to care for but who don't know where they will be getting their next paycheck.

This amendment provides critical assistance in three ways.

Income support: Under current law, laid-off workers are eligible for 26 weeks of State unemployment insurance. Under this amendment, they would be eligible for an additional 20 weeks of federal benefits.

Training: No one knows when these airline jobs will come back or in what other industries these laid-off workers will find work. Under this amendment, individuals who did not return to the airline industry would be eligible for retraining benefits; those who find alternative jobs within the airline industry would be eligible for upgrade training.

Health Care: For up to a year, the Federal Government would fully reimburse eligible individuals for their COBRA premiums. Individuals who do not qualify for COBRA and are otherwise uninsured would be eligible for Medicaid, with the Federal Government covering 100 percent of the premiums.

We have waited long enough. It is time to make good on our obligation to provide for the airline industry workers who have lost their jobs and health care. I urge passage of the Carnahan amendment.

Mr. FEINGOLD. Mr. President, this Nation is still reeling from the horrific events of September 11. During the past month, our country has come together to mourn those we have lost, to help those who have been injured, and to comfort the many families involved. We continue to honor those who rushed selflessly to the aid of the victims and those who still work tirelessly in the rubble. We support our men and women in uniform who are making a bold strike against terrorism half the world away.

The ripple effects of the terrorist attacks of one month ago are being felt across the country. One of those effects is the tightening of security measures around the country, perhaps most visibly at our Nation's airports. I commend the thousands of National Guard personnel who are patrolling our airports, including seven airports in Wisconsin.

The impact that these vicious attacks have had on the airline industry is undeniable. There is certainly a legitimate need to provide some kind of assistance to our Nation's airlines in this time of crisis, and for that reason I supported the airline relief package that the Senate adopted last month.

But this assistance should not stop at the board room door. We should not forget about airline employees and their families, including many Wisconsinites. In the past month, more than 100,000 layoffs have been announced by the airlines, and thousands more workers in related industries have been or will be laid off in the coming months. These massive layoffs are a double blow to an already shocked country.

Midwest Express Airlines, which is based in Oak Creek WI, has announced that it will lay off 450 workers, or 12 percent of its work force. Another Wisconsin-based airline, Air Wisconsin of Appleton, which is affiliated with United Airlines, has announced 300 layoffs, or 10 percent of its workforce.

These airline workers are not just statistics. They are our neighbors, our friends, and our constituents. It is past time that we act to ensure that those who work for our Nation's airlines and their families receive adequate relief, including continued access to health care and unemployment and job training assistance. The amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri, Mrs. CARNAHAN, will provide these workers with this crucial assistance.

I disagree with the argument that this amendment is not relevant to the underlying airport security legislation. The financial well-being of all Americans is a vital part of our national security.

I urge my colleagues to vote for cloture on the Carnahan amendment and to support its passage.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Texas.

Mrs. HUTCHISON. Mr. President, I say to our colleagues who have suggestions or amendments on this bill, that we want to encourage them to come down because we have the cloture vote on the Carnahan amendment scheduled, and once that is disposed of we hope we can move to the relevant amendments that people have to offer and finish this bill today.

I think it is the intention of the majority leader, and the minority leader as well, to have an aviation security bill passed today. I think we can do it because we only have a few amendments, and there are qualified legitimate differences of opinion and we can take those up and go forward. So I hope everybody will come down.

What we have is 95-percent agreement on the basics of this bill. The Carnahan amendment has a lot of positives, and I think we will pass something for our airline workers who have been laid off and workers in other industries who have been laid off because of the economic downturn. I do not think it should go on this bill because, frankly, I do not think we are ready yet. I do not think we have all of the relevant information we need to know about what is not covered in unemployment compensation and COBRA to determine how much the Federal Government needs to step in. So I hope we would not go to the Carnahan amendment. I hope we would be able to go to the rest of the bill and the legitimate differences on the aviation security issues so we can move down the road.

We will deal with the employees who have been laid off, and it is my hope that many of the people who have been laid off in one industry will be able to go into the areas where we know we are going to increase employment. We are going to increase employment in the defense area. We are going to increase employment in airline security and airport security. That is the bill we are trying to pass right now, which we think will create many new jobs.

The way we are trying to pass this bill is as a quality aviation security package that assures we have a qualified workforce to do this law enforcement responsibility, and we are trying to make sure there is a clear standard in every airport. We need a uniform standard. That is why our bill tries to make sure we have screeners who have the qualifications and standards that would be required to have this uniformity.

I think we are making great progress. I am very pleased that we are. I hope everybody will cooperate. I hope we can keep extraneous amendments off, even if they have a lot of merit, because we have not finished passing emergency legislation yet from what happened on September 11.

Sad to say, we are now memorializing the 1-month anniversary of this terrible tragedy to our country, but I would also say we are making great progress since September 11. We have already passed $40 billion in authorization for emergency expenditures to help clean up New York and the Pentagon and to help the victims in their earliest needs. We have already allocated money for emergency needs for our Department of Defense, and I can not think of anything more relevant and more urgent than the needs of our military today as we know we are in a mobilization that is required to win this war on terrorism.

We have already allocated the billions of dollars that will be required for that. At the same time we are also trying to take care of the Afghan people, who are fleeing their homes, by trying to make sure we have humanitarian aid for them.

We need to add aviation security as an accomplishment. We need to add the aid to the terrorism bill that gives our intelligence agencies the capabilities they need to continue their extraordinary investigation of the terrorist cells that have tentacles throughout our country and throughout other countries around the world. So I hope the antiterrorism bill and the aviation security bill will be passed by the Senate this week. We could be very pleased with that accomplishment on the 1-month anniversary of this tragedy. That, coupled with progress on aviation security and antiterrorism would be the right approach to continue moving down the road and meeting our responsibility to deal with this emergency.

What has come out every day since September 11 is the spirit of the American people. From the horrible tragedy of September 11, we are seeing extraordinary heroism displayed every day by the American people—a spirit seen especially when you go home. I have gone home every single weekend since September 11. The flags are flying in people's homes, the flags are flying in people's businesses, the flags are flying on people's cars and people are doing added things for their neighbors and friends. All of these things have certainly bonded Americans.

In 1 month, we have come of age in our generation. We are dealing with a crisis that has not presented itself to our generation in our live time's, and now we have it. I think we are responding very well. I am proud of the progress we are making.

I look forward to continuing work on aviation security and antiterrorism this week. I hope we will then go on to the economic stimulus package, dealing with the displaced employees, for next week's accomplishments. We are making progress, and I am proud of America today. I think we are going to be filled with pride as we move down the road to see how America is coming together to meet the crisis of our generation.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. ENZI. Mr. President, I rise today to express my support and commend the President's back-to-work relief package.

From the workers in New York whose offices now lie in rubble to the workers on the opposite coast who have lost their jobs in a massive layoff, the terrorist attacks of September 11 have had a devastating impact on our Nation's workforce. Just as we must rebuild the structures damaged or destroyed, we must help to rebuild the lives of workers who have been displaced because of the attacks.

As the ranking member of the Subcommittee on Employment, Safety, and Training, I am particularly concerned with providing effective and immediate assistance to workers affected by the terrorist attacks. To do so, the President's package must:

1, be targeted to individuals directly impacted by the September 11 attacks;

2, build upon existing programs, not create new ones. That is a major point. We are doing a lot of things well already. We don't need a new Federal bureaucracy to do it;

3, provide State and local flexibility to address needs;

4, enable individuals to return to the workforce as quickly as possible through job training and job search assistance.

The President's back-to-work relief package is, indeed, based on these principles. He deserves our unyielding support for a proposal that is based on what works best for workers.

To enhance existing assistance programs available to displaced workers, the President's proposal will extend unemployment benefits by 13 weeks for Americans who have lost their jobs as a result of the terrorist attacks. It will provide $3 billion in special national emergency grants to States to help displaced workers maintain health coverage, to supplement their income, and to receive job training. It makes $11 billion available to States to help low-income displaced workers receive health insurance. And, finally, it encourages displaced workers to take advantage of the more than $6 billion in existing Federal programs that provide job search, training, and placement services.

While the President's package is targeted to workers directly impacted by the terrorist attack, it is not restricted to employees of the airlines and related industries. That is an important point. There are many workers in other industries who have also lost their jobs as a consequence of the attacks. It is inequitable to deny them relief provided only to employees in certain industries.

I am especially pleased to see that the President's proposal will utilize national emergency grants under the Workforce Investment Act to provide additional assistance to those communities and populations hardest hit by the terrorist attacks. I have been a strong supporter of the Workforce Investment Act and the fundamental principles upon which this landmark legislation was based.

Under the Workforce Investment act, States and localities have increased flexibility to meet the needs of the local and regional labor markets. Today, in the wake of the tragic events of September 11, it is even more critical that States have the flexibility to effectively respond to the needs of their dislocated workers.

States affected by the terrorist attacks will be able to receive national emergency grants. The States may in turn use these funds to help ensure that dislocated workers maintain health insurance coverage, that they receive income support during the recovery period, and they return to the workforce through training and job search assistance.

Both the Workforce Investment Act and the President's package recognize that decisions regarding worker assistance should be made by those closest to the problem and, therefore, closest to the solution. State and local governments—not the Federal Government—are best positioned to respond to workforce needs. That is the way our system is set up.

Under the President's package, national emergency grants may be used to provide training and job search assistance. In addition, displaced workers are encouraged to take advantage of the $6 billion in existing Federal programs that provide training and placement services. Rather than waste precious time and resources on creating new Federal programs, displaced workers can immediately access one-stop centers and receive job assistance services. In fact, New York, Massachusetts, and Minnesota have already applied for national emergency grants in the wake of the attacks.

Finally, the President's proposal is termed a relief package. It is designed to provide supplementary, temporary work to displaced workers during the recovery period after the terrorist attacks. Now is not the time to create widespread new Federal programs and entitlements. Now is the time to address the immediate needs of workers who have lost their jobs as a result of the tragic events of September 11 while utilizing existing programs to help these people return to the workforce as quickly as possible. Ultimately, this approach, which the President has taken, will best serve these workers and the American economy.

The question we must all answer is, How do we define success? The answer is, Getting everybody back to work. How do we achieve that? We activate proven, existing, and therefore immediate programs administered by those closest to the people. I trust Mayor Giuliani and I trust Governor Pataki to be responsive, just as I trust the mayor of Boston and the Governor of Minnesota. A lot of that is because these people have already been dealing with these existing programs. We don't need to be creating something new just to throw money at them.

In closing, I say to my colleagues, the President's back-to-work relief package is aptly named. It is designed to return to the workforce those who lost their jobs as a result of the events of September 11. The best way to help stimulate our economy is to get these people working again as soon as possible.

To recap, I am in opposition to the cloture motion filed. We will vote on it at 1:35. I commend the President for taking a broader look and particularly commend the President for his willingness and desire to use those existing programs and existing people who are already in place, use the talents that have already been built and trained to do it, to provide the necessary recovery we need, without winding up with an additional bureaucracy.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Missouri.

Mrs. CARNAHAN. Mr. President, I appreciate the remarks of my distinguished colleague from Wyoming, and I agree with him 100 percent that there is no need for an additional program in which to dispense these funds that we wanted to get to our airline workers so quickly. That is why my amendment is set up to service needs under the Trade Adjustment Assistance Act, already in place, that has worked so well at the Department of Labor. I appreciate his concern for that, but I would like to reassure him that we have taken that into consideration.

Mr. President, I would like to start by thanking my colleagues who have risen in support of this amendment. I am heartened by their efforts on behalf of the airline industry. I am also very pleased to ask unanimous consent that Senator SPECTER be added as a cosponsor of this amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mrs. CARNAHAN. The amendment provides assistance to airline industry employees who are laid off from their jobs as a result of terrorist attacks that occurred on September 11. It brings assistance to those who had been employed by airlines, airports, aircraft manufacturers, and suppliers to airlines. For those workers, this legislation would provide three basic benefits.

First, it extends unemployment compensation for an additional 20 weeks after employees have exhausted their State benefits. This provides a safety net to help them make their mortgage payments, to feed their families for a few extra months while they are trying to get new jobs.

Second, this legislation provides training assistance to workers who will not be able to return to their former jobs, training that is so essential today in a changing economy.

Third, this legislation helps workers maintain health insurance for themselves and for their families. As my colleagues know, many workers who were laid off are eligible to purchase health insurance from their former employer. The average cost of these premiums is $500 per month. People who have been abruptly laid off will not have an extra $500 a month to spend on health insurance. Without help, they will be without health coverage.

This legislation reimburses the cost of those health insurance premiums for 12 months. For those workers who are not eligible to purchase health benefits, this legislation enables States to provide Medicaid benefits. This is an important step for Congress to take to prevent even more children from joining the ranks of the uninsured in America.

Some have suggested the benefits I propose are out of line with what has been provided to other workers who have lost their jobs. Let me respond by pointing out that I modeled my legislation after an existing program, the Trade Adjustment Assistance Act. The Trade Adjustment Assistance Act provides help to those workers who have lost their jobs as a result of trade agreements. That program provides extended unemployment compensation for 52 weeks—much longer than the 20 weeks that I propose. That program also provides training for 18 months, while I have proposed providing training for less than 12 months.

The Trade Adjustment Assistance Program has been a lifeline for many workers. Between 1994 and 2000, over 1 million workers received these payments. I am glad they did. But let's be clear; these workers get more generous benefits than all other workers who lost their jobs during that time period.

The State with the most workers receiving unemployment and training benefits under TAA is Texas. Texas has 8 percent of all the workers in this program, about 86,000 people. Workers from Texas companies such as Big Dog Drilling, Tubby's Auto Service, and Rio Grande Cutters participate in this program. These workers qualify for enhanced benefits because they lost their jobs due to trade. Why shouldn't airline workers who lost their benefits when they lost their jobs due to terrorism qualify?

My legislation provides one thing that the Trade Adjustment Assistance Act does not, and that is health coverage. I have added this because I believe it is important that these workers and their families be able to maintain their health coverage. I am pleased that President Bush has recognized this need as well.

Last week, the President laid out some options for how the Government can help provide health coverage to unemployed workers. Today is our chance to rise to that occasion.

My amendment will also be an economic stimulus. It will put money into the pockets of Americans who need it most. We know these families will spend the money. They need it to pay their bills. That is what we need to get the economy going. We need consumer spending.

Finally, some have argued that this amendment has no place on an airline security bill. I respectfully disagree. Right now we are passing legislation in response to the terrorist attacks. These airline industry workers were laid off as a result of these attacks. The linkage is direct.

We must act today. There is no reason to delay assistance any longer. We acted quickly to provide $40 billion in response to the terrorist attacks and the cleanup of Manhattan. That was the right thing to do. And we acted quickly to shore up the airlines with $15 billion, and that was the right thing to do. Now is the time to do something for workers. A vote at 1:35 this afternoon is the first opportunity since the terrorist attack that we will have to invest in our workers, the heart and the soul of America. I have collaborated with my colleagues on both sides of the aisle drafting this amendment. We have come up with a reasonable proposal. Now I am asking simply that my colleagues allow the Senate to vote on this proposal. This amendment deserves an up-or-down vote. I hope the Senate does the right thing this afternoon.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arizona.

Mr. KYL. Mr. President, I would like to respond to the Senator from Missouri by saying, first of all, I don't think this is a question of whether we are going to respond to people who have been affected by the events of September 11. The question is how best to respond to that. As she noted, the President has a proposal that is going to broadly deal with the problems of unemployment associated with the attacks on September 11. But the question here is whether we are going to focus on extending unemployment benefits, as the proposed amendment does, or are we going to get people back to work? It seems to me these people would much prefer to get their jobs back, to get back to the routines they enjoyed prior to September 11, rather than focusing for a long time on extending unemployment benefits, having to buy health insurance under COBRA, and having to be retrained for a different job.

My guess is these people would be very happy just to get the old job back doing the same work they were doing before. That is why I think we have the focus wrong.

I have proposed, and I am going to be urging my colleagues to very seriously consider, as part of the economic stimulus package a tax credit to get people traveling again. The problem is people are not traveling. If we had as much travel today, 1 month after this event, as we did on the day of September 11, all of the people we are concerned about under this amendment would have their jobs. We would not be worried about unemployment benefits. We would not be worried about training them to do a different kind of job. They would have the same job they had exactly a month ago. So shouldn't we be trying to get the American public back to the habits it had prior to September 11? And that specifically relates to travel. There is no question that of all of the economy, the travel industry is the most hard hit by the attack. That should be obvious to everyone. It seems to me it should also be obvious, if we are going to talk about benefiting that segment of the economy, either to help the people who were unemployed as a result of it or to stimulate the economy, what we need to do is focus on the air, where the patient is hurting the most.

The patient was hurting on September 11. Our economy was not in good shape. You could say we had a case of pneumonia. We were going to be getting better over time, of course. We were going to be treating it with antibiotics, but that was the condition then. Since then what has happened, if you want to have a gruesome analogy, is we had an accident in which the arm was practically cut off. We are bleeding to death, and we have to stop the bleeding in that the part of the body that is hurting the most and that is the travel industry.

So why aren't we focusing our efforts on getting that industry back going again? That will save the jobs of the people who want nothing more than to go back to work. My proposal gives a tax credit for the people to travel. It says if you make a financial commitment to travel before the end of this year, you get a tax credit of $500 on your 2001 taxes; if it is a joint filing, $1,000. That is enough to stimulate people to get back into the habits they had prior to September 11. All you have to do is make that financial commitment. It can be air travel, automobile, or bus. It can be a reservation at the hotel. We have people who are hurting far more than just people who worked at airports—from the maid who makes up the bed in the hotel to someone who, frankly, was working at Boeing aircraft making airplanes; they are not making them because nobody is buying them and because people aren't traveling—all the way from A to Z. We have people throughout our economy—about one in seven jobs in the civilian sector—who are adversely affected by the events of a month ago. Throughout the economy, the ripple effect of these attacks is incredible.

I talked to the CEO of Phelps-Dodge Corporation, a copper company in Arizona. They had a big contract with Boeing to supply a special alloy metal used in making airplanes. We need to think about the impact of what occurred throughout the economy. It is not just people who work at airports on whom we ought to be focusing; we ought to be focusing on the economy broadly and on everybody affected by the travel industry.

How do you directly deal with that problem in the quickest way that gets the people their jobs back? You do that by providing some kind of incentive for people to resume the habits they had exactly a month ago.

I haven't heard a better idea than the one I proposed with this tax credit. When you file your taxes for 2001 and calculate your tax liability to the Government, and you subtract $1,000, that is a pretty good incentive. You wouldn't have to travel before the end of the year as long as you made your financial commitment to do so. You could be traveling next Easter. It could be tourism; it could be business; it could be just going to visit somebody; it could be visiting a sick relative—whatever it is.

People are now disinclined to travel primarily because they are unsure of the safety of the airline industry. They are unsure generally of what is in our future. Frankly, they need to get back into the habit of doing what they did before September 11 or terrorists will have won. The purpose of terrorism is to demoralize. It is to change for all of America the way we conduct our society and our culture. That is their effort. They are going to succeed in that if we simply throw up our hands and say, well, for all of the people who are out of work, we might as well find something else for them to do because we will never get back to the way we were before September 11.

I reject that. We can get back to the way it was before September 11. A lot of things are going to change. We have to convince the American public that it is safe to travel. If we can't do that, we are not doing our jobs.

I have been on six separate commercial air trips since the events on September 11—flying back home and then back to Washington. I believe it is safe to travel. I think it is safer to travel than prior to a month ago.

We have to pass legislation that convinces the American public that they can travel safely. Then I think we have to provide them some financial incentive because of our general economic conditions. That incentive would be to get them to go back to traveling, and to do so quickly. If we wait for all of this work throughout the system for a couple of years, then everybody is going to be the loser. We will have all of these people unemployed. We will have to pay additional benefits in health care and retrain them to do something else. It would be far easier, less disruptive, better for the economy, and, frankly, better for the psyche of the Nation to get back to the place we were a month ago where people who lost jobs could go back to doing what they were doing before.

It seems to me that instead of hastily acting on the proposal that only applies to a narrow segment of our society—frankly, a minority of the people who have been harmed by the attacks on September 11, a minority of the people who have been harmed as a direct result of the American public traveling less—let's do two other things: Let's take a look at what the President proposed in the way of benefits for people who have lost their jobs but is broader based in approach; second, let's get the American public traveling again.

I urge my colleagues, as we are putting together this so-called stimulus package, to differentiate between all of those wonderful ideas that have been trotted out and proposing all kinds of things to spend money for or cutting taxes that we think will have some long-term effect on the economy—distinguishing between those proposals, on the one hand, and others which can immediately and directly stimulate the economy in the precise areas where it is needed the most.

What area needs it the most? The travel industry. What area was hit the hardest by the attack last month? The travel industry. What area, therefore, should we be focusing on? The travel industry. If we do that, we are not going to have to worry about extending unemployment benefits because we will get these people back to work.

Isn't that far better than focusing and, in effect, saying there is nothing we can do about it and we might as well decide right now to extend all of these unemployment benefits and retrain people to do some different job? I think they would rather go back to the job they were doing a month ago. That is what I propose we do.

Two things: No. 1, defeat this amendment. I think we ought to focus on the President's proposal instead; and, No. 2, we ought to agree that we have to have in the stimulus package something that will stimulate trade quickly.

If somebody can come up with better idea than a tax credit proposal, I welcome it. In the meantime, that is what is on the table.

I urge my colleagues to support this as a way of stimulating travel, of getting people back to work again, and of denying the terrorists the victory they sought of demoralizing the American people.

We will not be demoralized. We will not be defeatists and say we are going to have to change our way of doing things by putting people on the unemployment rolls and retraining them to do something else. I reject that. We have to deny the terrorists the victories they sought. I think the way I propose to do it is the best way.

With all due respect of my friend from Missouri, I think her proposal—I understand why it is being put together—is not the best medicine for what we are facing today.

I thank the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Minnesota is recognized.

Mr. DAYTON. Mr. President, I am pleased to rise today to support the amendment offered by my distinguished colleague from Missouri, Senator CARNAHAN.

I have been listening to some of the discussion this morning. Frankly, I believe there is much value on both points of view to commend. I think we err if we consider some of these proposals to be either/or propositions.

This last Monday, the senior Senator from Minnesota, PAUL WELLSTONE, arranged a hearing in Minnesota on the effects of the September 11 disasters on people of our State. It was an excellent hearing. It lasted for about 3 hours. We had representatives from the business community testify about their needs, including the head of the Carlson corporation, one of the largest travel firms in America, headquartered in Minnesota. Marilyn Carlson Nelson spoke very eloquently about the need for the kind of assistance that my good friend and colleague, Senator KYL from Arizona, just described. We also heard from a number of the workers who were affected in Minnesota by the events and the aftermath of the events of September 11.

As you may know, in my home State of Minnesota, Northwest Airlines is one of the largest employers within the State. It employs over 21,000 Minnesotans. It has operations worldwide. It has an enormous impact on our State's economy. In the immediate aftermath of the September 11 bombings, they announced the layoff of over 4,500 Minnesotans. These are men and women from all backgrounds and walks of life—corporate executives to mechanics, to airline attendants, to stewardesses. It also affected people in the ancillary businesses that relate to the airline industry: Carpet cleaners, food processors, delivery men and women.

The hearing underscored the urgency and the precariousness of many of these people's situations. People want to be working; there is no question about that. They don't want to be out of a job. They don't want to be drawing unemployment benefits or receiving other kinds of assistance. But the hard reality is they are out of work today. Their prospects of being called back to work tomorrow are somewhere in between slim and none.

I agree with the Senator from Arizona that the object here is to get these people back into their previous employment. I think we have taken some important steps in that direction.

We provided emergency aid to the airline industry in the form of immediate cash assistance and in the form of loan guarantees which the Senator from West Virginia and the Senator from South Carolina and other colleagues have been marshaling through this body. But that is not going to get these people back to work tomorrow. It is not going to meet their need for emergency assistance until they do.

We heard from, particularly women, including one I remember distinctly. I remember on Monday, an Ethiopian woman—the mother of eight children—who works, along with her husband. She works in the sector providing food services to airplanes. She lost her job. Because she worked there an insufficient length of time, she is not eligible to receive unemployment benefits from the State of Minnesota. She lost her health coverage for herself and her family of eight children when she was laid off of work. She is not receiving any unemployment assistance today. She receives no health care assistance for herself and her family.

So my question to those who oppose this amendment is, what happens to them? What happens to people who at this point are not even receiving any unemployment assistance or any health care assistance? It is bad enough that we are going to deprive those who do qualify today for an abbreviated period of 26 weeks, at which point they are going to lose a continuation of their unemployment benefits, of their health care coverage, but what about the people—and I was amazed at this hearing last Monday to realize that there are a great number of people in Minnesota, and I assume then across the country, since we are one of the best States in the Nation of covering people and making people eligible for these assistances—what is going to happen to this woman with eight children, and to others like her—thousands of others across this country—who are not even today receiving any unemployment benefits, who today do not have any health care coverage? What is going to happen to them if we do not take this action today?

I must say, I am also, frankly—''disappointed'' would be a mild word—I am really shocked that this body is suddenly so stingy when it comes to providing the help and assistance that real people, working people, people who are among the hardest working strivers in our society—suddenly when it is their turn to receive some necessary help, the cupboard is bare or the budget does not provide for assistance, or we just do not have enough money to provide help for them.

Two weeks go, my colleagues and I in the Senate joined—I believe it was almost unanimous—together to provide help to bail out the airline industry. Prior to that vote, we were told there was not enough time to come to an agreement on the Carnahan amendment to add assistance for the workers to the assistance we were providing to the corporations who run these airlines.

As I said, I am very sympathetic to their plight because Northwest Airlines is one of the largest and most important employers in the State of Minnesota. But it was my understanding—and in hindsight, I guess I was maybe mistaken to have relied upon the assurances that were given to us prior to that vote—I relied on those assurances that there would be a subsequent package that would have bipartisan support sufficient to pass it that would be in support of the Carnahan amendment.

On that basis, I, and most of the Senate, if not all of the Senate, voted in favor of that legislation. And I am glad I did. But now, frankly, I am shocked to find out that agreement does not suffice, and that even after we have taken this Carnahan amendment—and I commend the distinguished Senator from Missouri for her hard work on this, along with others, and for the dialogue that they have had across the aisle—but the fact is, this has gone from over a $3 billion price tag—I think close to $5 billion initially; after costed out, to $3 billion—and now I am told it is $1.9 billion. We continue to pare it back. Yet we, possibly, do not have sufficient support today to adopt it.

That means I go back to that Ethiopian mother of eight children and say: Sorry, you just have to make it somehow without any benefits. You have to make it somehow without any health coverage for your family. We don't have enough money to do that, but we have enough money to provide loan guarantees and financial assistance to the corporations.

We also, according to what I am reading today, have the debate upcoming on economic stimulus. We are going to have an administration proposal supported by many of the very people who oppose this assistance for workers. According to the Washington Post today, that is going to cost revenue between $90 billion and $120 billion in the year 2002. This includes a provision allowing business to write off 30 percent of the value of their new assets. It would reduce revenue by $48 billion in this year.

They want to speed up the phasing in of the tax reductions, passed last spring, for the very wealthiest people in this society, bring those rates down, accelerate the elimination of the estate tax, as though encouraging people to—what?—die sooner, and that is going to stimulate our Nation's economy?

We hear, on the one hand, we have all this extra money available for these kinds of very questionable tax breaks that are certainly going to benefit the wealthy. They are going to benefit already profitable corporations, who are maybe going through a difficult period of time but, frankly, are still going to do just fine; but there isn't enough money here to provide for that mother back in Minnesota with eight children because it is not that we do not have the money, but that we do not have the heart to do it.

So again, I say to Senator CARNAHAN, congratulations on a job very well done. I hope the amendment will receive the kind of consideration from our colleagues today that enables it to be adopted because I, frankly, think if we do not do so, if we do not even follow suit with what the President, to his credit, is supporting, that we are going to go back to a very serious divide in this body and in this country between those who somehow qualify for these additional considerations at this point in time and the real people, people who are really down and out, through no choice or fault of their own.

Are we going to say, sorry, we are not going to help you, not because we do not have the money to do so but because we do not have the will to do so? I think that would be cruel and unusual punishment for them.

Mr. President, I yield the floor and suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. NELSON of Florida). The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MURKOWSKI. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. MURKOWSKI. Mr. President, I believe it would be appropriate to ask unanimous consent that I may introduce an amendment, two amendments on the Aviation Security Act. It may be necessary to set aside the Carnahan amendment for an opportunity to introduce two amendments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Texas.

Mrs. HUTCHISON. Mr. President, if the Senator will withhold, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator withhold?

Mr. MURKOWSKI. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I may introduce one amendment that I don't believe is controversial. It covers the issue of allowing pilots to continue to fly until the age of 63.

Mrs. HUTCHISON. Mr. President, the Senator from New Hampshire is asking that we object to every unanimous consent request regarding offering of amendments. Will the Senator withhold to let me see if I can get a procedure by which the Senator from Alaska can offer the amendment.

Mr. MURKOWSKI. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MURKOWSKI. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. MURKOWSKI. Mr. President, I call up amendment No. 1863, which is at the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to setting aside the pending amendment?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER. Reserving the right to object, this amendment, as I understand it, is the first amendment that will be unrelated to the bill. I don't want to comment further on that. We are going to have our cloture vote at 1:35. I object, at least for this period of time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard.

Mr. MURKOWSKI. Mr. President, I wonder if I may ask unanimous consent that I be allowed to speak as in morning business for about 8 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Without objection, it is so ordered.

THE NEED FOR PILOTS TO HAVE GUNS IN THE COCKPIT

Mr. MURKOWSKI. Mr. President, it was my intent to call up two amendments. But there is objection. As a consequence, I will use this opportunity to discuss the merits since I will not be offering the amendments now. They have already been filed at the desk. It is my intent, at the appropriate time, without objection, to ask for a recorded vote on the amendments. I want to speak on the application of the amendments and the importance of the amendments.

One of the amendments seeks to address the issue of what we do with our commercial aviation safety relative to the reality that we do put our lives in the hands of the pilot in command—and the copilot, to a degree, depending on who has control of the aircraft. With the limited knowledge that we have relative to the two aircraft that went into the World Trade Center, and looking back at the apparent effort by passengers and, perhaps, some members of the crew, to try to take over the aircraft that went down in Pennsylvania, one clearly can project what the outcome might have been had the captain of any of those aircraft had a handgun in the cockpit, available for such a set of circumstances.

It reminds me of an occasion with a little different circumstance. I will try to put it in the vein in which it was communicated to me. It is not an exact parallel, but it represents a reality associated with a handgun emergency. My wife and I were in New York a number of years ago and had been to the theater and were going back to our hotel in the financial district. As the taxicab came to a stoplight with several other cabs, there was a policeman with his baton tapping on the windows.

The cabbie rolled down the window and the policeman said: How is your fare?

He said: Fine. And then the window was rolled up and the taxicab went on.

I asked the cabbie: What was that all about?

He said: We have had a number of robberies and a couple of taxicab drivers have been murdered in New York, so we are tightening up security.

We went on for a while, and I casually said: Have you ever had a problem?

He said: Only once.

I asked him what the problem was. He said he was taking a couple somewhere and felt a little uneasy because they didn't seem to know where they were going. He took them to an area, and he decided the best thing he could do would be to let the fares out. There were two women and a man. As he told them to get out of the cab, suddenly he felt a razor at his neck. They said: Turn over your wallet, and all the money you have.

He said: I can't until I get out of the cab. They had to move at that time so they could get out of the back seat and he could get out of the front seat. As he did, he reached under the seat and pulled out a pistol. The next time they confronted him, they were looking right at the end of his barrel.

I asked him: What did you do then?

This is the part of the story that is really not apropos.

He said: I lined them up to the fence and robbed them.

I thought that was an interesting turn of events.

I said: Did you report it?

He said: Well, no, I didn't have a permit for the gun.

That is a little story that I think applies, at least in the sense that had the pilot in command had the availability of a gun, things might have been entirely different. One of my amendments seeks to arm pilots of commercial aircraft with handguns, and I think the justification for that speaks for itself.

We put our lives in the hands of a pilot. Aviation security is of vital importance to our Nation's security, our economy, and we have learned a lot since the tragic events since September 11 about how much our Nation depends on our freedom to move about our country. We also rely, obviously, on our lifeline of shipments and products. Most importantly, our citizens rely upon the airlines for safe transit around the country and throughout the world.

I think it is our duty to ensure that they are traveling safe and secure, and their confidence by our efforts will decide the future of air travel in our Nation and, in turn, the health of our country. Throughout this debate, we must remember that, as each passenger boards a commercial airliner, they first look toward the cockpit. They look toward the cockpit and the flight crew for their immediate security, because we all know that they, indeed, have our lives in their hands and they are trained and competent. When the plane rises into the sky and the wheels tuck away into the underbelly of the aircraft, it is the pilot, copilot, and sometimes the navigator—the entire flight crew—who serve as the last line of defense and security for that aircraft and the passengers therein.

So we as legislators, and as passengers, trust the flight crew with our safety and security. We must ensure that they have the tools to compete, if you will, and to complete the task. For this reason, I have an amendment at the desk, which I will not call up at this time, but I intend to do so when there is no objection. This amendment would be to the Aviation Safety Act, and it would allow pilots, copilots, and in the case of navigators on commercial aircraft the ability and authority to carry a handgun while in flight for the defense of the plane.

We are talking about putting air marshals on the aircraft, aren't we? We are talking about allowing them to be armed. The authority of an air marshal currently on an aircraft indeed suggests that that individual is armed. You can't put air marshals on all flights, but you can provide the authority for the captain and copilot to carry a handgun in the cockpit.

I think this is, first and foremost, really an effort to increase the level of safety aboard our commercial fleets. It is intended to give crew members the weapons and the necessary skills to thwart future hijacking attempts and to assist Federal sky marshals assigned to commercial aircraft.

I don't take this amendment lightly. My amendment does not cavalierly attempt to hand out guns to flight crews and simply wish them the best. Because of the September 11 tragedy, and the tactics used by the hijackers that day, we must change the way aircraft and passengers are protected, and I believe my amendment contributes to that effort because it provides for strict and thorough background checks on all individuals who would be armed under this provision.

Secondly, it would require that flight deck personnel attend a training program approved by the Secretary of Transportation in consultation with other appropriate Federal agencies.

My amendment also requires annual recertification to ensure that flight deck personnel maintain a high level of training.

Third, this amendment deputizes flight deck personnel who have passed training certification. This is a critical component, and this amendment is necessary because it is imperative to keep the crew protected and in control of the craft, but it is carefully tailored to limit authority to cockpit protection.

As many in this Chamber are aware, there is a large percentage of pilots who have served in the military. Many have served in law enforcement. In fact, many also serve as Reservists in different branches of the military. These pilots have been trained in the use of weaponry. Why not utilize the trained personnel we already have?

I am not alone in this. The Airline Pilots Association supports this concept. They have written to the FBI requesting a program to train cockpit personnel, and I have heard from many pilots, particularly in my State of Alaska and around the country, who support it.

Frankly, many of our aircraft in Alaska fly in the bush and carry guns on the aircraft in control of the captain. It is done for a number of reasons, primarily not associated with terrorism, but simply the reality if you have an accident, if you go down in an isolated area, you damn well better have a gun for your own survival and that of your passengers. Why not further enhance the chances of passenger and aircraft survival.

I applaud the administration and this Congress for moving quickly to secure the cockpit cabins and adding the sky marshals who, obviously, will have guns, improving airport perimeter security, training screening personnel, and increasing flight deck security. But we must also afford passengers the utmost security after the plane has cleared the runway. Arming pilots is not the only solution, but it is an important component because it might have resulted in those aircraft not reaching the tragic end they did.

The pilots know what they need. The pilots have spoken. The passengers certainly will support it, and the Congress should pass it. I encourage my colleagues to support this amendment when it does come up and is not objected to and the entire Aviation Security Act.

There is one other amendment I wish to talk about but which I am not prepared to offer because of the objection, but I plan to offer an amendment that would repeal the Federal Aviation Administration rule which requires pilots who fly under part 121 to retire at age 60. It might be a good thing if we had to retire around here at age 60, but obviously there is no check and balance on the Senate, but there is on pilots.

If you are 60, you are through. How ridiculous is that? This was something that was done many years ago. I would much rather fly with an experienced pilot who has lived to 60, and the fact that suddenly he turns 60 and he is no longer fit to fly is totally unrealistic. The hours gained and the experience gained provides a level of safety with which we all feel more comfortable.

If you fly with a person who has limited hours, who may be very young and very quick, they may not have the experience to know what to do under certain conditions, mechanical, weather, or otherwise.

This amendment seeks to end blatant age discrimination against our Nation's commercial pilots. Under the amendment I propose, pilots who pass the physical and are in excellent health will be allowed to continue to pilot commercial aircraft until their 63rd birthday. This is optional. They do not have to. They can retire at 60. We are offering an extension.

The amendment will also allow the FAA to require pilots to undergo additional medical and cognitive testing for certification as well as established standards for crew pairings. In many European countries you can fly until 65. What is the difference?

This measure was the subject of a full Commerce Committee hearing and was voted out of committee by a majority in March of this year. This issue has had a hearing.

Why does the FAA mandate pilots retire at 60? Good question. According to the agency, it is because of ''medical uncertainties concerning pilot health after the age of 60.'' That was a long time ago. We live longer. We are in better health. We have regular physicals.

There are other theories. While public comments were accepted, no public hearing to debate the issue was ever held. Think of that. While public comments were accepted by the FAA, no public hearing to debate the issue was held. Despite broad industry, pilot and union opposition, the rule went into effect in 1960. The union supported it then. They wanted the pilots to be allowed to fly longer.

Since that time, we have seen studies sponsored by the FAA. None produced concrete evidence that pilots over 60 years of age are a threat to the flying public. In fact, the studies have not even included pilots over 60. Why? The FAA believes it lacks scientific consensus, whatever that means, in favor of changing the age 60 rule. The argument exists that there is no test that can determine the medical and psychological fitness of a pilot to fly after 60. However, advanced physiological and neurobehavioral testing methods do exist to test pilots of any age.

Today, simulator training data estimates the risk of incapacitation due specifically to cardiac complaint as only one event in more than 20 million flight hours. Sudden in-flight incapacitation is clearly a far less threat to aviation safety than are mishaps due to, what? Inexperienced pilot error, those pilots who are younger and who simply do not have the time, experience and know-how to recover from situations that can occur.

Medical science has vastly improved since 1959 with improvements in diagnosis which include early detection, prevention, health awareness, exercise, and diet. All of these factors have increased life expectancy since 1959.

Airline pilots consistently demonstrate superior task performance across all age groups when compared to age-matched nonpilots. Pilots are also subjected to comprehensive medical examinations, when? Every 6 months.

In the 42 years since the rule was promulgated, there has not been any evidence shown that pilots over age 60 are not fully capable of handling their flight responsibilities. As many of my colleagues are aware, up until the end of 1999, pilots were allowed to fly past the age of 60 in commuter operations.

This amendment also brings to mind several other pieces of legislation. During the debate on the Senior Citizens' Right to Work Act of 2000, Senators supported the notion that workers today live longer, are healthier, and live more productive lives, and that senior workers are an invaluable resource to our Nation.

When enacting the Experienced Pilot Act of 1978, Congress stated that the age 60 rule is arbitrary and discriminatory on its face. It deprives qualified individuals of the right to continue in their occupation and, at the same time, deprives the airlines of their most qualified and experienced employees.

The time has come for Congress to repeal the age restrictions for commercial pilots. We have had the hearings, and we have the need. Years of medical and safety data have failed to support the position that the chronological age of 60 represents a passenger safety concern. Therefore, as long as pilots can pass the rigorous medical exam, he or she should be allowed to fly.

We are proposing this only until age 63. We will evaluate the program, obviously, after that time. Air service is critical, as we know, to keeping commerce alive. Experienced airmen are especially critical in rural States. In my State of Alaska, we have a huge land mass, one-fifth the size of the United States. Many of our smaller carriers provide the training ground for pilots and then suddenly those pilots leave to go work for the larger airlines. We are constantly experiencing a level of experience that lends itself occasionally to accidents as a consequence of the inexperience. We want to keep pilots, and if we could even bring some back who are over 60 and want to keep flying in the commuter area, I think it would be beneficial.

It is time we end age discrimination once and for all and keep experience in the cockpit. I recognize some of the unions are a little jumpy on this one, but those pilots in the right seat, the copilots, are going to want to fly a little longer when they get a little older, too. So this thing can all level out.

The difference between the unions on this issue and the airlines is it is a business decision, a matter of retirement. What we are talking about is a need for these pilots to fly. They are healthy. Give them another 3 years, evaluate the program, and get the benefit of experience.

I thank the Chair for the attention and the courtesies of allowing me to finish, and at an appropriate time I want to advise the floor managers I intend to offer the amendments that are at the desk for a formal introduction and ask for rollcall votes at that time.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a letter dated October 1, 2001, from Alaska Airlines pilot Carroll John Campbell.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

CHUGIAK, AK, October, 1, 2001.

Hon. Senator ROBERT SMITH,
U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR SMITH: I am writing in response to a conversation I had with one of your staff members concerning aviation safety. My name is Carroll John Campbell. I am an airline pilot with Alaska Airlines. The recent change in the tactics of hijackers aboard our aircraft have necessitated a change in our response as an airline crew and as a traveling public. Today, one has to believe that if a terrorist breaches the cockpit, which is easy, they are going to kill everyone on board the aircraft and any number of people on the ground. Our current security procedures lack the ability to stand in the way of these atrocities. New, stronger cockpit doors are a must, and even those may be compromised. In this event, the only thing standing between the airplane and our friends and families on the ground is the flight crew.

Lethal weapons are the surest means of defense. Handguns are our best option. Non-lethal weapons such as stun guns are of limited value in a phone booth sized compartment when fighting a knife. I would much rather have the knife.

Current FAR's (108.11) authorize crews to be armed. However, the FAA and airline policy double team the pilot to keep us unarmed. We need new fool proof legislation that guarantees any pilot who wants to be armed, can be armed.

I will be happy to work with your office to draft this legislation. The public is finally demanding our incapable security system be fixed after these horrendous attacks on Sept. 11, 2001. Please don't let them down.

Sincerely,

CARROLL JOHN CAMPBELL.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nevada, the assistant majority leader, is recognized.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, during the next 55 minutes we are under controlled time, controlled by the majority and minority leaders. So if anyone desires to speak on this very important matter which will occur, as I said, in 55 minutes—each side has an equal amount of time—I will yield to whomever wants to speak.

I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mrs. CLINTON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Senator from Nevada.

Mr. REID. We have plenty of time. I ask the Senator from New York, how much time does the Senator wish to use?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There are 25 minutes 48 seconds remaining on the Democratic side.

Mrs. CLINTON. Mr. President, I expect to consume 5 minutes or less.

Mr. REID. On behalf of the majority leader, Senator ROCKEFELLER will yield the time until the vote occurs, or if Senator HOLLINGS comes in, he will yield the time.

Mrs. CLINTON. Mr. President, I do not want to impinge upon the time of my good friend, Senator ROCKEFELLER.

Mr. REID. No. Please go ahead.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York is recognized.

Mrs. CLINTON. Mr. President, I rise again in support of the amendment offered by Senator CARNAHAN to provide immediate assistance to the over 100,000 airline workers and those in aviation-related industries who have been laid off and lost their jobs as a direct result of the terrorist attacks of September 11.

I just came from a very moving ceremony of commemoration at the Pentagon, where the lives of those military and civilian employees at the Pentagon, as well as the lives of the crew and passengers of the airplane that was mercilessly driven into the Pentagon, were honored.

I know we are working on other kinds of relief, and I am grateful to the President, the administration, and my colleagues for the work that is being done on the economic stimulus package and for the work that is being done with respect to unemployment insurance and dislocated workers' assistance, but I believe we have an obligation to move quickly with respect to the workers who have been laid off through no fault of their own or of their industry, and we cannot wait for the larger packages to be put together and negotiated.

Just as we must provide security to all Americans who are flying in our skies, we also should provide economic security to those who have supported us in the hundreds of thousands and millions of flights that were a matter of course before September 11. They were doing an important job in maintaining our free travel and supporting an important economic activity, and now they are confronting the cruelest kind of questions: How will they make their next car payment? How will they be able to afford the clothes their children might need? How will they know whether to go out and look for another job or hope and wait that business picks up on our airlines? I do not think we should be leaving our workers who have already been laid off. They need our help right now. I do agree we have to address the need to help all workers.

In New York, for example, the State labor department is estimating that 285,000 workers throughout New York will lose their jobs as a result of the attack we suffered. I do not think we should leave any of these workers behind. If we are trying to build confidence—confidence in consumers, confidence in citizens—then we should address the needs of those people who have been economically harmed by these attacks. I respect the work that others are undertaking. I will support that.

I ask this Chamber to send a message by voting in favor of Senator CARNAHAN's amendment that we are not going to just bail out airlines; we are not just going to protect the traveling public. We are going to help protect economically those who we hope will be back in the skies, back behind the counters, handling the baggage.

I met yesterday with a group of executives from the travel and tourism industry. Stories from them about the low occupancy rates, the fact that people are not traveling for business or pleasure, were very disturbing to me. Everyone knows we have real economic challenges. The last thing in the world we need is people who are scared to go about their daily business, who are scared to take that long-planned trip to Disney World, who are scared to fly across the country to show off their new baby to their mother or grandmother.

Until we can get that confidence up—and I applaud our wonderful leadership of Chairman HOLLINGS and Ranking Member MCCAIN on the aviation security bill—until we can get that confidence once again moving forward so people will fly, we can't turn our backs on those men and women who were the backbone of this airline industry.

I hope every Senator will support the Carnahan amendment and do everything possible to demonstrate our concern and commitment to those who were on the front lines and lost their jobs and livelihood because of the terrorist attacks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Illinois.

Mr. DURBIN. Mr. President, I commend the Senator from New York for her statement.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the Senator from West Virginia controls the time.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER. Mr. President, I yield 10 minutes to the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. DURBIN. I thank the Senator from West Virginia for yielding time and commend my colleague from New York for her statement. What she has heard in traveling about her State and the Nation I have heard in Illinois. During the last 2 weeks I had roundtables across my State, from the city of Chicago to major cities downstate, bringing in business and economic leaders and saying, what can we do at this moment to breathe life back into this economy? They have said, restore consumer confidence. We have to get people back into the stores and making decisions for purchases.

The Carnahan amendment which we are going to consider today takes an unfortunate group of people related to the aviation industry, who have been disadvantaged by being laid off or terminated, and says we are going to try to give them a hand to get back on their feet as quickly as possible.

A few weeks ago when President Bush suggested we help the aviation industry, I was happy to do it. We have 50,000 people in the Chicagoland area who work in aviation in some way, shape, or form. We are proud to be the home of United Airlines, a major hub for American Airlines, and now the business headquarters for Boeing aircraft. With that sensitivity, I voted for that bill, understanding that unless we got the airlines back on their feet, it was unlikely the economy would respond. So we gave some $5 billion in grants and $10 billion in loans to the industry.

The sad part was the bill was passed in a hurry and didn't include everything that should have been included. It did not include the Carnahan amendment. Senator JEAN CARNAHAN of Missouri has rightfully stated that if we are going to help the companies, if we are going to help the airlines, don't forget the employees. She notes, in preparing for this bill, that some 140,000 people related to airlines and the aviation industry may find themselves laid off as a result of the September 11 terrorism attack against the United States.

I met with several flight attendants today who worked for Trans World Airlines, now part of American Airlines. They were concerned about the fact that 20 percent of their flight attendants have been laid off already. We have seen 20,000 employees at United and American laid off, and perhaps even more.

The heartening thing is people are flying again. I notice it in the airports. I am glad to see it. We want to encourage more and more people to take that trip, whether it is for business or for pleasure. But in the meantime, over 100,000 of our fellow Americans in jobs related to the aviation industry are struggling to survive.

Senator CARNAHAN's amendment addresses three particular areas that need to be changed in the law to help these people. First and foremost, eligibility for unemployment compensation. The 26-week eligibility certainly may be enough, but Senator CARNAHAN suggests we give them eligibility for an additional 52 weeks, if necessary. Most of them will either be back at work or find another job before that, but giving them the peace of mind that they will have unemployment compensation is appropriate.

Second, she talks about training. Some of the people in the industry may decide to go into another field—for one thing, into security. We have talked about aviation security. We will need some of the best and brightest working in our airports and all across this country to protect the people and the traveling public. She includes in her amendment a training provision. I think that makes sense as well.

The last point is one that not only makes sense for 140,000 aviation industry employees, but it makes sense for every American. Senator CARNAHAN wants to make certain that we help these laid-off employees pay for their health insurance. When I was in Chicago, I talked to some administrators of hospitals. They said if we reach a point where more and more people are out of work and lose their health insurance, these folks will turn up at the hospital sick, and they will be treated, but the cost of their treatment will have to be absorbed by the hospital and generally by everyone else paying health insurance premiums. It makes sense, under the Carnahan amendment, to be sensitive to this, to help the laid-off aviation and airline industry employees pay for their health insurance.

A lot of Members have talked about how to get the economy moving again. Believe me, by taking this group of employees and saying to them, we are going to give you a helping hand, it has to help them, their families, and our economy in general. Having said that, I will vote for the Carnahan amendment. I hope my colleagues on both sides of the aisle will join me.

I suggest further that there are many people in many other industries who are also losing their jobs. A friend of mine who has a number of hotels told me about the necessary cutbacks in employment at those hotels. Many know that the people working in hotels, whether in food service or working in room service, or trying to do the housekeeping, have startup jobs. They are low paying jobs. And these folks are being laid off. Many of them are facing very difficult times. I am glad the President has suggested extending unemployment insurance. But we as a Congress should be sensitive to this as well.

If you want to know how to stimulate America's economy, it is not by leaving our friends, neighbors, and relatives by the side of the road as we press forward. Bring them along on this journey. Bring them along to see the economy's rebirth, which I believe will take place. It means that Congress has to do something about it.

Frankly, let me tell you, a few of my colleagues, and only a few, think the way to get the economy moving again is not to pay attention to the unemployed and the laid off but rather those who are doing well and are prosperous. They are suggesting we should, again, give tax cuts to the wealthiest people in America. That is just incredible to my mind, to suggest at this moment in our history we would show less sensitivity to those who are out of work and more generosity to those who are already doing extremely well.

I think if we are going to have tax cuts, they should be focused on those in the lower and middle-income categories, the millions who have been left behind by the original tax cut package which Congress passed a few months ago, and others who need a helping hand. It is by invigorating our economy in this way that I think we will see the restoration of consumer confidence.

I hope this Congress not only passes the Carnahan amendment to help the specific employees but goes on to pass an economic stimulus package which can be helpful as well. How can we do it? One suggestion is a moratorium on the FICA tax, a holiday on the FICA tax. It means a 7 or 8 percent increase in pay for every employee in America. That means more money to take home when it is payday, more money to spend, I hope, to get this economy moving. That is something that can be done quickly and across the board.

The one thing Congress usually fails to do is come up with a solution in a timely fashion. Sadly, we don't have time on our side. We have started the holiday buying season and purchasing season across America. We need to do something this month, in October, or early November that will tell people they are going to have more resources to deal with meeting the needs of their family and planning for the holidays. That means doing something immediately. Putting a moratorium on the FICA tax is one of those things. It will be seen in the next paycheck. People will know it instantly.

There are also suggestions of State sales tax holidays. That is something we ought to explore. Of course, the Federal Government would compensate the State and local governments for the loss of revenue from sales tax, but it would mean a reduction in price of many products which people might turn around and buy.

These are reasonable suggestions. I also think we ought to consider in the economic stimulus package tax benefits to businesses which are now making necessary investments in security. These investments are important. They are absolutely critical in light of the September 11 attack, and we ought to help these businesses—whether it is in surveillance cameras or additional security personnel. Unfortunately, those acquisitions do not add to productivity; they just take from the bottom line. If we can help businesses get through this, then they may not be forced to lay off people because of the pressures they face as a result of the recession we are currently experiencing.

So I say to my colleagues, as you consider all the possibilities of what we might do this week, don't forget the people on the front line. Don't forget the aviation and airline employees. We were good to their companies when we should have been. I was happy to cast my vote that way. But I believe we should not forget the men and women who make up the employee workforce of the aviation and airline industry. I am going to support the Carnahan amendment and recommend all my colleagues do the same.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER. Mr. President, I yield 5 minutes to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mrs. BOXER. May I ask my friend, would he be willing to yield me 3 minutes following completion of the remarks of my colleague? Would he yield me 3 minutes once the Senator finishes?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER. I say to the Senator from California, there are at least one, perhaps two Senators on this side of the aisle who wish to speak.

Mrs. BOXER. Would they be willing to yield me the 3 minutes?

Mrs. HUTCHISON. I will agree to that if following the 8 minutes I will have the opportunity to give Senator ALLARD 10 minutes, and then I will take the rest of my time according to—let me just ask how much time is remaining on my side?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JOHNSON). There remains 23 minutes 48 seconds.

Mrs. HUTCHISON. If I could have some time following the Senator from California, I agree to that.

Mrs. BOXER. I thank my friend from Texas.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. WELLSTONE. I can do this in less than 5 minutes because it feels as if every day, day after day after day, week after week after week, I have been on the floor to speak to the question of simple justice, which is to make sure we provide help to aviation employees.

I am starting to regret that I just didn't hold up the $15 billion package for the industry. I want to support the industry. I think it was the right thing to do. But I knew then—I have been here long enough—that this was some leverage that we had to make sure the employees were included.

I don't think the aviation industry was exaggerating their difficulty. We were very worried about what was going to happen, but I knew we would have some leverage for employees. But on the basis of commitments that had been made from other Senators that surely we were going to help the employees, I thought: Let's go forward and help the aviation industry. Surely there will not be any opposition to helping the employees.

We have 4,500 Northwest employees out of work. There is also Sun Country; there is Mesaba Airlines. There are other aviation employees out of work as well. I find it hard to believe that we do not have enough heart here to provide the help for them.

We have an aviation airline safety bill on the floor with Senator HOLLINGS providing great leadership. It is an important piece of legislation and must be passed. It makes all the sense in the world to support the Carnahan amendment. For people who are in a lot of economic pain, the Carnahan amendment says do three things: No. 1, extend the unemployment benefits up to a year; No. 2, since the economy is fluid and some people may want to get skills for other jobs that are available, make sure you have the workforce development; No. 3, and I argue most important of all, since it is terrifying not only to be out of work but to know in a couple of months you are not going to have any health care coverage for yourself and your loved ones, provide up to 12 months of helping these families afford health care coverage for themselves and their children.

Is this too much to support now? Instead, we have a second-degree amendment. I will not get into ANWR. Some of my colleagues are so much in a rush to help the oil industry, so much in a rush to do something that is environmentally reckless—it doesn't have a heck of a lot to do with what we need to do by way of having an independent energy policy—anything that can be done to block help for hard-pressed employees who are out of work. This doesn't make sense.

I was convinced 2 weeks ago when we passed this package for the companies that there would not be any resistance at all. I said yesterday—I will say it again—99.9 percent of the people in Minnesota believe that we should not only help the industry, but we should be helping the employees. Mr. President, 99 percent of the people in Minnesota believe it is a matter of elementary justice and fairness. Apparently too many Senators do not get it, and they are blocking this assistance.

If this is the dividing line between Democrats and Republicans, I am proud to be a Democrat. Better yet would be if we had the support of every single Senator, which would be the right thing to do, but apparently we have an all-out effort to block this package.

I wish my colleagues had such passion and had such a heart not to oppose helping people who are flat on their backs but to help them instead. And the Senator from Illinois is right. Actually the sooner we do this the better because the fact is, we are in a recession in our country. It is a deep recession. It has cut across a broad section of the population—certainly in Minnesota, way beyond the aviation industry. There are lots of small businesses and lots of other employees—tourism, you name it—and the fact is, we need to pass an economic stimulus package. We need to pass an economic stimulus package that puts the purchasing power back into the hands of working families—whether it be tax rebates vis-a-vis payroll tax that helps them or whether it be a massive school construction program where we repair buildings that have been crumbling and create jobs; whether it be affordable housing and we create jobs; whether it be extending unemployment benefits; getting the health care benefits; whether or not we do a lot of other things that will help employees support their families and buy in this economy.

The sooner the better. We ought to be supporting the Carnahan amendment as an important first step.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from California is recognized for 3 minutes.

Mrs. BOXER. Mr. President, this country gives trade adjustment assistance to workers when they lose their jobs due to trade. I support that. We all seem to support that. But it is shocking to me that a number of people in this Senate today do not support such assistance because of terrorism, an attack on our country, on our people, on our workers. It is stunning to me.

You will hear every excuse in the book about why it doesn't belong on this bill. People cannot pay their mortgages; they have been laid off. They cannot pay their health insurance; they have been laid off.

Let me read to you simply a letter that went out from one of my airlines, American Eagle:

Unfortunately, due to the circumstances of this national emergency which are beyond our control, it may be necessary to close or reduce the size of some of our business locations. This will cause some or all American Eagle personnel at those locations to be laid off. Because American Eagle's future rests on how well we can rebound from our current situation, we cannot say at this time how long these layoffs may last.

We gave the airlines a huge package. I supported it. I still support it. But I assumed we would follow it up to help those people who make those airlines run. I am shocked, stunned, and in disbelief that we are not here as patriotic Americans, both sides of the aisle, standing up for the patriotic workers who lost their jobs because of an attack on the United States of America.

I will look at this vote very carefully. It will hurt my heart if we don't win this.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Texas.

Mrs. HUTCHISON. Mr. President, I yield 10 minutes of my remaining time to the Senator from Virginia.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Virginia.

Mr. ALLEN. Thank you, Mr. President, I thank the Senator from Texas.

(The remarks of Mr. ALLEN pertaining to the introduction of S. 1532 are located in today's RECORD under ''Statements on Introduced Bills and Joint Resolutions.'')

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, I support the Carnahan amendment which addresses the issues faced by employees who have been dislocated as a result of the September 11 terrorist attacks against the United States. While we have not yet determined the full impact of the events of September 11 on our economy, the preliminary information from the Department of Labor estimates that over 200,000 U.S. jobs were eliminated in September. This includes a first-time unemployment claim increase of over 7,700 jobs in my own State of Michigan. Expectations are that the October unemployment claim numbers will be even higher. Many of these workers were individuals employed in the airline and travel related industries. The Carnahan amendment will help these workers by providing extended income support, training benefits and health care benefits.

The issue of assisting dislocated workers should have been addressed last month when we passed legislation to assist the airline industry at a price tag of $15 billion. But over the objections of many of us, provisions to assist workers in the airline and travel industry were taken out of the airline industry assistance bill. We cannot continue to sit by idly while thousands of American workers lose their jobs because of the actions of terrorists. We now have an opportunity to assist workers who have been devastated economically by the tragic events of September 11. Senators who oppose assisting those workers should at least allow the Senate to debate the issue openly and vote quickly on the bill on its merits.

The Carnahan amendment specifically addresses the current economic situation of employees of airlines, commercial aircraft manufacturers, suppliers to airlines and airports. This bill currently has bipartisan support and over 35 cosponsors. I would like to commend Senator CARNAHAN for her tireless efforts to assist dislocated workers.

The Carnahan amendment would provide individuals who exhaust their 26-week eligibility for State unemployment insurance an additional 20 weeks of cash payments funded entirely by the Federal Government. The bill would also allow individuals who do not meet their States' requirements for unemployment insurance to receive 26 weeks of federally financed unemployment insurance.

The bill would also allow individuals who would not be expected to return to their jobs within the airline industry to become eligible for retraining benefits. Individuals who would not be expected to return to their jobs, but who may find some alternative job within the airline industry, would be eligible for upgrade training.

Finally under the provisions of the Carnahan amendment, the Federal Government would fully reimburse eligible individuals for their COBRA premiums so they can continue to be fully insured. Individuals who do not qualify for COBRA and are otherwise uninsured would be eligible for Medicaid with the Federal Government covering 100 percent of the premiums. These health care benefits would last for a maximum of 12 months.

I can't stress enough the importance of assisting these dislocated workers. The tragedy of September 11 has brought American families closer together and given us all an opportunity to help those who have been directly affected by the terrorist attacks. I hope that in the Senate's newly found spirit of bipartisanship, we can agree to help those American workers who urgently need our assistance.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Missouri is recognized.

Mrs. CARNAHAN. Mr. President, how much time is remaining on our side?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Two minutes.

Mrs. CARNAHAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I be allowed to speak for 3 additional minutes, for a total of 5 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mrs. CARNAHAN. Mr. President, this Senate has acted swiftly and with unity in response to the September 11 terrorist attacks. We provided $40 billion to begin the relief effort. We authorized the President to use force in pursuing the terrorists and the nations that harbor them. And we created a $15 billion relief package to help stabilize our Nation's airlines.

I have been very proud of the manner in which this body has acted over the last month, but we have not yet acted on behalf of the tens of thousands of Americans who have lost their jobs as a result of these attacks. Now is the time to do something for the workers.

Before we passed the airline stabilization bill, I came to this Chamber on several occasions to argue on behalf of including assistance to displaced workers as part of that package, but in an effort to pass the bill expeditiously, I was asked to withhold my amendment. So I did. That was the right thing to do.

We cannot delay any longer. Some of my colleagues have spoken in opposition to my amendment, by arguing that we have already helped airline workers by providing assistance to airlines. That is only half right. By helping the airlines avoid bankruptcy, we saved many jobs. However, we have not done anything for the families of the 140,000 airline industry employees who are losing their jobs despite the airline stabilization package.

The $15 billion we gave to the airlines is not helping those families pay their mortgage. That money is not helping them put food on the dinner table. And that money certainly is not helping them pay for health insurance for their families. The modest assistance provided in this amendment will help these families deal with a tough situation.

There are hundreds of thousands of Americans who are losing their jobs. Some of my colleagues have asked why we should provide special assistance to airline workers.

First, let me say, I am eager to work with President Bush and my colleagues to provide assistance to all displaced workers as a part of the economic stimulus package. This vote is not a choice between my plan and the President's plan. We can do both. I believe we must address airline workers separately, and now.

Furthermore, current law already treats some displaced workers differently than others. The Trade Adjustment Assistance Program provides special benefits to workers who have lost their jobs as a result of increased imports. Over 1 million workers have benefitted from this program. I am glad they did. But let's be clear; they received a better benefit package than other laid off workers. If we can provide these benefits to aid workers who lost jobs due to trade, can't we do so for workers who lost their jobs due to terrorism?

The amendment we are about to vote on would provide similar benefits to airline industry workers who have lost their jobs as a result of the September 11 attacks.

The more than 140,000 airline industry employees who are being laid off have been dealt a terrible blow. I don't know how many Members of this body know what it is like to be a child in a family with a laid off worker. I do. My grandparents, with whom I lived for many years, when my parents worked, lived in this very city. I can recall a time when my grandfather, a carpenter, came home and sat in the kitchen and said to my grandmother: I have been laid off. I remember her tears, and I remember their fears, as they did not know what the future held for them.

It is time we gave to these workers of America's airlines a sense of confidence that their future is assured. This is our chance to send a message to the workers of America that we know they are facing hard times, we want to help, and this Senate stands ready to take action.

It is not enough to say, wait for the next piece of legislation, and the next after that. It is not enough to say that we have to move on to other pressing business. This measure deserves an up-or-down vote on its merits, not a filibuster.

I urge my colleagues to let the Senate vote on this amendment, and I urge a vote in favor of cloture.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arizona.

Mr. MCCAIN. Mr. President, I thank Senator CARNAHAN for her amendment. I congratulate her and express my appreciation for her efforts on behalf of employees of the airlines who have suffered directly as a result of Federal action.

I am sympathetic to the needs of the displaced workers who she and so many of our colleagues want to address. I say this to the Senator: I believe this issue has to be addressed. There are people who, as a result of Federal action, were put out of work. That is a fact.

I cannot support this amendment. For one reason, Senator HOLLINGS and I made a commitment; and we made that commitment because, if we allow one amendment that is not germane to this bill, then there is no reason why we should not allow numerous others, which is the same reason why I will oppose any other amendment, including the Murkowski-Smith amendment.

But I hope we can work together. I think Senator CARNAHAN's amendment needs to be narrowed dramatically. I think it can be addressed to specific individuals who have been affected by Federal action. I believe in the Senator's amendment there are some employees who are not directly impacted who would receive help that may not be necessary.

I also submit that both the airlines and the employees needed to be helped. We did give financial assistance to the airlines, and we do need to move forward. I know the chairman shares my views that we need to move forward on that issue.

I agree that we still need to provide assistance to workers who have been laid off as a result of these attacks. The appropriate amount, nature, and recipients of Federal assistance for the unemployed is a difficult and inevitably contentious issue.

Last night Senator GRAMM criticized the Carnahan amendment for being unfairly narrow because it only helps certain industry sectors where workers have been laid off as a result of the September 11 attacks and does not address hotel workers, restaurant workers, transportation service workers, travel agents, and many others whose layoffs can be attributed to terrorist actions. I do not agree with that comment.

I understand that the benefits provided under the expanded trade adjustment assistance model are over and above traditional unemployment assistance available to other displaced employees.

In addition to concerns about the scope of the amendment—which may be overinclusive in some respects and underinclusive in others—I think there are very significant practical problems that render the amendment fundamentally unworkable.

The Carnahan amendment charges the Department of Labor with paying 100 percent of eligible workers' COBRA premiums and suggests these premiums be made directly to insurance providers. I understand, however, that Labor simply has no mechanism in place for doing this. Determining COBRA eligibility; verifying the amounts that are owed to insurers on behalf of tens of thousands of workers; to whom it is owed; and how it is to be paid is not something that can be turned around overnight. If the intention is to provide laid off workers with benefits in the near term, the Carnahan COBRA compensation mechanism does not seem very workable to me.

But having addressed some of the concerns I have with it, let me reiterate again, however, that I agree with what Senator CARNAHAN and others are doing in trying to provide assistance to workers who have been laid off as a result of the terrorist attacks.

I look forward to working with her and others.

I say to Senator CARNAHAN, no matter how this amendment is taken care of—and I believe that the required 60 votes will not be obtained by the sponsor of the amendment—the issue is not going away. I know that Senator HOLLINGS and I are committed to working with the Senator. We have taken care of the shareholders and the airline executives and the airlines themselves. Now we need to take care of the unfortunate victims of this terrorist attack.

I hope Senator CARNAHAN recognizes that it is not out of a lack of sympathy, but we simply have to move forward because the safety and security of Americans on airliners is the most important and paramount factor, and the reason why this legislation is on the floor, as we speak—safety and security. That is why this amendment has to be rejected at this time, in my opinion.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Texas.

Mrs. HUTCHISON. Mr. President, is there time remaining on our side?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There are 10 minutes remaining.

Mrs. HUTCHISON. Mr. President, I agree with my colleague, Senator MCCAIN. I support much of what is in the Carnahan amendment, but this is not the right vehicle for it. It has not yet been determined how much we need to do and how we should do it. We need to work that out.

I will be working with Senator ALLEN, Senator CARNAHAN, and others to assure we have the help we need for displaced workers. Right now, if we are going to keep jobs in the aviation industry, we need to pass the Aviation Security Act. If something is going to keep the bill from having the strong support of the Senate, then we will get bogged down in that amendment.

Let's get these people back to work. The way we get them back to work is for people in America to be secure in flying again. That is what our bill will do. It is going to provide a security system that gives people confidence that they will be safe when they fly. If we can bring the people back to flying again, we will bring the jobs back on the market. That is what these people want. They want to work for the same airline, the aircraft manufacturing company or the hotel that they left. The way to keep those jobs is to bring the public back to flying again.

We want business as usual in our country. We want the economy to stabilize. We want to get those people back on the job. They would rather work than collect unemployment benefits. We can put them to work if we can pass this aviation security bill. We are very close. If we can keep from starting a process of having extraneous amendments on this bill, we will be able to pass it because we will be able to take amendments, vote on them, and pass the bill. I hope we will be able to do that tonight.

I thank everybody who has cooperated so much on the bill. I look forward to working on passage of the bill after we have taken the stand that we will not allow extraneous amendments.

I ask the distinguished Senator from Arizona if it would be proper to yield back the time and start the vote.

Mr. MCCAIN. Mr. President, I yield back the remainder of my time.

CLOTURE MOTION

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mrs. LINCOLN). All time is yielded back. Under the previous order, the clerk will report the motion to invoke cloture.

The bill clerk read as follows:

CLOTURE MOTION

We, the undersigned Senators, in accordance with the provisions of rule XXII of the Standing Rules of the Senate, hereby move to bring to a close the debate on the Daschle amendment No. 1855 to S. 1447, the Aviation Security bill:

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Ms. CANTWELL). On this vote, the yeas are 56, the nays are 44. Three-fifths of the Senators duly chosen and sworn not having voted in the affirmative, the motion is rejected.

Mr. REID. I move to reconsider the vote.

Mr. HOLLINGS. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. MCCAIN. Madam President, it is clear a majority of the Senate wants to act in favor of taking some action for those directly affected by the shutdown of America's airlines after September 11. So if a majority of the Senate has expressed their will, I strongly suggest we sit down and negotiate a reasonable package. We did take care of the airlines in a very generous package. Now we need to move forward with an agreement that would get at least 60 votes so we can address the needs and plight of 100,000 employees, at least, who have been rendered unemployed by the September 11 events.

I voted to not invoke cloture on this amendment. I intend to work with my colleagues on both sides of the aisle so we can come up with a reasonable package to compensate individuals who were directly affected by an act of the Federal Government. That is what we are talking about. That is what we are talking about. I always thought one of the obligations of government was to care of those who were affected by events and decisions beyond their control. It was a decision of the Federal Government, and a right one, to shut down the airlines of America, including 3 weeks at Reagan National Airport.

I want to work with my colleagues and get this legislation in a package that can be agreed to by, hopefully, all, including the administration. I believe very strongly we need to act on it. I don't want to be repetitive except to say we should have a sense of urgency about 100,000 employees who were rendered unemployed just as we did over the plight of the airlines and their shareholders and executives, as well as the American flying public.

Very shortly we will hopefully move to an amendment from Senator SMITH and Senator MURKOWSKI. In the meantime, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. REID. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. REID. Madam President, with the consent of the two managers of the bill, we have three people who wish to speak on the vote that just took place. I ask unanimous consent Senators DODD, CANTWELL, and REID be allowed to speak for a total of up to 15 minutes, and prior to that, Senator MURKOWSKI will introduce his amendment. As soon as we finish with the three speeches, we will move to the Smith-Murkowski amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nevada.

Mr. REID. Madam President, I failed to acknowledge we still have pending the Carnahan amendment. So what I would ask in the consent is we temporarily set aside the Carnahan amendment; that we go to the Murkowski amendment, but at such time as the majority leader, who offered the amendment on behalf of Senator CARNAHAN, comes to the floor, that he be recognized to take whatever appropriate action on the underlying amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Senator from Alaska.

AMENDMENT NO. 1863

Mr. MURKOWSKI. Madam President, it is my intention to propose amendment No. 1863, about which I have already spoken at some length. This particular amendment allows, under the circumstances, the extension to commercial airline pilots the right to fly beyond the age of 60 to the age of 63. It is my intention to ask for a recorded vote on the amendment.

I ask that the clerk report the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Alaska [Mr. MURKOWSKI] proposes an amendment numbered 1863.

Mr. MURKOWSKI. I ask unanimous consent the reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

(Purpose: To establish age limitations for airmen)

At the appropriate place, insert the following:

SEC. ___. AGE AND OTHER LIMITATIONS.

(A) GENERAL.—Notwithstanding any other provision of law, beginning on the date that is 6 months after the date of enactment of this Act—

(1) section 121.383(c) of title 14, Code of Federal Regulations shall not apply;

(2) no certificate holder may use the services of any person as a pilot on an airplane engaged in operations under part 121 of title 14, Code of Federal Regulations, if that person is 63 years of age or older; and

(3) no person may serve as a pilot on an airplane engaged in operations under part 121 of title 14, Code of Federal Regulations, if that person is 63 years of age or older.

(b) CERTIFICATE HOLDER.—For purposes of this section, the term ''certificate holder'' means a holder of a certificate to operate as an air carrier or commercial operator issued by the Federal Aviation Administration.

(c) RESERVATION OF SAFETY AUTHORITY.—Nothing in this section is intended to change the authority of the Federal Aviation Administration to take steps to ensure the safety of air transportation operations involving a pilot who has reached the age of 60, including its authority—

(1) to require such a pilot to undergo additional or more stringent medical, cognitive, or proficiency testing in order to retain certification; or

(2) to establish crew pairing standards for crews with such a pilot.

Mr. MURKOWSKI. Madam President, it is my understanding at a time agreed upon by the floor leaders, Senator SMITH will be recognized to offer a first-degree amendment for himself as well as Senator MURKOWSKI regarding cockpit security, and no second-degree amendments will be in order.

I further ask consent that there be 20 minutes for debate equally divided in the usual form; that upon the use or yielding back of the time, the amendment be agreed to and the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. DODD. Reserving the right to object, is this the amendment we anticipated coming up?

I have no objection.

Mr. MURKOWSKI. I thank the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. MURKOWSKI. I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Connecticut.

AMENDMENT NO. 1855

Mr. DODD. Madam President, if I may, I want to take a couple of minutes to express my disappointment at the Senate's failure to invoke cloture and to allow for the consideration of the Carnahan amendment. I am saddened, in the midst of this otherwise harmonious relationship we have been developing, that we would deny the opportunity to have a vote, an up-or-down vote, where 51 votes would win, 50 or fewer would cause the amendment to fail. We are not even going to have a chance for a straight vote on the amendment being offered by the Senator from Missouri.

Let me tell you why I am disappointed. First, I think the country has, with almost unanimity, watched the Congress of the United States and the President of the United States work in a fashion unprecedented for those of us who are today serving here. There are some whose service goes back many years. But I suggest even for those with the longest service in the Senate, they could not recall a time during their service when we have been as united as a people and as united as public servants as we are today.

With that as a backdrop, it was terribly disappointing to me to see us walk away from those individuals who every day go to work and try to make our airlines work as well as they can. We all stood together here—with the exception of 1 vote—when the airline industry came up and said, we need some help. We did not get involved in filibusters or demanding 30 hours of debate. Democrats and Republicans, with the exception of one of our colleagues, raised their hands and cast their votes ''aye'' to help out this industry.

The suggestion was made during that debate that we could not do anything to help out the workers right away but we would do it as soon as we could. So we said: Fine, with that kind of a general assurance, we will vote to bail out the shareholders—in effect. That is what we did. I voted for that bill, and I am glad I did. I think it was necessary because not just the airlines but other industries that depend upon a healthy airline service would be adversely affected as well.

But to turn around and say to the thousands of people who have lost their jobs, whose home mortgages, car payments and health care benefits are in jeopardy—you must go find a meaningful level of employment in an economy that was already in trouble before September 11. Mr. President, I do not understand this Chamber that could find in its pockets enough money to bail out a shareholder and yet couldn't find the small change to bail out innocent people.

This has been tough enough on our country over the last month. We have seen today at the Pentagon, and elsewhere, memorial services to recognize the contribution of those who lost their lives. That is appropriate and proper.

I listened to the eloquent words of the Secretary of Defense, and the eloquent speech of the President to the employees at the Pentagon, and to the world, for that matter.

But it is our obligation as well, not only to recognize those who have given their lives but to also recognize the living and what they are going through. The idea that you cannot have a simple vote on whether or not you are going to extend unemployment insurance for an additional number of weeks; that you are not going to provide for COBRA continuation coverage for individuals—I do not understand that.

What happened to us in the last couple of weeks? When it comes to those at the very top of the income spectrum, with all due respect, they are not the ones suffering from the airline industry problems. But the idea that the majority of people who lose their jobs have little or no value is something I do not understand.

My hope is that we have a vote on this issue and those who did not vote for cloture would cast a vote in favor of the thousands who have lost their jobs and find themselves and their families in a very precarious situation.

Individuals who do not qualify for extended health insurance under COBRA and who are otherwise uninsured would be eligible for Medicaid, with the Federal Government covering 100 percent of the premiums. For a few weeks, to get people back on their feet, could we not find it in our hearts to extend to them the kind of help they need?

Mrs. BOXER. Will my friend yield for a question?

Mr. DODD. I am happy to yield.

Mrs. BOXER. I took to the floor earlier, in a brief moment that I had, and I made the connection between trade adjustment assistance and this bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. REID). The time of the Senator from Connecticut has expired.

Mrs. BOXER. I ask for 2 additional minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mrs. BOXER. I made the connection between trade adjustment assistance and this bill, which Senator CARNAHAN based on the Trade Adjustment Assistance Act. I ask my friend, doesn't he think if we can help people when they lose their job because of trade, we should help people when they lose their job because of a terrorist attack on this country? I ask him, doesn't it seem ironic that somehow, when you lose your job because of trade, you get the help, but not if it is a result of a terrorist attack?

Mr. DODD. I think the Senator from California raises a very good question, and one that she provides the answer for in her question.

Obviously, over the years, we have said to people, if you lose your job because of trade policies—which we think have a long-term beneficial effect on the country and we see something good come out of that—if you lose your job because we are trying to achieve a greater good, we will step into that breach and provide some assistance to you and your family.

How ironic that when something terrible happens and you lose your job, we can't provide benefits to help you and your family during difficult times.

I am stunned by this. I thought this was going to be a non-issue. I could see where people might want to modify this a bit. Instead of 52 weeks, make it 45 weeks; instead of 100 percent of Medicaid, we will make it 90 percent.

I can understand people making a case that we need to modify the Carnahan amendment. But not to provide for any kind of alternative is something that just gets away.

We have to finish the bill. I know the distinguished chairman of the committee has an awful burden to get this done. He has argued very persuasively that we have a responsibility to meet the security needs.

Mr. President, I ask for 1 additional minute.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DODD. I understand the sense of urgency to get this done. I am sure my friend from South Carolina would not argue with that coming up rather quickly as we did with the airline bailout. That didn't take long. We managed to find the time around here to come up with the time to debate it, discuss it, and work it out. Again, I voted for that bill. I would again today. I don't argue with that at all.

But I am stunned that we can't find the time somehow to say to those thousands of workers—baggage handlers, flight attendants, and mechanics—who have lost their jobs and are wondering how they are going to make ends meet—we have time for everybody but you. Everybody else got in line. But you don't. We are sending the message that we don't have enough time to take care of you.

I am terribly disappointed that our colleagues have decided to reject this cloture motion. But I tell you that people out there have lost their jobs. Millions of other Americans are watching this vote to see what we did to average people out there on this day, 1 month later. We memorialize those who lost their lives but this Chamber couldn't find in its heart to come up with a few extra dollars to help some people who have lost their work.

That is a sad day. That is not the way to commemorate those who gave so much 1 month ago. I am deeply disappointed in my colleagues.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mrs. BOXER). Under the previous order, the Senator from Washington is recognized.

Ms. CANTWELL. Madam President, I also rise with a great deal of frustration over the last vote where the majority of my colleagues in the Senate want to act to help workers who have been impacted by the acts of September 11 and the emergency that has prevailed; that we do something to help those who have been most impacted by job layoffs by cutbacks in major industries related to transportation; and that we act immediately.

I am very frustrated, even though a majority of my colleagues want to see such legislation passed to help workers who are going to be laid off, who are going to have to struggle with how to pay for health insurance, who will not have the assistance for job training that might put them back in the economy sooner, that they are going to be without assistance. They are going to be without that assistance, even though a majority of my colleagues wanted to see that legislation passed, because we could not get this cloture vote in the Senate today.

I ask, if not now, when?

We were told after the events of September 11, when everybody wanted to work in a bipartisan fashion to expedite the decisionmaking in the Senate, that we needed to band together. We did. We acted quickly on legislation to help and assist the airline industry. I think the vote was 98 to 0.

At that same time, we were told we need to act now to help the industry. We will come back to help workers. So with earnest, Senator CARNAHAN, Senator KENNEDY, myself, and Senator MURRAY from Washington have been working diligently on this proposal.

Today we are sending the wrong message to the American people. We are sending the message that this body thinks it is more important to help the corporate executives and the shareholders of the airline industry than it is to help the American workers. That is absolutely the wrong message.

When you think about it, consumer confidence counts for about two-thirds of our economy. In the past month of September, consumer confidence has been at its all-time low since 1996.

This is an economic issue. Just as the assistance package for the airlines was an economic issue, this assistance to the workers is an economic issue. Instead of working together in a bipartisan fashion, we showed our partisan colors today by not allowing this vote to take place. The majority of Senators wish this legislation would have passed.

In Washington State, where 20,000 to 30,000 workers could be laid off by the end of next year, the impact will be real. Some estimates are that a $1.29 billion loss will be felt by our local economy. That is quite significant in the State of Washington where we have already been feeling the impact of the downturn in the economy.

When you think about the individual workers, yes, they will receive some unemployment benefits. What about health care? When you think about it, a typical worker in the aerospace industry might make $40,000 to $50,000. Yet the impact of losing that income and having unemployment insurance is not being able to pay for health care benefits. An average worker with a family might pay as much as $850 a month for the loss of health care benefits, on top of other bills they have to pay—for their mortgage, for their food, and for their children's education.

We are sending a terrible message that it is more important to help corporate executives and shareholders than to care about the educational needs of the airline workers in our country. That is the wrong message.

We need to move ahead in a bipartisan fashion to think about the ripple effect on our economy. It is not just the airline manufacturing industry, as I said, with 20,000 to 30,000 layoffs, but the hundred-plus thousand layoffs in the airline industry overall. That impact on our economy at a time when our economy is already seeing a downturn is not the kind of message we need to be sending.

It is very important that we move ahead. If not now, when will we act to support workers in this country in their time of need?

I yield the floor.

Mr. REID. Madam President, the majority leader is now in the Chamber. I am not going to use the 5 minutes allocated to me under the previous order. I ask unanimous consent that the time be given to the majority leader.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DASCHLE. Madam President, I come to the floor to express my grave disappointment at what the Senate has just done.

This is the first time we have said no to any of the victims of disaster of 1 month ago. It is the first time we have said no to working families struggling to put their lives back together.

I am troubled, disappointed, and disillusioned.

I will say this: We will not give up. We will not quit. We will not allow those workers to in any way believe that this country is going to turn its back on them when they need it the most. We will help them. We will find a way to do this. We will keep the fight. We are committed, as people determined to help all of those who are hurting so badly, including those who have no job, including those who have no health insurance, including those who need training today—including all of those victims. We cannot say no to these people. We will be back. We will not give up.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Ms. CANTWELL). The Senator from Nevada.

Mr. REID. Madam President, under the previous order, it is now my understanding we are going to go to the Smith-Murkowski amendment on a 20-minute time agreement; is that right?

Mr. HOLLINGS. That is right.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct.

The Senator from New Hampshire.

AMENDMENT NO. 1874

Mr. SMITH of New Hampshire. Madam President, I have amendment No. 1874 at the desk, and I ask for its immediate consideration as described under the previous order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. SMITH], for himself, Mr. MURKOWSKI, Mr. BURNS, and Mr. THURMOND, proposes an amendment numbered 1874.

Mr. SMITH of New Hampshire. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

(Purpose: To further provide for the safety of American aviation and the suppression of terrorism)

At the appropriate place, add the following:

SEC. . FLIGHT DECK SECURITY.

(a) TITLE.—This Section may be cited as the 'Flight Deck Security Act of 2001'.

(b) FINDINGS.—Congress makes the following findings:

(1) On September 11, 2001, terrorists hijacked four civilian aircraft, crashing two of the aircraft into the towers of the World Trade Center in New York, New York, and a third into the Pentagon outside Washington, District of Columbia.

(2) Thousands of innocent Americans and citizens of other countries were killed or injured as a result of these attacks, including the passengers and crew of the four aircraft, workers in the World Trade Center and in the Pentagon, rescue workers, and bystanders.

(3) These attacks destroyed both towers of the World Trade Center, as well as adjacent buildings, and seriously damaged the Pentagon.

(4) These attacks were by far the deadliest terrorist attacks ever launched against the United States and, by targeting symbols of America, clearly were intended to intimidate our Nation and weaken its resolve.

(5) Armed pilots, co-pilots, and flight engineers with proper training will be the last line of defense against terrorists by providing cockpit security and aircraft security.

(6) Secured doors separating the flight deck from the passenger cabin have been effective in deterring hijackings in other nations and will serve as a deterrent to future contemplated acts of terrorism in the United States.

(c) AVIATION SAFETY AND THE SUPPRESSION OF TERRORISM BY COMMERCIAL AIRCRAFT.—

(1) POSSESSION OF FIREARMS ON COMMERCIAL FLIGHTS.—The FAA is authorized to permit a pilot, co-pilot, or flight engineer of a commercial aircraft who has successfully completed the requirements of section (c)(2) of this Act, who is not otherwise prohibited by law from possessing a firearm, from possessing or carrying a firearm approved by the FAA for the protection of the aircraft under procedures or regulations as necessary, to ensure the safety and integrity of flight.

(2) FEDERAL PILOT OFFICERS.—

(A) In addition to the protections provided by the section (c)(1) of this Act, the FAA shall also establish a voluntary program to train and supervise commercial airline pilots.

(B) Under the program, the FAA shall make available appropriate training and supervision for all such pilots, which may include training by private entities.

(C) The power granted to such persons shall be limited to enforcing Federal law in the cockpit of commercial aircraft and, under reasonable circumstances the passenger compartment to protect the integrity of the commercial aircraft and the lives of the passengers.

(D) The FAA shall make available appropriate training to any qualified pilot who requests such training pursuant to this Act.

(E) The FAA may prescribe regulations for purposes of this section.

(d) REPORTS TO CONGRESS.—Not later than six months after the date of the enactment of this Act, and every six months thereafter, the Secretary of Transportation shall submit to Congress a report on the effectiveness of the requirements in this section in facilitating commercial aviation safety and the suppression of terrorism by commercial aircraft.''.

Mr. SMITH of New Hampshire. Madam President, I say to my colleagues, I will be very brief. If there are others who wish to speak, they may want to come to the Chamber. We have only, as I understand it, 20 minutes equally divided.

This amendment, I say to my colleagues, is the one that has been known as the gun-in-the-cockpits amendment. I am pleased to report that, to the best of my knowledge, the Senate has agreed to accept this amendment, which I think is good news for the airline industry and good news for all of us who fly across America, and all over the world, as a matter of fact.

First of all, I thank my colleagues, Senator MURKOWSKI and Senator BURNS, for their leadership, and also Senator THURMOND for working with me to put this amendment together. Also, Senator MCCAIN and Senator HOLLINGS were very helpful as we worked out the compromise so we could offer this amendment without a lot of rancor.

The motto of my legislation is that armed pilots are the first line of deterrence and the last line of defense—the first line of deterrence because terrorists will know that armed pilots will be able to defend the cockpit and defend the aircraft from a hijacking; the last line of defense because when all else fails, including the air marshals and perhaps even a reinforced cockpit door, an armed pilot will be in the cockpit to defend that cockpit from terrorist hijackers.

I think it is important for us to think and reflect back on what has happened in the past month. We all know what happened on September 11. Those terrorists got in that cockpit, and the pilots had no defense once that door was kicked in, except their bare hands. We have had another——

Mrs. BOXER. The Senate is not in order, and I am extremely interested in hearing about the content of this amendment. I hope the Senate can be in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct. Senators will take their conversations to the back of the Chamber.

The Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. SMITH of New Hampshire. I thank the Senator from California for her courtesy.

In the last week, we have had another incident—not a terrorist incident but one where a person got into the cockpit and caused the plane to be destabilized momentarily.

I think it is important to understand, after all of the events of September 11, and all of the efforts we have made to encourage and bring people back to flying again, we still had another incident where a person actually got into the cockpit.

Now we know—and we are working on all of this—we are going to reinforce the cockpit doors; there will be armed marshals; we are going to increase security on the aircraft. All of these things are being done. But I would ask my colleagues to reflect for a moment as to what would happen if, in spite of all of that—in spite of all three of those things: The marshals, the reinforced cockpit doors, and increased security around the aircraft—somebody got into that cockpit again. They could bring that plane down.

If, in fact, a pilot had a gun, that pilot would have the opportunity to stop that hijacker or person coming into that cockpit to cause damage. If the pilot could not do it, if the pilot did not have a weapon, and that person got into the cockpit, the worst of all things could be that the hijacker would commandeer the plane and do some terrible destruction using the aircraft as a weapon of mass destruction. But what might happen, and what could have happened last time, were it not for the brave passengers on Flight 93, we could have to shoot down our own commercial aircraft with our own American citizens in that aircraft.

It is far preferable to have the pilot shoot the hijacker and maintain control of the cockpit than it is to have the hijacker get control of the cockpit and have the President of the United States have to make that god-awful, gut-wrenching decision to shoot down a commercial aircraft to save the lives of thousands, killing perhaps a couple hundred American citizens. So this is the right thing to do.

The Senator from California mentioned that she wants to know the content of the amendment. The content of the amendment, I say to the Senator, is very reasonable. It says that the FAA is authorized to permit, if the airlines and the pilots would agree to do it—if they did agree; no one is forced to carry a weapon into the cockpit. That is the pilots' and the airlines' decision.

So I think it is reasonable. I have met with dozens of pilots on this issue, many from New Hampshire and Massachusetts, some here, from most of the airlines. I know there are very few who disagree with this amendment, but the vast, overwhelming majority of the pilots, probably 95 percent of them, agree with it. It is the right thing to do, and not only for safety reasons but also, if we are going to bring back the airline industry and get those people back to work who have lost their jobs, we have to bring passengers back to the airplanes; we have to restore their confidence.

I am going to feel a lot more confident knowing that pilot is going to have the opportunity to stop that hijacker when that hijacker comes through that cockpit door, if he gets through the cockpit door in spite of all the other things we are doing.

So remember, this is not an amendment that is just hanging out there with nothing else. This is an amendment that is working in conjunction with increased airport and aircraft security, reinforced cockpit doors, and perhaps a Federal marshal—at least spot-checked on flights. It goes with all of that. And this is the final stop, so that pilot can have the assurance, with that TV camera or monitor, so he or she can see what is going on in the back of that aircraft, in the cabin. At that point, the pilot can turn and be prepared to face that hijacker who could cause unbelievable destruction.

So I am pleased and proud to offer the amendment on behalf of myself, Senator BURNS, Senator MURKOWSKI, and Senator THURMOND. I know there are others who support it as well.

Madam President, I know other people would like to speak, so I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from California.

Mrs. BOXER. Madam President, I support this amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time to the Senator?

Mr. SMITH of New Hampshire. I yield the Senator whatever time she wishes to consume.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from California.

Mrs. BOXER. I thank my friend.

Madam President, as someone who for a long time has taken the opposite position on guns, I think this amendment makes sense.

We are working toward having air marshals on our airplanes. We will also be working—and I want to announce here my support of the Burns amendment—to really move security into the Department of Justice where it belongs.

Until we do all this, I think this amendment makes sense. It gives the FAA a chance to decide if they think it is prudent for a pilot, who is trained, and who wants to, and who is willing to, to be able to defend the aircraft.

I just want to remind my colleagues that every single plane that was hijacked was going to my State of California. I want you to know that every time I think about this, I think of how many people are suffering. I think we need to do everything we can to prevent any more of these hijackings from occurring.

Therefore, I believe this amendment is right. I believe it is prudent. It also was supported in front of our Commerce Committee—I see my chairman in the Chamber—by the gentleman who represented the pilots at the last hearing we had.

So I thank my friend. I am supporting this amendment, as well as the Burns amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. SMITH of New Hampshire. Madam President, I yield whatever time he may consume to the Senator from Montana.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Two minutes remain to the sponsor.

Mr. SMITH of New Hampshire. Before I yield, however, I ask unanimous consent to have three letters of support printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letters were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

GUN OWNERS OF AMERICA,
Springfield, VA, October 3, 2001.

DEAR SENATOR: Senator Bob Smith will be introducing an amendment to the Aviation Security Act. I urge you to vote in favor of his amendment.

The Smith amendment will provide the opportunity for pilots to use firearms to defend their passengers and planes, as well as provide for reinforcing the cockpit doors on commercial aircraft.

I urge you to vote for the Smith amendment, as it can help save the lives of pilots, crew members, and passengers—not to mention the lives of thousands of citizens on the ground.

Sincerely,

JOHN VELLECO,
Director of Federal Affairs.

NATIONAL RIFLE ASSOCIATION OF AMERICA, INSTITUTE FOR LEGISLATIVE ACTION,
Washington, DC, October 3, 2001.

DEAR SENATOR: In the aftermath of the tragedy that occurred on September 11th, various proposals have been offered to deal with airline security. As the United States Senate begins debate on the Aviation Security Act, S. 1147, amendments may be offered relating to pilot and passenger security.

One proposal, sponsored by Senators Bob Smith and Conrad Burns, addresses pilot safety by allowing—not requiring—properly trained commercial pilots, co-pilots, and flight engineers to carry firearms. On behalf of the 4 million members of the National Rifle Association, I urge you to support this common sense and well-balanced measure.

Armed pilots with proper training and suitable equipment will be the last line of defense against hijackers and terrorists in providing cockpit and aircraft security. Obviously, proper training is an essential component of this legislation. Along with the possibility of U.S. Air Marshals accompanying commercial flights, this measure would send a strong message to potential attackers that self-defense exists in the air as well as on our land.

The National Rifle Association stands with the Air Line Pilots Association and the Allied Pilots Association in supporting this amendment. This measure will provide both deterrence to hijackers and terrorists and safety to airline employees and the traveling public. Please vote ''yes'' on the Smith/Burns amendment to S. 1147.

Sincerely,

CHARLES H. CUNNINGHAM,
Director, NRA Federal Affairs.

AIR LINE PILOTS ASSOCIATION, INTERNATIONAL,
Washington, DC, October 3, 2001.

Hon. ROBERT C. SMITH,
U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR SMITH: On behalf of the 67,000 members of the Air Line Pilots Association, International, I want to offer our most sincere thanks and our support for your amendment to S. 1447, which would provide for armed federal pilot officers.

The Administration, Congress, and the industry are all heavily involved in activities and discussions aimed at improving security. Many of the proposed security initiatives and proposals will take months, even years to implement; some of them are also very expensive.

We have learned, in a most tragic fashion, that the occupants of the cockpit must be protected in the event of a cockpit door breach in order to prevent further loss of life to passengers, crew, and those on the ground. Provision of armed air marshals and enhanced cockpit doors will help. However, not all flights will have the protection of air marshals, and new, more secure cockpit doors will not be installed overnight.

For those reasons, it is our strong belief that the last line of defense must be a method of training, deputizing and arming those pilots who both volunteer and qualify to carry a means of lethal self-defense. Not all pilots will want to carry a weapon, and some who do may not qualify under the FBI's strict screening and training criteria, but there will be thousands of our members who can meet both criteria. Once the cost of training these pilots is complete, there would be virtually no other expense for providing an FBI-trained federal officer in the cockpit who is capable of administering lethal force.

In addition to adding a genuine security enhancement in the very near term, the creation of a federal pilot officer program would also generate a tremendous amount of confidence among pilots to protect themselves and, thereby, their passengers. We believe that your proposal, if implemented, should also translate into greater confidence in air travel security by the traveling public and help the airlines return to profitability much sooner than they could otherwise.

In summary, we believe that your proposed federal pilot officer program is a most reasonable, practical, cost-effective, and efficient means of enhancing airline security. ALPA supports it and we urge its enactment.

Sincerely,

DUANE E. WOERTH,
President.

Mr. SMITH of New Hampshire. I yield to the Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Montana.

Mr. BURNS. I thank my friend from New Hampshire.

Madam President, I want to say to all those folks who would be critical, this does not make it mandatory for a weapon to be on the flight deck. This says they are able to take one if they are comfortable with one.

I point to American Airlines Flight 11, which was the first plane to hit the north tower. The pilot was a Vietnam veteran and the copilot was a Navy Top Gun pilot. On American Airlines Flight 77, Charlie Burlingame was a graduate of the U.S. Naval Academy and a Top Gun pilot. On United Airlines 175, which was the second plane to hit the south tower, both the pilot and copilot were veterans, one a Navy pilot, one a Marine Corps veteran.

What we are saying is, if these men and women who operate the flight deck are comfortable with a weapon, they should be allowed to have a weapon. That is what this amendment says.

I thank the Senator from New Hampshire for his leadership and the Senator from California for her support.

Mr. SMITH of New Hampshire. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the following letter from the Allied Pilots Association be printed in the RECORD in support of amendment No. 1874.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

ALLIED PILOTS ASSOCIATION,
Fort Worth, TX, October 7, 2001.

Hon. ROBERT SMITH,
United States Senate,
Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR SMITH: On behalf of the Allied Pilots Association, which represents the 11,500 pilots of American Airlines, I wish to express our strong support for the ''Flight Deck Security Act of 2001.''

We must take immediate action to enhance our nation's aviation security. We believe the ''Flight Deck Security Act,'' S. 1463, will help ensure the safety of both airline flight crews and the flying public.

APA supports allowing qualified pilots to carry firearms. The majority of our pilots have served in the military, where they received weapons training, and many are already qualified to handle small arms. Armed pilots will help deter terrorists from attempting to hijack an aircraft. Furthermore, they would provide a last line of defense to resist the hijacking of commercial aircraft.

The Allied Pilots Association urges the Senate to pass the ''Flight Deck Security Act.'' We believe S. 1463's voluntary firearm program should be enacted immediately.

Sincerely,

Captain JOHN DARRAH,
President,

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. MCCAIN. Madam President, how many minutes would the Senator want?

Ms. MIKULSKI. I know there is an amendment. I want to make some general comments about the bill. What would be the appropriate way?

Mr. MCCAIN. I ask unanimous consent that we temporarily set aside the amendment and the Senator from Maryland be allowed to speak for 5 minutes on the legislation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Ms. MIKULSKI. I thank the Senator from Arizona, the national leader on this topic.

Madam President, we just came from the Pentagon memorial for all of those who died at the Pentagon on the fateful day, 9/11, one month ago.

We have been going to several memorials. They have been heartfelt. Whether it was at Emmitsburg for the National Fallen Firefighters Memorial, today at the Pentagon, joining with Senators LOTT and DASCHLE, having the resolution on a national day of remembrance, all of these are very special to me because on that fateful day, I lost 60 Maryland constituents: 54 at the Pentagon, those who were working at the Pentagon and who were on that fateful flight. Six others, who we currently know of, lost their lives at other sites.

I know the Chair knows we feel a great debt of gratitude to the gallant people on Flight 93 who probably saved our lives. I support the memorials. I was honored to be there.

I am pleased to join in a resolution for a national day of remembrance. I think we need a permanent way of remembering those people who died on that very fateful, grim, horrific day. The way we honor their memory is to make sure it never, ever can happen again.

This is why I am so passionate about our moving our aviation security bill, why I am very firm in terms of trying to make our railroads safe and also ensuring that those people who work in the field of transportation and in airports and airlines are not doubly victimized, first by the terrorists and then by an economic compensation system that leaves them without jobs, without incomes, without future training, and a bleak future. We should not doubly punish them by leaving them without an economic security safety net.

I plead to my colleagues today: Let us put aside our ideologies on how we think Government should be this size or Government should be that size. We need to think about what is the right thing to do for the American people. I want to get America moving again. I want them to be on the rails. I want them to be in planes. I want them to feel free to travel. This is why I am so passionate about the need to have an aviation security bill that also federalizes our security operations.

It ensures that we have the best to guard us. We have the best to guard us at the military; God bless them. We have the best to help rescue us in our fire and police departments; God bless them. Let's have the very best and the best trained at our airports.

While we are making our airports safe, let us look at other areas of vulnerability, and then that goes to our railroads. We need, again, passenger screening. We need baggage screening. We need to assure the safety of our tunnels, of which we have many in the Northeast corridor. I know the Chair is from a railroad corridor State. Last but not at all least, I am concerned about those 528,000 people who filed for unemployment last week. That is just a little bit less than the size of my great city of Baltimore. A half million people are on unemployment, not because they were laggards, not because they don't want to work, not because they don't want to show up for duty, but because of circumstances outside of their control.

We have it within our control to make an economic safety net for them. I say to my colleagues, we have clotured this; we have bargained that; we have negotiated that. Let us get back to the spirit we had a few weeks ago when we were not a Republican Party or a Democratic Party. We were the red, white, and blue party. Let's do right for airline security. Let's do right for railroad security. Let's do right for the people who have lost their jobs because of terrorist attacks. That will be the best permanent memorial we could make to those who have fallen because of this horrific deed.

Madam President, four civilian airliners from three of our Nation's airports were used as weapons of war on September 11. As we're debating this legislation, our military is taking action against those who were responsible. One way to support our troops is to improve safety for all Americans. That's the goal of this legislation. This bill enables us to take three concrete actions to improve the safety of our skies.

Security is a high skill job. Yet airport screeners in this country are low paid—$6.00 an hour or less. Fast food restaurant employees are paid better.

They are poorly trained. The FAA requires 12 hours of classroom training. Other countries do a better job. France requires 60 hours of training. Belgium requires at least 40 hours. Often, those who perform the training have had only a few hours of training themselves.

They are inexperienced. Turnover rates are alarming: 126 percent from May 1998 through April 1999 at our nation's 19 largest airports; as high as 416 percent in some instances.

They have low morale which leads to poor performance.

FAA inspection reports reveal significant weaknesses in the performance of our airport screeners. Security inspectors showed that BWI ranked fifth among major airports in the number of bombs, grenades or other weapons that went undetected in federal inspections.

This is not a new problem. The GAO reports that in 1987 airport screeners missed 20 percent of the potentially dangerous objects used in tests and it's been getting worse over the past few years.

Part of the solution is to federalize our airport security workforce. We have Federal officials protecting our borders and protecting our President. We also need Federal officials protecting our flying public. Why federal workers? They can be fully trained and monitored. Their primary goal would be safety, not the economic bottom line. The Hollings bill does this by Federalizing airport security operations, by requiring extensive training—40 hours of classroom training, 60 hours of on-the-job instruction—by deploying law enforcement personnel at each airport, including armed personnel at airport security screening locations.

The safety of our pilots is critical to ensuring the safety of the passengers. The tragedies of September 11 showed that we need to strengthen the cockpit door and locks to prevent entry by non-flight deck crewmembers.

In a hijacking situation, we've always focused on deterrence, that pilots and copilots should negotiate with hijackers until the aircraft is safely on the ground. September 11 shattered that idea.

This bill prohibits access to the flight deck cockpit by any person other than a flight deck crew member. It requires the strengthening of the cockpit door and locks to prevent entry by non-flight deck crew members and requires commuter aircraft that do not have doors to get doors.

On September 11, some heroic Americans on United Airlines flight 93 lost their lives as they confronted the terrorists. They prevented the plane from flying into the Capitol or the White House. These brave citizens lost their lives, yet they saved many others—perhaps even those of us in this chamber.

Yet we can't ask American citizens to risk or lose their lives. We need Federal air marshals on our airplanes to protect our citizens.

The Sky Marshal Program dates back to the Kennedy Administration when the concern of hijackings to Cuba was prevalent. In 1970, the program was greatly expanded to include 1,500 U.S. Customs officers, 800 military personnel. Two years later, the U.S. Customs Sky Marshal Program was phased out.

Then, in 1985, a 727 TWA flight from Athens was diverted to Beirut where terrorists murdered Robert Dean Stetham of Maryland. The highjackings of 1985 prompted Congress to reinstate the Air Marshal program, but it is spartan and skimpy.

This legislation would require a marshal on every flight. That's about 25,000 flights a day, pre-September 11, on all domestic flights and on all international flights originating in the U.S.

The events of September 11 were an attack against America and against humanity. We are a nation that is grief stricken, but we are not paralyzed in our determination to rid the world of terrorism. In the mean time, we must act to make transportation safer in the United States. We must have a sense of urgency and pass this legislation immediately.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. MCCAIN. Madam President, unless the Senator from New Hampshire would like to speak again, we yield back the remainder of our time and urge adoption of the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If all time is yielded back, without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

The amendment (No. 1874) was agreed to.

Mr. MCCAIN. Madam President, I move to reconsider the vote.

Mr. SMITH of New Hampshire. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

''(3) Beginning on the date of enactment of the Aviation Security Act, the Administrator shall conduct all research related to screening technology and procedures in conjunction with the Attorney General.''.

Mr. BURNS. Madam President, Senator DEWINE of Ohio and Senator MCCONNELL of Kentucky are cosponsors of this amendment. It has been a subject of conversation for the last week. The events of September 11 changed a lot of things—where we place emphasis and how we do business in this town. We are changing who is directly responsible and directly accountable for airport security.

When I first looked at the legislation as it was being drafted, there was one glaring fault. That was that the enforcement of security and safety of America's traveling air passengers was still in the Department of Transportation. I have believed since September 11 that something had to be changed. In other words, we had to do something that would give the flying public a sense of security and safety and the rules would be made outside of the Department of Transportation. I believe it should be in the Department of Justice.

If you look at what we have to do and the areas in which we have to do it, the argument that the chairman of the full committee made, which is when you take those areas of intelligence and passengers lists, which we are going to have to scrutinize a little bit better and more in the future than we have in the past, when we take a look at the outside of the airport or the peripherals and the security of the airport security itself, when you look at security in the check-in area and also the area known as the departure gate, then we shift our emphasis to cargo, that which is shipped on regularly scheduled flights and also among the people who are in the air freight business, also the area in which we park our aircraft overnight or aircraft that has been parked for some length of time, and the aircraft itself—those are distinct areas where we have responsibilities for security and safety—no other agency in the Government is better equipped to do the job in all those areas than the Department of Justice.

So what my amendment says is that we give a bright line of authority to the Attorney General, who is accountable and responsible for the security and safety of air traffic. That does not say that the Department of Transportation, or even the FAA, doesn't have a little say about what goes on in their business. They should be able to set some of the rules and make sure aircraft are certified to fly and pilots are certified to fly, and those things. But on the security end of it, America is telling me they want law enforcement powers just for the sense of security when they travel.

I have often used this analogy with folks who like football and those folks who like baseball and basketball: they are great sports, but you never see the teams refereeing or umpiring themselves. It has to be done by an entity that understands the rules or the mission of safety, and security. So that is where we are.

That is what this amendment is all about. It allows a setting of standards. It allows the checking of employees, if they work in sensitive areas, such as bag handling, and they are near the aircraft. Those employees are going to have to stand the scrutiny of the Justice Department in order to get a job on the ramp, so to speak.

When I came out of the Marine Corps, I worked for the airlines for about 3 years. I understand what goes on out there. They are not doing many things differently today than they did 35 or 40 years ago. They have better equipment. They don't have to lift as much as we used to in the old days, but there is more security.

What this amendment does is it says the Department of Justice, the Attorney General of the United States of America, will be responsible for setting up the apparatus through the Justice Department to make sure that our areas are secure and people are safe when they fly.

So I offer this amendment. I ask for your support as we move forward. I think we have worked out just about all of the kinks. We have people who want to make statements. I say to my ranking member and my boss on the Commerce Committee that they want to speak a little bit on this amendment. Then I will turn it over to him.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CORZINE). The Senator from Arizona is recognized.

Mr. MCCAIN. Mr. President, I say to my friend from Montana, who I have had the privilege of working with for many years on the Commerce Committee, I think this is a good amendment. One of the reasons I think it is a good amendment is because we are trying to address a major issue with this legislation, and that is to restore confidence on the part of the American people in the belief that they can fly on airliners and be in airports with a sense of security.

I think the Senator's amendment, by putting these responsibilities into the Department of Justice, will increase that confidence factor rather dramatically. I don't think right now that most Americans know who is in charge of the airport screening procedures. I have often asked that question myself. I don't think Americans believe that one agency that is in charge has done a very good job, whoever is responsible for it. We see continued breaches of airport security—even after September 11. So I think the amendment of the Senator from Montana is a good one. I think it will move the process in the direction we are seeking for this legislation.

I thank Senator BURNS for his active participation and involvement in this issue. I know Mr. MCCONNELL, the Senator from Kentucky, wants to speak on this amendment as well. If the chairman wants to speak, perhaps we can wait a few minutes for Senator MCCONNELL after he finishes.

I yield the floor.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, the distinguished Senator from Arizona has pointed out the main concern that we have, and that is that airline travelers have complete confidence in the security, safety, and normalcy of our airlines—as we are all pleading with the people of the country to get back to normal travel. The best way to do that is to have law enforcement immediately connected to personnel in and around the facility, and out on the tarmac, that they are all aware of security threats—specifically, to be on the lookout for people on a watch list.

The overall security effort would be developed, no question, by the FBI domestic homefront security office. They are the ones that would have immediate knowledge of anyone on a watch list, communicating immediately, of course, with their screeners and others working in the airport and its facility.

I think it is a well-considered measure. The Senator from Montana recommended this when we approached this subject 3 or 4 weeks ago. We talked back and forth. We are trying to get things done. In order to get things done, sometimes your own personal choice is subjugated to the good of the body generally. The good of the body and the White House, for that matter, was to put responsibility for airport security under the Department of Transportation's purview.

But there is no question, as the Senator from Arizona says, this amendment would facilitate the enactment and passage of this legislation. I support it.

Mr. BURNS. Mr. President, the bill we are discussing today would help to ensure the safety of flying for passengers on the planes as well as innocent civilians on the ground.

However, I am concerned that the bill will broadly expand the law enforcement authority of the Department of Transportation and the Federal Aviation Administration. I believe we should let experienced law enforcers set the standards to protect the safety of commercial air operations.

The mission of the DOT is to:

> serve the United States by ensuring a fast, safe, efficient, accessible and convenient transportation system that meets our vital national interests and enhances the quality of life of the American people, today and into the future.

The mission of the U.S. Marshall Service under the oversight of the Attorney General is to:

> enforce federal laws and provide support to virtually all elements of the federal justice system by providing for the security of federal court facilities and the safety of judges and other court personnel; apprehending criminals; exercising custody of federal prisoners and providing for their security and transportation to correctional facilities; executing federal court orders; seizing assets gained by illegal means and providing for the custody, management and disposal of forfeited assets; assuring the safety of endangered government witnesses and their families; and collecting and disbursing funds.

The key phrase is to ''enforce Federal laws.'' The Justice Department is a law enforcement body. That agency is tasked to protect the American people through the enforcement of laws set by Congress.

Prior to 9/11, the primary responsibility for aviation security was shared by the FAA, airports and the carriers.

The FAA set the standards and regulations that were followed by the airports and carriers. The FAA was responsible to provide threat information obtained from the intelligence community to the security apparatus protecting our airports and carriers.

The Air Marshall program, although active, was relatively non-existent as there were fewer than 50 security personnel enlisted to secure our passenger airplanes.

Airports remain responsible for the physical security of airport facilities, law enforcement and security personnel. In Montana, our Governor has temporarily deployed the Montana National Guard to protect our airports while a threat remains significant. I have discussed airport security with Montana's airport managers and they have informed me of their current practices.

Airlines and cargo carriers are responsible for implementing those security activities that directly affect the flow of passengers, baggage and cargo aboard aircraft.

Since 9/11 we have entered a new era. The last hijacking of a U.S. airline using a weapon was in 1989, when a passenger used a starter pistol and two folding knives to hijack an American Airlines plane.

Prior to that, a Pacific Southwest Airline jet crashed in 1987 after a former ticket agent for the airline smuggled a gun aboard and broke into the cockpit, killing the flight crew. All 43 people aboard were killed.

But is was the bombing of Pan Am flight 103 on Dec. 21, 1988 over Lockerbie, Scotland that turned the attention of security officials from guns to bombs, which can be relatively small and made of plastic.

While we have upgraded our equipment to detect bombs, we have not addressed concerns about uniform standards used to detect potential human threats in a plane.

At airport security checkpoints, walk-through metal detectors currently screen passengers. If the detector alarms, screeners use metal-detecting hand wands. Nonmetallic objects, including plastic and ceramic weapons, will generally not be found by either procedure.

At the same checkpoints, carry-on bags are screened by equipment that displays an x-ray image of bag contents. An operator who sees a suspicious object in the image, or whose view is blocked by a concealing object, may hand search a bag as a backup procedure. Nonmetallic objects may be visible in the checkpoint x-ray image, but less clearly than metal items, and operator training has, up to now, been focused on identifying metal items.

The checkpoint screeners who work for these private security companies have rapid turnover, more than 100 percent per year at many airports. The pay is low and is largely attributed to this high rate of turnover.

Until directed otherwise by the Secretary of Transportation on September 12, 2001, many small knives, such as pocketknives, were permitted on board aircraft, even if detected by security personnel.

I have concerns about unsecured access to the plane. There were several reports about finding box cutters and other potential weapons on planes that had landed on 9/11/01. These findings could lead one to believe there were other planned attacks during that fateful day.

Prior to 9/11, several people had access to an aircraft and could, perhaps, leave a weapon in a hidden location for use by someone else. These people include the flight crew, maintenance personnel, cleaners, caterers, and baggage handlers.

The DOT Inspector General reported his office was able to gain unauthorized access to secure areas of airports 68% of the time in tests during 1998 and 1999 and has found in audits that background checks of airport personnel are ineffective and are frequently not conducted as required.

I encourage my colleagues to support this amendment. We need to establish a national standard that protects American citizens. I believe the Justice Department is the proper authority to set that standard.

I thank the chairman, and I yield the floor.

AMENDMENT NO. 1855, WITHDRAWN

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent, on behalf of Senator DASCHLE, that the Carnahan amendment be withdrawn.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Senator from Ohio is recognized.

AMENDMENT NO. 1875

Mr. DEWINE. Mr. President, I rise to support the Burns amendment. First, I congratulate my colleague for his work on this amendment. He has been very diligent in explaining in meeting after meeting off the floor of the Senate for the last week or 10 days why his amendment should pass. I congratulate him on his amendment. I congratulate him on his diligence and his perception of what we should be doing.

This is a simple amendment, one that I believe makes a very big statement. The statement says we believe our Justice Department is best suited to manage particular aspects of security at our airports. The reality is we need accountability. We need to know there is an agency in charge that knows how to manage security. That agency, I believe, is the Justice Department of the United States.

I say that because the Justice Department is in the business of law enforcement, and it is in the business of security in the Marshal Service. Protecting our airports and protecting the traveling public is a law enforcement and a security function. It is a function, I believe, best handled by the Department of Justice.

The fact is, those in charge of law enforcement have a different way of looking at things. I first understood that when I became an assistant county prosecuting attorney at the age of 25. I could not believe how the police officers in Xenia, OH, or the sheriff's office in Fairborn, OH, saw things differently than I saw them.

They saw things through the eyes of a trained officer. They saw things from the law enforcement point of view. They saw things from a security point of view. We would go to crime scenes, and they would explain what they saw. We would look at situations where we were worried about security, and they would see things that I would never see.

It is not just training. It is not just experience. It also is a culture. I guess we use the word ''culture'' when we do not know another word to explain it, but it is a fundamental way of approaching things.

I believe it makes eminent sense to take an agency that is concerned every single day about the security of Americans—that is what they get paid to do—and say we are going to put you in charge of the flying public's security while they are on the ground. We are going to leave it up to the FAA, the experts, about how to fly, when those planes fly, when they do not fly, and things that go on in the air. But when we are talking about ground security, we are going to leave that up to other experts, and those experts are in the Justice Department.

We have an example of how this is done. Justice really does two things: They do law enforcement, but they also do security. The Marshal Service does security every single day. They break it down. They make a distinction between the sworn officers and the contract employees. Later on in this debate, before final passage, I am going to have a little more to say about that.

When you go in, for example, to a Federal courthouse, or when you go into a Federal building, it is the U.S. Marshal Service that is in charge of that security. So there is precedent for doing this. There is an experience level that exists in the Justice Department.

I do not want to take a lot of the time of my colleagues, but I again congratulate my colleague, Senator BURNS, for this idea. I think it is the right idea. It basically says the whole issue of security on the ground—not just the checking of the baggage, not just the checking of the passengers, but the whole view and concept of what should be done in regard to each individual airport in this country—should be in the hands of the experts. And I believe those experts are in the Justice Department.

I thank the Chair and yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arizona.

Mr. MCCAIN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to set aside the pending amendment in order to address some amendments that have been agreed to on both sides.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

AMENDMENT NO. 1876

Mr. MCCAIN. Mr. President, on behalf of Senator DOMENICI, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Arizona [Mr. MCCAIN], for Mr. DOMENICI, proposes an amendment numbered 1876.

Mr. MCCAIN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

(Purpose: To further enhance research and development regarding aviation security)

At the appropriate place, insert the following:

( ) ADDITIONAL MATTERS REGARDING RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT.—

(1) ADDITIONAL PROGRAM REQUIREMENTS.—Subsection (a) of section 44912 of title 49, United States Code, is amended—

''(C) The individual designated under subparagraph (A) shall, on an annual basis, submit to the Research, Engineering and Development Advisory Committee a report on activities under this paragraph during the preceding year. Each report shall include, for the year covered by such report, information on—

''(i) progress made in engineering, research, and development with respect to security technology;

''(ii) the allocation of funds for engineering, research, and development with respect to security technology; and

''(iii) engineering, research, and development with respect to any technologies drawn from other agencies, including the rationale for engineering, research, and development with respect to such technologies.''.

(2) REVIEW OF THREATS.—Subsection (b)(1) of that section is amended—

(A) by redesignating subparagraphs (A) through (F) as subparagraphs (B) through (G), respectively; and

(B) by inserting before subparagraph (B), as so redesignated, the following new subparagraph (A):

''(A) a comprehensive systems analysis (employing vulnerability analysis, threat attribute definition, and technology roadmaps) of the civil aviation system, including—

''(ii) the disruption of civil aviation service, including by cyber attack;''.

(3) SCIENTIFIC ADVISORY PANEL.—Subsection (c) of that section is amended to read as follows:

''(c) SCIENTIFIC ADVISORY PANEL.—(1) The Administrator shall establish a scientific advisory panel, as a subcommittee of the Research, Engineering, and Development Advisory Committee, to review, comment on, advise the progress of, and recommend modifications in, the program established under subsection (a) of this section, including the need for long-range research programs to detect and prevent catastrophic damage to commercial aircraft, commercial aviation facilities, commercial aviation personnel and passengers, and other components of the commercial aviation system by the next generation of terrorist weapons.

''(2)(A) The advisory panel shall consist of individuals who have scientific and technical expertise in—

''(i) the development and testing of effective explosive detection systems;

''(ii) aircraft structure and experimentation to decide on the type and minimum weights of explosives that an effective explosive detection technology must be capable of detecting;

''(iii) technologies involved in minimizing airframe damage to aircraft from explosives; and

''(iv) other scientific and technical areas the Administrator considers appropriate.

''(B) In appointing individuals to the advisory panel, the Administrator should consider individuals from academia and the national laboratories, as appropriate.

''(3) The Administrator shall organize the advisory panel into teams capable of undertaking the review of policies and technologies upon request.

''(4) Not later than 90 days after the date of the enactment of the Aviation Security Act, and every two years thereafter, the Administrator shall review the composition of the advisory panel in order to ensure that the expertise of the individuals on the panel is suited to the current and anticipated duties of the panel.''.

Mr. MCCAIN. Mr. President, for the information of my colleagues, this amendment provides for the appointment of an advisory board which would make recommendations concerning the best way to ensure the best technology is available to increase security, especially at airports, but also at other vital installations around the country. It is a good amendment. I urge its adoption.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

The amendment (No. 1876) was agreed to.

Mr. MCCAIN. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote.

Mr. HOLLINGS. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

AMENDMENT NO. 1877

Mr. MCCAIN. Mr. President, on behalf of the Senator from Georgia, Mr. CLELAND, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Arizona [Mr. MCCAIN], for Mr. CLELAND, proposes an amendment numbered 1877.

Mr. MCCAIN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

(Purpose: To expand the registration requirements with respect to airmen)

At the appropriate place, insert the following:

SEC. ___. AMENDMENTS TO AIRMEN REGISTRY AUTHORITY.

Section 44703(g) of title 49, United States Code, is amended—

(1) in the first sentence of paragraph (1)—

(A) by striking ''pilots'' and inserting ''airmen''; and

(B) by striking the period and inserting ''and related to combating acts of terrorism.''; and

(2) by adding at the end, the following new paragraphs:

''(3) For purposes of this section, the term 'acts of terrorism' means an activity that involves a violent act or an act dangerous to human life that is a violation of the criminal laws of the United States or of any State, or that would be a criminal violation if committed within the jurisdiction of the United States or of any State, and appears to be intended to intimidate or coerce a civilian population, to influence the policy of a government by intimidation or coercion or to affect the conduct of a government by assassination or kidnaping.

''(4) The Administrator is authorized and directed to work with State and local authorities, and other Federal agencies, to assist in the identification of individuals applying for or holding airmen certificates.''.

Mr. MCCAIN. Mr. President, this amendment by the Senator from Georgia has been agreed to on both sides. I urge its adoption.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

The amendment (No. 1877) was agreed to.

Mr. MCCAIN. I move to reconsider the vote.

Mr. HOLLINGS. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. REID. Will the Senator from Arizona yield for a very brief statement?

Mr. MCCAIN. It will be my pleasure.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I withdrew the Carnahan amendment. One reason it was withdrawn is because of the statements made by the Senator from Arizona that on the next vehicle moving through here, we can look to help the employees we are trying to help, and he said he would help us. He has been very good on this legislation, and his statements regarding these displaced workers and people who need help so badly is very much appreciated.

Mr. MCCAIN. I thank the Senator from Nevada. We are in the process of continuing negotiations. I think we are very close to an agreement between myself and the principals.

AMENDMENT NO. 1878

Mr. MCCAIN. Mr. President, on behalf of Senator THOMPSON, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Arizona [Mr. MCCAIN], for Mr. THOMPSON, proposes an amendment numbered 1878.

Mr. MCCAIN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

(ii) In addition to meeting the requirements of GPRA, the performance plan shall clarify the responsibilities of the Secretary, the Deputy Secretary for Transportation Security and any other agency or organization that may have a role in ensuring the safety and security of the civil air transportation system.

(iii) The performance plan shall be available to the public. The Deputy Secretary for Transportation Security may prepare a nonpublic appendix covering performance goals and indicators that, if revealed to the public, would likely impede achievement of those goals and indicators.

(B) PERFORMANCE REPORT.—

(i) Each year, consistent with the requirements of GPRA, the Deputy Secretary for Transportation Security shall prepare and submit to Congress an annual report including an evaluation of the extent goals and objectives were met. The report shall include the results achieved during the year relative to the goals established in the performance plan.

(b) ESTABLISHING MANAGEMENT ACCOUNTABILITY FOR MEETING PERFORMANCE GOALS.—

(i) Each year, the Secretary and Deputy Secretary for Transportation Security shall enter into an annual performance agreement that shall set forth organizational and individual performance goals for the Deputy Secretary.

(ii) Each year, the Deputy Secretary for Transportation Security and each senior manager who reports to the Deputy Secretary for Transportation Security shall enter into an annual performance agreement that sets forth organization and individual goals for those managers. Further, the Deputy Secretary for Transportation Security shall establish, within the performance management system, a program allowing for the payment of bonuses or other incentives to other managers and employees. Such a program shall provide for bonuses or other incentives based on their performance.

(e) PERFORMANCE-BASED SERVICE CONTRACTING.—To the extent contracts, if any, are used to implement this act, the Deputy Secretary for Transportation Security shall, to the extent practical, maximize the use of performance-based service contracts. These contracts should be consistent with guidelines published by the Office of Federal Procurement Policy.

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. President. The attacks of September 11 demonstrated that we had not done all we could to prevent or mitigate them. But even these events weren't necessary to show us that. We have known for some time that airport security was less than acceptable, and we all agree that the system used to screen airline passengers and baggage needs to be overhauled. However, in the rush to fix the problem by ''federalizing'' the security workforce, I am concerned that not enough attention is being given to a critical flaw in existing security operations, that is, the failure to set and insist on performance standards. It doesn't matter who does this work, if we continue to fail to hold those responsible for security, from top to bottom, accountable. In the past, some fines were levied, but no one was held accountable for improvement.

Passenger and baggage screeners and their employers, whether civil servants or contractors, must be required to meet performance standards, and then must be subject to meaningful sanctions if those standards are not met. This has not occurred in the past. The General Accounting Office has issued several reports that document the Federal Aviation Administration's failure to hold airlines accountable for the declining performance of their baggage screeners over the last decade. Note that I said detection rates have declined virtually every year over the last decade.

It's important to note that we have been trying to implement performance-based management in the Federal Government for some time. Since 1994, agencies of the Federal Government have been required to set goals for what they do and report to Congress and the American people on whether agencies are meeting those goals. Oddly, the Department of Transportation has been a leader in setting goals. It's just that in the area of aviation security, they haven't been meeting them.

In 1997, we asked the Department of Transportation Inspector General to identify the Department's worst management challenges. Since that time, the Inspector General has routinely identified aviation security as the Department's greatest management challenge. And since 1999, I've been asking the Department of Transportation to set goals to address and improve aviation security. The Department did set a goal for the rate at which screeners detect dangerous objects, and it reported as recently as April of this year that it failed to meet its goal.

Let me read to you from the Department of Transportation's Performance Report, which it issued this spring:

DOT did not meet this year's performance target [for aviation security, which specifically measures the detection rate for explosives and weapons that may be brought aboard aircraft.] The technology is functioning well and provides superior security protection, but screener performance has not improved enough.

The report states further: FAA may face a greater challenge than expected to meet the FY 2001 performance targets in some areas of screening.

Like so many things in Washington, we have known this was a problem for some time. Detection rates at the Nation's airports have been declining steadily since 1993. But clearly, we weren't holding those responsible for aviation security accountable for their performance. So, I have to ask, what assurances do we have that the Department of Transportation will hold new screeners, under this bill, more accountable?

Lax enforcement of standards inevitably leads to lax security, regardless of who hires those screeners. This amendment will ensure that results-oriented management is a key component of whatever changes are made to our airport security system. We can not afford more business as usual. We have to insist that the traveling public is safe from those who would perpetrate evil deeds like those of September 11.

First, my amendment requires the Federal Government to set and enforce goals for aviation security. It requires the head of aviation security, within 60 days of enactment, to establish acceptable levels of performance and provide Congress with an action plan to achieve that performance. Over the long-term, the head of aviation security must establish a process for performance planning and reporting that informs Congress and the American people about how the Government is meeting its goals. By creating this process, we will be constantly assessing the threats we face and ensuring that we have the means to measure our progress in preparing for those threats. This is a new, detailed method for ensuring that performance management is in place specifically in the Government's aviation security programs.

I firmly believe that good people, well managed, can substantially improve our aviation security. So this amendment gives those responsible for aviation security enhanced tools to regain the confidence of America's flying public. We employ a good mix of carrots and sticks to drive performance. For instance: This amendment establishes an annual staff performance management system that includes setting individual, group, and organizational performance goals consistent with an annual performance plan. Managers and employees would be eligible for bonuses for good performance. The amendment allows management to hold employees, whether public, private, or a mix thereof, accountable for meeting their performance standards.

This approach is not new. Agencies like IRS, the Patent and Trademark Office, and the Office of Student and Financial Assistance, have performance-based management systems. But this will be the first time that performance-based management has been used to better government performance at every level of a government agency.

I've been trying for many years to get agencies to set goals and strive to meet them. It seems so commonsensical, but for so many years, the Federal Government did not do that. And we in the Congress, admittedly, have not really held agencies' feet to the fire as far as performance goes.

There has never been, in my opinion, a clearer example of good goals, but poor performance, as in the area of aviation security. This amendment will restore confidence in air travel. With my amendment, we will say, if you are not meeting your goals, whether it be detecting dangerous objects that people try to get on planes or preventing access to secure areas of an airport or airplane, you can be held accountable. And those who meet their goals can be rewarded.

This amendment makes sense. I hope we can assure the American people that we are doing all we can, remaining vigilant, by strictly enforcing standards for the safety and security of the Nation's airports and airplanes. I urge the adoption of this simple, but critical, performance-based amendment.

Mr. MCCAIN. Mr. President, this is an important amendment. It deserves a couple minutes of explanation.

One of the difficulties we have had in the past is we passed legislation and authorized certain activities, and then we forgot about them as a Congress. We do not pay enough attention to the performance of the bureaucracies that we either create or designate to carry out certain programs.

Senator THOMPSON's amendment is basically results-based management. It is going to require reporting. It is going to require performance reports. It is going to require performance plans. It is going to establish a system for measuring staff performance, management accountability for meeting performance goals, compensation, the Deputy Secretary for Transportation Security, et cetera.

It is comprehensive performance-based management and results-based management. I believe it is an important amendment in making sure this legislation is accountable to the American people as well as the Congress. I urge its adoption.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. MCCAIN. I move to reconsider the vote.

AMENDMENT NO. 1879

(Purpose: To require expanded utilization of current security technologies, establish short-term assessment and deployment of emergency security technologies, and for other purposes)

Mr. MCCAIN. Mr. President, finally, on behalf of Senator LIEBERMAN, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Arizona [Mr. MCCAIN], for Mr. LIEBERMAN, for himself, and Mr. DURBIN, proposes an amendment numbered 1879.

Mr. MCCAIN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(The text of the amendment is printed in today's RECORD under ''Amendments Submitted.'')

Mr. LIEBERMAN. Mr. President, I am pleased to join with Senator DURBIN to offer an amendment to S. 1447, the Aviation Security Act, to improve airport and aircraft safety through heightened screening of passengers, carry-on luggage, checked baggage, and those entering secure areas of airports. The overriding purpose of my amendment is to put our superior technological knowledge to better, more accurate, more widespread, and, therefore, more effective use.

In the wake of the horrific attacks of September 11, the Nation's confidence in the safety of our skies has been deeply shaken. Apart from the thousands of lives lost, public trust in airport security has suffered a severe blow, which in turn has had a devastating impact on the fortunes of the airline sector as well as the general economy. Three weeks ago, Congress approved a $15 billion bailout plan for the airline industry, which we all hope will keep the nation's carriers financially and operationally viable for at least the immediate future. Ultimately, however, the long-term recovery of air commerce will require nothing less than developing ironclad confidence in the safety of our airports and air carriers. My amendment and the bill now under discussion are first steps toward achieving that goal.

On September 25, the Governmental Affairs Committee, which I chair, held a joint hearing with the Subcommittee on Oversight of Government Management, chaired by Senator DURBIN, to explore the adequacy of airline and airport screening. Witnesses from the airline industry, the aviation security industry, major airports, the Federal Aviation Administration, the Department of Transportation Inspector General's Office, and the General Accounting Office provided sobering testimony on shortcomings in our current airport security system. The amendment I am offering today is derived in large part from the expert advice and recommendations the Committee received at the hearing.

The amendment has three general aims: First, to expand the use of current security technologies and procedures; second, to improve upon and upgrade those existing technologies and procedures; and, third, to fund development of newer, better, and more cost-effective technologies and procedures.

The very first step that must be taken in order to accomplish these ends must be to ensure that those working in and around airports are beyond reproach, because the best technologies and procedures are, frankly, useless if the people employing them cannot be trusted. My amendment, therefore, would require completion of intensive background checks on all airport personnel who have access to secure areas at commercial airports. This includes FBI criminal checks for all workers, not just for new hires but for current employees as well.

Next, the amendment would require the Federal Aviation Administration to expand the use of bulk explosive detection technology already being deployed at most major airports. We would require the technology to be used more precisely, more cost effectively, and more often than is currently the case. To ensure that every link in the chain of security is strong, the FAA would also be asked to establish goals for the purchase of additional detection machines for certain mid-sized airports.

Carriers would be required to increase the number of checked bags that are positively matched with a boarded passenger, until airports are scanning 100 percent of checked baggage with explosive detection technology. The purpose here is to prevent a situation in which a terrorist loads explosives onto a plane in his baggage, without actually boarding the plane himself.

The measure would require carriers to build upon the Computer-Assisted Passenger Pre-Screening System, (CAPPS), which now uses a range of criteria to identify passengers who may present a threat. The way it works now, baggage checked by selected passengers is subjected to scanning for possible explosives. Under this amendment I am offering, passengers identified under this system would be subject to additional security checks of their persons and their carry-on luggage, whether or not they had checked baggage.

Additionally, to improve and upgrade existing procedures, the amendment focuses on the ease with which people may obtain unauthorized access to restricted areas within airports. This is a widespread and potentially lethal problem that can be easily remedied. In 1998 and 1999, undercover investigators working for the Department of Transportation Inspector General's office were able to access secure areas in airports a whopping 68 percent of the time. Once the investigators entered the secure areas, they were able to board aircraft in 117 cases, an astonishing number.

The amendment calls on the Department of Transportation to recommend ways to prevent unauthorized access to restricted areas—for example, by employing so-called biometrics systems, systems that employ retinal, facial, and hand identification technologies or similar scanning methods, that are currently in use at several U.S. airports; or by increasing surveillance at access points; upgrading card- or keypad-based access systems; improving airport emergency exit systems; and eliminating the practice commonly referred to as ''piggy-backing,'' where an unauthorized person follows an authorized person through a security access point.

Further, the amendment calls for better coordinating the distribution of information about passengers on law enforcement ''watch lists.'' And, it requests a review of options for improving the positive identification of passengers, through biometrics and smart cards.

Finally, the amendment would set aside $50 million for researching and developing new technologies to improve aviation safety in the future; and, $20 million for research and development of longer-term security improvements, including further advances in biometrics, advanced weapons detection, and improved systems for the sharing of information among law enforcement entities.

I believe that these provisions together represent a substantial improvement on the present state of passenger and baggage screening and other elements of the aviation security system. In conjunction with the larger changes contemplated in the underlying bill, I am confident that the measures I call for in this amendment will take us along the path toward real and measurable safety and security for our airways. Like all Americans, I look forward to the day when each of us can once again enter an airport, and board an airplane, knowing that terror has been banished from our skies.

Mr. President, I urge my colleagues to support this amendment.

Mr. MCCAIN. Mr. President, on behalf of Senator LIEBERMAN, this amendment requires expanded utilization of current security technologies, establishes short-term assessment and deployment of emergency security technologies, and for other purposes.

This has been agreed to by both sides. I think it is a good amendment and, again, along with the amendment on the part of Senator THOMPSON, I think it would give an efficient reporting and accountability aspect to this amendment which was lacking in its original form.

I urge the adoption of the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

AMENDMENT NO. 1880

Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, on behalf of Senator MURRAY, Senator SHELBY, Senator BYRD, myself, and the managers, I send an amendment to the desk with respect to the language clarification subjecting, of course, the fees and amounts under this particular measure to the appropriations process. I think it is clear in the bill but we wanted to make it absolutely clear, and on behalf of Senator MURRAY, Senator BYRD, and Senator SHELBY, we are pleased to present the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. HOLLINGS], for Mrs. MURRAY, for herself, Mr. BYRD, and Mr. SHELBY, proposes an amendment numbered 1880.

Mr. HOLLINGS. I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

(Purpose: To clarify the user fee funding mechanism)

On page 43, line 19, add the words ''annual appropriations for'' after the word ''offset'';

On page 43, line 20, strike the sentence beginning with the word ''The'' and ending with the word ''expended.'' on line 23;

On page 43, at the end of line 25, insert the following new subsection:

(c) USER OF FEES.—A fee collected under this section shall be used solely for the costs associated with providing aviation security services and may be used only to the extent provided in advance in an appropriation law.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, I urge adoption of the amendment.

Mr. MCCAIN. Mr. President, I ask for a voice vote on the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

The amendment (No. 1880) was agreed to.

Mr. HOLLINGS. I move to reconsider.

Mr. MCCAIN. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

AMENDMENT NO. 1881

Mr. MCCAIN. Mr. President, on behalf of myself, I send a technical amendment to the desk, and I ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Arizona [Mr. MCCAIN] proposes an amendment numbered 1881.

The amendment is as follows:

(Purpose: To authorize the employment, suspension, and termination of airport passenger security screeners without regard to the provisions of title 5, United States Code, otherwise applicable to such employees)

On page 32, beginning with line 9, strike through line 2 on page 35 and insert the following:

(d) SCREENER PERSONNEL.—Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the Secretary of Transportation may employ, appoint, discipline, terminate, and fix the compensation, terms, and conditions of employment of such a number of individuals as the Secretary determines to be necessary to carry out the passenger security screening functions of the Secretary under section 44901 of title 49, United States Code.

(e) STRIKES PROHIBITED.—An individual employed as a security screener under section 44901 of title 49, United States Code, is prohibited from participating in a strike or asserting the right to strike pursuant to section 7311(3) or 7116(b)(7) of title 5, United States Code.

Mr. MCCAIN. Mr. President, this amendment has to do with the management of the programs and the terms of employment. It has been discussed by both sides. I ask for its adoption.

AMENDMENT NO. 1875

Mr. MCCAIN. Mr. President, I understand the Senator from Kentucky, Mr. MCCONNELL, is on his way over to speak on the pending amendment. I ask that we return to the pending amendment.

I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MCCAIN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. MCCAIN. Mr. President, I announce on behalf of Senator HOLLINGS and myself we are now down to just a couple or three amendments. If there are Senators who have amendments, we would like for them to come to the Chamber and offer them because I think we are about ready to wrap up. I understand there may be at least two amendments on this side but we would like to get them considered and disposed of.

It would be very helpful if we could move from this legislation to the antiterrorism legislation.

Mr. REID. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. MCCAIN. I am glad to yield.

Mr. REID. As I announced today on behalf of Senator DASCHLE, there are some really important things to do. This bill is extremely important. The two managers of this bill have been talking about its importance for 1 week. It seems at least people with amendments could come and offer them. If they do not, the majority leader and the minority leader are going to move from this legislation, finish it, because we have waiting in the wings the very important antiterrorism legislation which the Attorney General and the President of the United States and all of us think is vitally important. So people do not have the luxury of finishing their appointments or whatever else they are doing. The business of the Senate is proceeding and we are going to move to third reading.

Mr. MCCAIN. I thank the Senator from Nevada. If it is agreeable, in about 20 minutes—it is now 25 after 3—we will move that no further amendments be considered. That gives Senators 20 minutes to come over and propose their amendments.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Very good.

Mr. MCCAIN. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MCCONNELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

AMENDMENT NO. 1875

Mr. MCCONNELL. Mr. President, it is my understanding the amendment of my good friend from Montana, Senator BURNS, has been agreed to on both sides. It is that amendment to which I want to speak for a few moments prior to its adoption.

Immediately after the terrorist attacks of September 11, airline security suddenly became a national law enforcement priority, shedding its former status as a routine administrative function of the airlines. Once this occurred, it became imperative that we enlist the expertise of our Nation's top law enforcement agencies to prevent further attacks on America through our aviation system.

Three weeks ago, and before Senators HOLLINGS and MCCAIN introduced their first comprehensive airline security bill, I also introduced S. 1444, the Federal Air Marshal and Safe Sky Act. My bill had two important objectives that I felt strongly about. One, to make airport security a national priority by having Federal standards, Federal training, and Federal oversight of all airport security functions and, two, to make airport security a law enforcement responsibility in the hands of the Attorney General, our Nation's top law enforcement official.

Since I introduced my bill, which was cosponsored by Senators BROWNBACK, GREGG, THURMOND, and HELMS, we have worked closely with both the chairman and ranking member of the Commerce Committee, as well as Senator BURNS and Senator DEWINE, on these important issues. That is why I am proud to be a cosponsor of Senator BURNS' amendment, which would transfer airport screening and armed personnel to the Department of Justice and allow the Department of Justice to set standards of training for Federal air marshals.

For a comprehensive air marshal program to be most effective, we need to relieve the obligations of airport security from the FAA and the airlines, where the primary purpose is to facilitate the managed air travel, and entrust that responsibility to the Department of Justice, whose primary mission is to enforce Federal law and, most importantly, to safeguard and protect us from further acts of terrorism.

The Justice Department already has a model in place for Federal security. That model is our Federal courthouses which are currently secured by the U.S. marshals who employ court security officers, commonly referred to as CSOs, to provide security around the perimeter of the building, at each point of entry, and in the courtrooms themselves. These court security officers are themselves retired Federal, State, and local law enforcement personnel.

Part of the reason our courthouses enjoy such security today is that this unified system provides for layers of security far before when one enters the actual courtroom. Our democracy demands, in the interests of our national security, that we make sure our airports are every bit as secure as our courthouses.

Finally, I would add that it is important both substantively and symbolically for the American people to know that one of our nation's top law enforcement priorities will now be handled by our nation's top law enforcement agency.

Mr. President, I thank the Senator from Montana, Mr. BURNS, for his leadership and hard work on this amendment. I also thank the chairman and ranking member for their hard work on this important piece of legislation and express my enthusiastic support for the Burns amendment and indicate my pride in being added as a cosponsor. I enjoyed working with the Senator from Montana on this matter and am glad the amendment will be accepted. It is an outstanding amendment and will add substantially to the goal of ensuring we have airports that are as safe as possible.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Montana.

Mr. BURNS. I thank my good friend, the Senator from Kentucky. I also thank him for his legislation issuing war bonds to pay for this operation, this antiterrorism effort, and to bring fugitives to justice and to fulfill this operation.

Since he introduced that legislation—and I was a cosponsor of it—I have been getting mail from all over the State of Montana wanting to know where to buy a war bond because they want to participate in the security of this country. Since September 11, we as a society have changed a lot of our priorities and agenda.

Mr. MCCONNELL. As Senator BURNS pointed out, this legislation has now passed the Senate and was added as an amendment to the Treasury-Postal appropriations bill. We are optimistic that the conferees will keep that amendment since it was not in the House version and it could be on the way, hopefully, for the President's signature downtown. We are optimistic that the Treasury Department will pick up this device which gives Americans a great opportunity.

One hears the question, What can I do? As the Senator from Montana pointed out, this is the answer to that.

Mr. BURNS. It was a great amendment. Americans want to participate. They want to do their share. Knowing we are in a crisis in this country, this is a way to help.

The operations we have going on are very expensive. This is a way we ask Americans to help us get the job done, help this President who has dedicated himself to getting this job done.

I yield the floor and suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MCCAIN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. MCCAIN. I don't believe there is further debate on the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment (No. 1875) was agreed to.

Mr. MCCAIN. I move to reconsider the vote.

Mr. HOLLINGS. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. BURNS. I thank the leadership for their courtesy and their staffs who worked with my staff closely in passing this amendment. It does enhance the legislation. We hope what we have done gives a bright line of accountability. I appreciate the leadership of the chairman of the Commerce Committee, the ranking member, and their staffs.

Mr. HOLLINGS. I thank the Senator from Montana for his leadership and help in enhancing security with respect to airline travel.

Mr. BURNS. I yield the floor.

Mr. HOLLINGS. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DORGAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DORGAN. Mr. President, I know the manager and the Senator MCCAIN are working very hard to resolve the final issues on this legislation. I take the floor again to say thank them for their hard work on this legislation. It has been a long, tortured trail to get this aviation security bill to the floor of the Senate; and, second, to begin to resolve all of the difficulties and hopefully get it passed as quickly as possible.

I mention one issue that will not hang up the bill for me. I will strongly support this bill because of the work they have done. The one issue I talked to both Senator HOLLINGS and Senator MCCAIN about is something that they have agreed to discuss in conference to see if we can make some adjustments.

Here is the situation with respect to the enplanement fee of $2.50. If you are flying in this country from one of the spokes in the system and fly from the spoke to a hub and to another hub—for example, from Bismark you go to Minneapolis, get on another plane, fly to Washington, DC, and then you fly back—you are going to pay four enplanement fees totaling $10.

The problem with respect to that enplanement fee is one in which if you start at a spoke in this system and fly to a hub and then to another hub, which many people do, they are going to always pay $10, because they will have taken four segments at $2.50 per segment.

Those who live in the big cities that fly to another major city will pay $5. If you are from a small airport and go to a hub and then another big city, which most travelers do—I do for every trip to North Dakota; I fly from here to Minneapolis, and either from there to Minot, or Grand Forks, or Fargo—for every one of those tickets, my constituents will always pay four $2.50 enplanement fees. Someone who lives in Chicago or Minneapolis and flies to Washington, DC will always pay a $5 fee. They will pay a fee when they leave Chicago, then a fee when they leave Washington, DC because they do not have to change planes. They only have two segments, not four. We have a circumstance where the current fee will double for those who are on the spokes part of the hub in the spoke system. That is just not fair.

So I visited just in this Chamber today with Senator HOLLINGS and Senator MCCAIN and described that circumstance. They have agreed to take a look at that in conference. I understand we cannot modify that at this moment, but they have said, yes, they understand that circumstance, and they would be willing to take a look at that in conference. I appreciate that.

It is just a circumstance where, in one more situation, those at the end of the line, those in the smaller airports who have to fly to a hub and then change planes to go someplace are going to end up paying more. They already pay too much, in my judgment.

Those who have the satisfaction of flying between pairs of the largest cities in the country have the wonderful treat of being able to see multiple carriers competing around price for those seats; and they get a pretty good deal under deregulation. That has not been the case for a lot of other consumers.

When we add to the airline tickets some fee to recover the charge for aviation security, we must do it in a manner that is fair. I submit, as I have indicated to Senator HOLLINGS and Senator MCCAIN, it is not, in my judgment, good policy for us to say to all of those who live out on the end of a spoke in the hub-and-spoke system pay twice as much as those who live in the hub. That is not something that would make sense, not something that would be fair to a lot of folks around this country who fly from the smaller airports.

So let me again say, I wanted to call this to the attention of my colleagues today. I did today, with a discussion with Senator HOLLINGS and Senator MCCAIN. They have agreed to take a good look at that in conference. That is all I can ask at this point.

Let me conclude, as I started, by saying this bill has an urgency to it. It has been frustrating that it has taken so long to get to the floor, but it is here. I will take great satisfaction in the work that my colleague from South Carolina, Senator HOLLINGS, has done; my colleague from Arizona, Senator MCCAIN, has done; along with many others—Senator ROCKEFELLER, Senator HUTCHISON, myself, and so many others who worked on this bill in the Commerce Committee. Thanks to their good work, we will pass an aviation security bill now—I hope today—and get to conference, make the changes necessary, and get this bill to the President's desk.

This country needs this bill. The airline industry needs it. This economy needs it. It is much more than just this piece of legislation. It is about confidence. This economy and this country, and especially the airline industry at this point, desperately need that cushion of confidence that a number of steps, including this piece of legislation, will offer.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alaska.

AMENDMENT NO. 1863

Mr. MURKOWSKI. Mr. President, I now offer the amendment that I spoke of earlier in the afternoon, which would allow pilots under Part 121—who are now required to retire at the age of 60—to continue to pilot commercial airlines until the age of 63.

It is my intention, at the end of my statement, to ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment. My understanding is that the floor managers are reviewing the amendment.

If procedure allows, I would like to speak on the amendment at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's amendment is currently pending.

Mr. MURKOWSKI. I am sorry; I did not hear the Presiding Officer.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's amendment is currently pending.

Mr. MURKOWSKI. I thank the Chair.

Mr. President, earlier today I spoke of an amendment that I planned to offer that would repeal the Federal Aviation Administration's rule which requires pilots who fly under Part 121 to retire at the age of 60. This is a mandatory retirement.

It is kind of interesting to note that foreign airlines—Lufthansa, and others—allow pilots to fly beyond age 60; in some cases 65, in some cases longer.

Under the amendment, pilots in excellent health—and I mean subject to not just the regular physical exams which they have to undergo now to fly under age 60—but, as a consequence of extending this to age 63, would be allowed to continue to pilot commercial airlines. It would allow the FAA to require those pilots to undergo additional medical and cognitive testing for certification as well as establish standards for crew pairings.

I live in Alaska. I fly a great deal. To suggest that suddenly, when an experienced pilot reaches age 60, he or she is no longer fit to fly, flies in the face of age discrimination certainly. It flies in the face of the value that an experienced pilot has.

Some might suggest that this is not germane to aviation safety. Well, if anything is germane to aviation safety, it is an experienced pilot. How do you get experience? You get experience in aviation by flying, you gain experience in what to do during mechanical difficulties, you gain experience in what to do during weather difficulties. It is experience, Mr. President. And it is germane to this legislation, which is airline safety.

I do not want to fly, necessarily, in adverse weather, under IFR conditions, in an unpressurized aircraft in my State of Alaska without an experienced pilot.

The former Speaker of the House of Representatives, Hale Boggs, and the Representative for the State of Alaska in the House of Representatives, Nick Begich, were flying in adverse weather in an unpressurized aircraft. It was the largest aerial search ever undertaken. They have never found any remains, any evidence of where the aircraft crashed.

My point is, experience counts. This particular amendment is germane. This particular amendment has had a hearing in the Commerce Committee. The protections that we provide, by requiring commercial airline pilots to undergo additional medical and cognitive testing for certification covers the exposure.

As I look around this Chamber, with the exception of a few of our colleagues who happen to be in the candy drawer right now, virtually everyone is over 60 years old. Suddenly, at their 60th birthday, are they no longer fit to represent their constituents? They are certainly experienced. And this measure is applicable here.

There is an objection from the unions, and I recognize their objection, but it is a matter of retirement. That is an agreement between the unions and the airlines. What we are talking about is airline safety. We are talking about experience. You have a legitimate complaint about the unions wanting to move these pilots out, to make room for others.

But what we are doing in this country today is, we are calling our pilots back to the military because we have a crisis. We need them. For all practical purposes, we have a pilot shortage in this country.

The European airlines recognize reality. Experience counts. Experience counts in my State. This measure was subject to a full Commerce Committee hearing. It was voted out of committee by a majority in March of this year. We have had numerous studies sponsored by the FAA. None have ever produced concrete evidence that pilots over 60 years of age are a threat to the flying public. In fact, the studies have not even included pilots over 60. So where is this coming from?

Experience does count. If you are in good physical condition—you live longer; you take better care of yourself; you have a better health provider—what is wrong here? We have age discrimination against pilots who are 60 years old; you do not let them fly anymore. That is discrimination of the worst kind. If they can pass a physical, why not?

Advanced psychological and neurobehavioral testing methods do exist to test pilots of any age. More importantly, we have simulator training that can estimate the risk of any number of things—such as cardiac complaints as evidence shows that there is one event in more than 20 million hours of flight time. Sudden flight incapacitation is clearly less a threat to aviation safety than are mishaps due to inexperienced pilot error.

Let's go through the list of accidents. We recognize that most accidents associated with aviation in the area of qualifications under pilot error are due to inexperienced pilots, not experienced pilots. That can only come with time and age. That is why it is so important to recognize that when a pilot becomes 60 years of age, he or she should not be simply eliminated from commercial aviation.

The European countries recognize this and take experience into consideration and allow pilots to fly until the age of 65. My amendment would allow them to fly until age 63.

Medical science has vastly improved since 1959—improvements in diagnosis, which include early detection, prevention, health awareness, and diet. All of these factors have increased life expectancy since 1959.

Our airline pilots consistently demonstrate superior task performances across all age groups when compared to age-matched non-pilots. Pilots are subjected to comprehensive medical examinations every 6 months. In the 42 years since the rule was promulgated, there has not been any evidence that pilots over age 60 are not fully capable of handling their flight responsibilities.

As an example, pilots who flew in commuter operations were allowed to fly past the age of 60 until the end of 1999. This practice ended with the 1995 commuter rule. It mandated that any airline company which offered scheduled service using aircraft with nine or more seats had to fly under part 121 operations. However, this rule made special provisions to allow pilots who were then flying over 60 to continue to fly for 4 more years as pilots in command and allowed companies to continue to hire pilots 60 and older for 15 months. There were over 100 pilots over 60 years of age flying at that time. A study of 31 determined that they flew without a single accident or a single incident.

In 1999, 69 current and former airline captains organized and underwent extensive medical testing and petitioned the FAA to drop this antiquated mandatory retirement. They were tested by a panel of nationally and internationally recognized experts in the field of aerospace medicine, cardiology, internal medicine, geriatrics, and neuropsychological medicine. The panel determined that they were all qualified to perform airline captain and command duties beyond 60. Do you know what happened? The FAA denied their exemption request.

In supporting documents to their petition, they showed that the FAA had relaxed its medical requirements to allow pilots to fly with various medical problems, including hypertension, diabetes, alcoholism, spinal cord injury, defective vision, liberalized height and weight restrictions. They allowed that. It was an exemption. They were under 60. But if you were 60 and in good health, you couldn't fly the next day.

In the area of cardiovascular special issuances, the American Medical Association applauded the FAA as having demonstrated an understanding of the advances in diagnostic treatment and rehabilitation. So we have the American Medical Association applauding the FAA for allowing exemptions for those under 60, but if you are in perfect health and you are over 60, you can't fly.

In 1999, the FAA granted medical certificates to 6,072 airline pilots under the age of 60 who had sufficient medical pathology permitting them to operate as airline crewmen.

How does the FAA derive its medical consensus that it is safe for those pilots to continue to fly and not those who have been flying for 41 years without such medical pathology who happen to just arrive at the age of 60? It is rather interesting. You can go down to the FAA and see who is flying, who is giving check rides. Most of them are over 60 because they are exempt. Where is the logic in this, if the FAA can keep its pilots on over 60, have them checked out, then you have a regulation here that is absolutely inconsistent with reality?

Twenty-five countries belonging to the European Joint Aviation Authority raised the mandatory retirement age to 65, joining many Asian countries that increased the age to 63 or 65. I know of no evidence that those foreign pilots have a worse safety record than pilots under the age of 60.

The time has come for Congress to repeal the age restriction on commercial pilots. This is age discrimination. Years of medical and safety data have failed to support the position that the chronological age of 60 represents a passenger safety concern. Therefore, as long as a pilot can pass the rigorous medical exam, he or she should be allowed to fly.

We must, as a legislative body, eliminate age discrimination against pilots who can and should be flying our commercial aircraft.

To suggest that somehow this is not germane to this bill flies in the face of reality. This is an aviation safety bill. What is more basic to aviation safety than having experience? And how do you get experience? It comes with age, whether you like it or not.

I think it is time we end this age discrimination once and for all. We need experience in the cockpit. I know that I appreciate it when I am flying with a pilot who has seen more than a few thousand hours in the air as well as simulator time. We value the aspects certainly associated with life and maturing, but we should not be hypocritical in how we treat pilots.

I urge my colleagues to support the amendment and ask for the yeas and nays on the pending amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mrs. CLINTON). Is there a sufficient second?

There appears to be a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mrs. BOXER. Mr. President, only a month ago, our Nation faced a terrible tragedy. We learned loud and clear that we need to improve aviation security and safety, not decrease it, which is what this amendment would do. At a time that we need to protect the American public, Congress should not be decreasing safety standards. Even the FAA opposes this amendment because of safety concerns.

This amendment would eliminate the current rule that commercial pilot must retire at age 60. It was put into place to help ensure safety in the air. It should only be changed if research can prove the effects of aging do not impact a pilot's ability to fly a commercial jet at age 60.

The ''Age 60 Rule'' for retirement of airline pilots was implemented by the Federal Aviation Administration, FAA, based on safety concerns that medical evidence showed that as a group pilots begin to demonstrate the affects of aging around age 60.

Here is what the medical evidence of aging shows: there is a progressive deterioration of physiological and psychological functions and this increases more rapidly as people age; sudden incapacity from heart attacks or strokes become more frequent in any group reaching age 60; there is a the loss in ability to perform highly skilled tasks rapidly; it becomes harder to maintain physical stamina; it is more difficult to perform effectively in a complex and stressful environment and to apply experience, judgment and reasoning rapidly in new, changing and emergency situations; and, there is an increased difficulty to learn new techniques, skills and procedures.

While it is recognized that such losses generally start well before age 60, it determined that beyond age 59, the risks associated with these losses become unacceptable for pilots in airline operations.

Additionally, the Airline Pilots Association, the largest pilot union, does not support raising the mandatory retirement age. In fact, they oppose it.

Also, older pilots with seniority fly the largest, highest performance aircraft that carry the greatest number of passengers with the longest nonstop flights into the highest density air traffic. These are concerns as pilots age.

Additionally, a mandatory retirement age is not unique in the airline field. For example, air traffic controllers have a congressionally mandated retirement age of 56 years old.

Yes, I am sure that there are a few pilots who can fly past 60. But, our decision should be made to protect the safety of the American flying public.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nevada.

Mr. REID. Madam President, I know the good intentions of the Senator from Alaska. I have spoken to him on many occasions about this issue. There likely is a time and place for this amendment. It is not on this bill.

I move to table the amendment and ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second?

The screening of airport, air carrier, foreign air carrier, and airport concessionaire employees, and other nonpassengers with access to secure areas, shall be conducted in the same manner as passenger screenings are conducted, except that the Secretary may authorize alternative screening procedures for personnel engaged in providing airport or aviation security at an airport.''.

Mr. MCCAIN. Madam President, the first amendment requires background checks for existing aviation security employees over a time certain. The other one requires screening of all employees prior to entering the secure areas.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. HOLLINGS. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BIDEN. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BIDEN. I yield to my friend from Alaska for 1 minute without losing my right to the floor.

Mr. MURKOWSKI. Madam President, I share with Members the transcribed words of our President from a few moments ago in an open Cabinet meeting.

He urges the Senate to ''move a bill that will help Americans find work and also make it easier for all of us around this table to protect the security of this country. The less dependent we are on foreign sources of crude oil, the more secure we are at home.

''We spend a lot of time talking about homeland security. An integral piece of homeland security is energy independence. I ask the Senate to respond to the call to get an energy bill moving.''

Mr. BIDEN. Madam President, I was about to introduce, along with the Presiding Officer in the chair, the Senator from New York, as well as about 12 other colleagues, an amendment to this legislation for security needs for Amtrak. They are at a minimum of $1.8 billion. Just the six tunnels that go into New York City carry 350,000 people per day. They are antiquated, built around 1910, and need significant upgrading to protect the safety and security of the people traveling on those rails. I could go down the list. I will not, in the interest of time.

The managers of the bill have made an agreement with me and with the Presiding Officer and many others to do the following: We will withhold that amendment on this aviation safety bill. The chair and the ranking member of the Commerce Committee are going to attempt to mark up an Amtrak security bill and possibly a port security bill in their committee as early as next Tuesday. God willing and the creek not rising, as my grandfather would say, there is a possibility they will be able to report that to the floor sometime next week. I have spoken to the leadership on our side and have not had a chance to speak with the leadership on the Republican side. It is our hope to bring that bill up and vote on that piece of legislation.

In addition to that, I have had an opportunity to speak with the chairman of the Appropriations Committee and others who have indicated there would be an attempt as we deal with the appropriated money for this legislation we are about to pass, as well as other security needs, that Amtrak would be considered in that process. I particularly thank my friend from Arizona who is all for safety but not so much all for Amtrak. He has been very helpful here and has indicated if we are not able to get—I ask him to correct me if I am wrong—if for some reason we are prevented from getting the authorizing legislation up before the appropriators do their job, he will not object to the appropriators going forward, notwithstanding his long-held view, as I have as chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee, of not wanting the appropriators to do the work of the authorization committee.

I ask my friend, is that basically correct?

Mr. MCCAIN. No.

The Senator from Delaware is correct, but I would like to emphasize that we do have a safety and security problem with the railway system in America. It isn't just Amtrak; it is railway, railroad stations, it is railway centers and hubs all over America. So we need to take care of security and safety requirements so that people can ride on railroads just as we are attempting with this aviation legislation so that people can ride on airplanes in safety and security.

Yes, I am sorry to say, the Senator from Delaware is correct. I would support an appropriation for safety and security, but I certainly would, as usually has been my custom, resist the appropriations that would have to do with other matters, including additional track, rail, salary, pay, union, and almost anything that can ever be imagined is usually proposed on one of these bills.

I thank the Senator. I thank my dear friend from Delaware.

Mr. BIDEN. I think it is more appropriate to refer to this as rail safety. To give an example, the 350,000 people who go through the tunnels are not all on Amtrak trains. They are on the Long Island Railroad, they are on the New Jersey transit, using the Baltimore tunnel, for example, the Maryland transit, et cetera. It is rail safety. It is not just Amtrak. But Amtrak is responsible for the rail safety provisions of that. That is the reason I refer to it as Amtrak.

I thank Members on behalf of my 11 other colleagues. I see my colleague from Delaware, a former board member of Amtrak. I am delighted to yield to him for a few moments if he would like to make comments on why we are not moving forward.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Delaware.

Mr. CARPER. Madam President, I thank the senior Senator for yielding. To Senator BIDEN, to Senator MCCAIN, to Senator HOLLINGS, and others who have been part of getting us to this rather extraordinary compromise and position to go forward on the authorizing track and on the appropriations track as well: Well done.

Mario Cuomo, when he was Governor of New York, would talk about campaigning and governing. He used to say:

We campaign in poetry, we govern in prose.

Here in the Senate, here in Congress, we authorize in poetry, but we appropriate in prose.

As important as this authorization is, and it is important that we get the authorization for work on the tunnels, for work on having more security onboard our trains and in our stations, and I think some help in refurbishing some of the older rolling stock, locomotives and cars that are needed to carry the extra people who are riding the trains now, as important as the authorizing is, the appropriations is where the rubber hits the road.

I pledge to work with Senator BIDEN and Senator HOLLINGS and Senator MCCAIN and Senator HUTCHISON and others to make sure we get the work done, not just on the poetry side but the hard work on the prose side as well.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. DAYTON). The Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, let me affirm the exchange between the distinguished Senator from Delaware and our ranking member, the Senator from Arizona. The fact is, a railroad infrastructure enhancement bill was introduced today, with some 10 cosponsors. The reason I mention that is because we have been working long before September 11 on that need of the Nation.

With respect to stimulus, there is no better stimulus than construction, and there is no more needed construction than to refurbish the Amtrak line itself. Extend that: America needs high-speed rail.

Of course my distinguished colleague from Arizona, our ranking member, is disposed at the moment only for safety. We will call up the bill and we will mark up what we can, facilitate, if necessary, and try to separate perhaps a bill. But I hope to move next week in committee on this matter, as was indicated in our previous conversations, on Tuesday morning at 10 o'clock when we can get a quorum and mark that bill up and report authorization out here so we will not be confronted later on with obstacles. I think long before any passage of an authorization bill we are going to be hitting appropriations on the stimulus bill or some other bill because we need to immediately take care of safety and rail transportation.

The frustration of both Senators from Delaware is well understood. When we adjourned last year, we had everybody running around—Republican, Democrat, leader and plebeians like myself—saying: Oh, the first thing we are going to do next year, the first thing we are going to do is take up Amtrak. It is now October.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arizona.

Mr. MCCAIN. I hope my distinguished friend and colleague from South Carolina did not include me in that group.

Mr. HOLLINGS. No.

Mr. MCCAIN. I again thank the Senator from Delaware. I believe we can mark up a bill on Tuesday with the chairman's leadership. I think we also need to address seaport security as well. I believe seaport security is a very serious issue as well as rail security. I hope we will understand those are priority items that need to be addressed.

Senator HOLLINGS is far more knowledgeable than I am. But some of the information we have about the amount of cargo, the amount of shipping, the people and trafficking that goes in and out of the seaports in America is also a very important issue that we need to address.

Mr. HOLLINGS. I appreciate the Senator's leadership and support. Arizona obviously doesn't have very many seaports. But Senator GRAHAM of Florida and myself have been on this issue for at least 2 years. We have had all kinds of hearings long before September 11, and we have produced a seaport security bill that we have been trying to fashion because it is a many-splendored thing. You have to get the entities, namely the Port Authorities, to connect with the Customs, Drug Enforcement Administration, the Coast Guard, and the captain of the port, who really has legal authority and responsibility. We have to get them all working together rather than just moving, moving, moving cargo but actually having as a primary concern, safety and security.

We will be moving that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Delaware.

Mr. BIDEN. I will just take another second. I note the Senator from South Carolina said the distinguished Senator from Arizona doesn't have a port.

I am reminded when I first got here as a young Senator, I went to Senator Eastland, who I served under on the Judiciary Committee. Sitting in his office one day, as I often did, with Senator THURMOND, asking him anything a young kid, a 30-year-old Senator would ask, I asked: Who is the most powerful man you ever served with?

He said: Senator Kerr.

I said: Senator Kerr, Senator Kerr of Oklahoma?

He said: Yeah—in his southern drawl which I will not attempt to imitate on the floor as I often do off the floor.

He said: Who in the heck else could bring up the Gulf of Mexico in the middle of his State if he wasn't powerful?

I think, as the Senator's power continues to increase, he may bring the Pacific Ocean to Arizona, but I am not sure how he will do it.

Mr. MCCAIN. The most entertaining man I ever knew was Morris Udall, who often was heard saying: We in Arizona eagerly await the next earthquake so Arizona would be a coastal State.

That is not as amusing as it was once, since there was one out there. But perhaps the Port of Yuma will still be a place the Senator from Delaware can help us with.

In case our colleagues are wondering what we are doing, we are hoping to resolve one remaining issue before final passage. Negotiations are going on as we speak so we would be able to move to final passage. We hope within minutes that we will have that issue resolved.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. HOLLINGS. This amendment is a technical amendment, a final wrapup, change of the ands and ifs and buts and what have you. It has nothing to do with the substance but to conform various technicalities in the other amendments that we agreed upon in the course of consideration of this particular bill.

I urge its adoption.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection the amendment is agreed to.

The amendment (No. 1895) was agreed to.

Mr. HOLLINGS. I move to reconsider the vote.

Mr. MCCAIN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that following disposition of the Warner amendment no further amendments be considered, and that we go to third reading and final passage.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I have to object. I know how hard the Senator worked on this, but I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. MCCAIN. And that then the Senate will move to third reading and final passage.

Mr. REID. Yes. That goes without saying, Mr. President. As soon as we finish these, we move to third reading and final passage.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Senator from Virginia.

AMENDMENT NO. 1896

Mr. WARNER. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk on behalf of myself and Senator ALLEN and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the amendment.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Virginia [Mr. WARNER], for himself and Mr. ALLEN, proposes an amendment numbered 1896.

Mr. WARNER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

(Purpose: To provide payment for losses incurred by the Metropolitan Washington Airports Authority and businesses at Ronald Reagan Washington National Airport for limitations on the use of the airport after the September 11, 2001, terrorist attacks)

At the appropriate place, insert the following:

SEC. ___. PAYMENT FOR LOSSES RESULTING FROM LIMITATIONS ON USE OF RONALD REAGAN WASHINGTON NATIONAL AIRPORT FOLLOWING TERRORIST ATTACKS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Notwithstanding any other provision of law, of the amounts appropriated or otherwise made available immediately by the 2001 Emergency Supplemental Appropriations Act for Recovery from and Response to Terrorist Attacks on the United States (Public Law 107–38) that are available for obligation, $65,648,183 shall be available to the Secretary of Transportation for payment to the Metropolitan Washington Airports Authority (MWAA) and concessionaires at Ronald Reagan Washington National Airport for losses resulting from the closure, and subsequent limitations on use, of the airport following the September 11, 2001, terrorist attacks and subsequent reopening of other United States airports after September 13, 2001.

(b) ALLOCATION OF FUNDS.—The amount available under subsection (a) shall be allocated as follows:

(1) $37,816,093 shall be available for payment for losses of the Metropolitan Washington Airports Authority that occurred as a result of the closure of Ronald Reagan Washington National Airport after September 13, 2001.

(2) $27,832,090 shall be available for payment for losses of concessionaires at Ronald Reagan Washington National Airport that occurred as a result of the closure of Ronald Reagan Washington National Airport after September 13, 2001.

(c) APPLICATION.—A concessionaire at Ronald Reagan Washington National Airport seeking payment under this section for losses described in subsection (a) shall submit to the Secretary an application for payment in such form and containing such information as the Secretary shall require. The application shall, at a minimum, substantiate the losses incurred by the concessionaire described in subsection (a).

Mr. WARNER. Mr. President, my colleague from the State of Virginia and I do this on behalf of the Metropolitan Washington Airports Authority. It is all very clear to each and every one of us in the Senate that for reasons which are justifiable—because of security considerations—this airport had to be closed the longest of all. As a consequence, the Airports Authority has an extensive financial package that has been in place for several years. The ability to gain revenue to service that package has been taken away from it.

We have a number of small businesses and others associated with conducting, in the physical plant, the airport itself, their business activities; they have suffered just irreparable injury. We all know that. And we all want to help. There are various ways by which this can be done.

I am prepared to hear from the distinguished manager, who I believe will be speaking on behalf of the leadership, about how this serious financial situation at this particular airport—mind you, all other airports were able to open shortly afterwards. I am not quarreling at all with the justification for closing it, but this one remained closed, and also it is functioning at somewhere between 15 and 25 percent of flight capacity as of now. The projections are, as we go to additional phases, that capacity will be increased, but we have no assurance at what point we reach 50 percent, 60 percent, and are able to gain the revenue to service the necessary financial requirements.

So if I might, for the moment, yield the floor in hopes that the managers, who have been very helpful to me and to others on this question, will address this issue. I would be happy to consider that before proceeding.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arizona.

Mr. MCCAIN. Mr. President, I say to the Senator from Virginia, I appreciate his cooperation on this issue, particularly his appreciation of the fact that this is an airport/airline security bill, and the issue, as compelling as it is, that the Senator from Virginia raises is related to the compensation—well-deserved compensation—of the people who live and work at National Airport and who, because of an order of the Federal Government, have been deeply harmed economically and, unfortunately, in other ways as well.

So I appreciate the sensitivity of the Senator from Virginia to the parameters of this bill. The distinguished chairman and I have had to turn back a number of amendments because they were not related—liability, and a number of others—to airport security.

But that does not change the fact that there is still a compelling problem out there. It is an issue that must be addressed. I believe the stimulus package is a place where it would be very appropriate. I do not think anyone who is aware of what happened at National Airport—a 3-week shutdown by direct order of the Federal Government—does not realize that we have some responsibility. The size of that responsibility, and how, I think can be the subject of negotiations and discussion with the administration, the Finance Committee, members of the Appropriations Committee, et cetera.

But I do not know of a Member of this body who isn't totally sympathetic and appreciative of the leadership of the Senator from Virginia—in fact, both Senators from Virginia—in their commitment on this issue. Since this has happened, I know both Senators have made it their highest priority to address this issue, so that these people who are innocent—innocent of any wrongdoing, and are victims in a very real way of a terrorist attack on America, and who need to receive compensation—receive compensation and help.

I am very grateful for your leadership, as I am sure the people in the northern part of Virginia are very appreciative of the Senators' efforts.

So I would like to join with all of my colleagues in saying we want to help, we want to assist, and we think there are ways that must be implemented—not later, but sooner rather than later—to address this compelling problem.

I thank the Senator from Virginia and yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, if the distinguished Senator from Virginia will yield, not only as chairman of the Commerce Committee but also as a former member of the Metropolitan Washington Airports Authority, I was vitally interested in the whys and wherefores of holding back Reagan National Airport.

We had the Secretary of Transportation 2 days after this particular tragic event. We were allowing, say, Dulles, and other airports, to function. There was no reason, once we secured the cockpit—I realize you had the general security problems—but once you secured that cockpit—and Boeing said they could retrofit immediately sufficient planes to be landing and taking off at Reagan National—that we at least ought to start back the shuttles to New York and then on to Boston.

So I have been down the path of the Senator from Virginia on this particular score. I endorse his idea 100 percent. It is just that kind of situation on airport security. As you know, the junior Senator, Mr. ALLEN, has been vitally interested in it. He is a member of our committee. He and I have been working on this particular bill, moving as much as we possibly can.

So in any way I can possibly promise you that you will have my support on the amounts, and everything else of that kind, I would be glad to help.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Virginia.

Mr. WARNER. Mr. President, those are very reassuring comments from my two long-time friends and associates here in the Senate, colleagues I trust and colleagues who, when they make commitments, follow through.

Given that, and the fact that you have entertained the petitions of other Senators with respect to facilities in their States——

Mr. HOLLINGS. Right.

Mr. WARNER. And that there has been a uniform practice here between the chairman and the distinguished ranking member as to how to deal with those amendments, I am prepared, at this time, to withdraw the amendment, with those assurances that at the stimulus package juncture, this body will study that.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Very definitely we will be supporting that on the stimulus package, or some other bill that comes up that is appropriate and germane.

Mr. WARNER. I thank the Senator.

AMENDMENT NO. 1896 WITHDRAWN

Mr. President, at this time I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be withdrawn.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment is withdrawn.

The Senator from Arizona.

AMENDMENT NO. 1897

Mr. MCCAIN. Mr. President, I believe we have one Jeffords amendment to which we have agreed. I send it to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the amendment.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Arizona [Mr. MCCAIN], for Mr. JEFFORDS, proposes an amendment numbered 1897.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

(Purpose: To give retired pilots the same preference as law enforcement officers to be air marshals)

In amendment No. 1858, on page 1, line 8, insert ''or an individual discharged or furloughed from commercial airline cockpit crew position'' after ''age,''.

Mr. MCCAIN. Mr. President, the amendment is going to give pilots the same preference as law enforcement officers to be air marshals. I think it is a good amendment. I think many of our pilots, including those who are required to retire at age 60, would make excellent air marshals. This amendment would give them the same preference as law enforcements officers. I think it is a good amendment.

I urge adoption of the amendment.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, we support the amendment on this side. It has been cleared. I urge its adoption.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

The amendment (No. 1897) was agreed to.

Mr. MCCAIN. I move to reconsider the vote.

Mr. HOLLINGS. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

AIR MARSHALS FUNDING

Mrs. FEINSTEIN. Mr. President, I am concerned that the $2.50 user fee in this bill is not sufficient to provide all of the air marshals we need. The $2.50 user fee would only provide between $1.3 billion and $1.7 billion annually, in my opinion, enough to fund Federal security screeners at our airports, but not enough to provide additional air marshals.

Today, I intended to offer an amendment to give the Secretary of Transportation discretion to raise this fee to $5, which would raise over $3 billion annually to devote to aviation safety.

To ensure that the bill on the Floor passes quickly and we provide increased aviation security as soon as possible, I have decided not to proceed with my amendment. I still believe, however, that people are willing to pay more to feel safe on airplanes and the more air marshals we have, the better.

I want to thank the Members of the Commerce Committee for their hard work on this bill, and especially the Chairman and Ranking Member of the Committee, Senator HOLLINGS and Senator MCCAIN.

Mr. MCCAIN. Thank you Senator FEINSTEIN. I too am concerned about airline safety and want to be sure we have provided enough funding for marshals. The Senator from California has my full assurance that if more air marshals are needed, I will support providing more funding to the Department of Transportation and the Federal Aviation Administration to accomplish that goal.

Mr. HOLLINGS. I too am in agreement with the Senator from Arizona and stand with him in support of funding the needed air marshal program.

AIRLINES HONORING AIRLINE TICKETS

Mr. BAYH. Mr. President, because of the events of September 11, tens of thousands of airline passengers who bought airline tickets before and after that date will find that the flight they wanted is unavailable. How do these ticket holders get another flight or get their money back?

If they paid cash for their tickets, then, they are out of luck if the airline goes bankrupt. There is no guarantee that another airline will honor the ticket.

If they bought their ticket using a credit card, then as I understand it, Federal law protects them, but at a tremendous cost to those few banks who process airline tickets. The ticket holder has the right under Federal law, the Truth in Lending Act and Regulation Z, to seek a refund from their credit card issuing bank. If the airline is unable to cover such charge-backs, the loss is borne by the acquiring or processing bank. The burden on the banking system as a result of the events of September 11, and the requirements of Regulation Z, is not small. About $5 billion of advanced ticket sales by credit card exist at any given time. I doubt that anyone anticipated that Regulation Z would be used in this manner after an act of war shut down the entire air transportation system and caused the failure of perhaps several airlines.

There is a simple and equitable way to protect these passengers who paid cash and have no recourse. It can also relieve some of the burden that the law puts on a very few banks. I have a letter from Consumers Union that proposes the solution. It says, ''Consumers Union believes that carriers that receive federal funds under H.R. 2926 should be obligated to honor the tickets of other carriers, where due to service changes or discontinuation, the issuing carrier is unable to provide the contracted service.''

In short, if an airline has empty seats, then let the passengers who would otherwise be denied service use those seats.

I intended to offer an amendment to this effect. Instead, I would ask the distinguished floor manager a question.

Does he agree that in light of the aid this Congress has provided to the airlines, it is not too much to ask them to honor, to the extent practicable, the tickets of other carriers that are unable to provide the contracted service?

Mr. HOLLINGS. I think that is entirely reasonable. This could be done by regulation or even by an explicit gentleman's agreement from the airlines. I do not think it is too much to ask.

Mr. INOUYE. Mr. President, I am pleased that the Administration has taken the first step toward an important safety initiative by limiting carry-on bags to one bag plus one personal item such as a purse or a briefcase.

In this context, I would like to mention a special issue that has arisen concerning the safety procedures we promulgate, and the impact they might have on the practice of many musicians and musical artists carrying their instruments with them. I know that many of us have heard from the American Federation of Musicians, ASCAP, the Music Educators National Conference, the National Association of Music Education, and the Recording Industry Association of America, among others, about this issue. These organizations have expressed concerns, in light of recent security enhancements, about the ability of their members to continue carrying musical instruments aboard airplanes.

Rules promulgated by the Federal Government or by air carriers that would prohibit musicians from traveling with instruments in-cabin would, among other things, severely limit the ability of orchestras to present guest artists, audition musicians, and tour within the United States and internationally, and put at risk valuable, historical musical instruments. Limitations on carry-on bags should not put an undue burden on musicians, consistent with the requirements of safety. I am certain we can make it clear to those charged with the detailed administration of air safety policies that there is obviously a rule of reason and practicality to be observed.

Mr. BAUCUS. Mr. President, I rise today to commend Senators HOLLINGS and MCCAIN for this much awaited, much needed piece of legislation and to urge my colleagues to help pass it.

It is critical to our Nation's economy that we restore the flying public's confidence in the safety of the aviation system. We need to get more planes in the air and we need to make sure they are full. Legislation that improves and expands security at our airports and on planes is essential to getting citizens back in the air.

While it is safer to fly today than it ever has been before, this package, which improves our Nation's aviation security, shows that the Senate is making an aggressive and firm commitment to America's aviation security and America's economy.

Two weeks ago I was on a flight from Montana back to Washington. By chance, I sat next to a gentleman who I appointed to the Air Force Academy in Colorado Springs 20 years ago. He was an F–16 fighter pilot. And is now a commercial airline pilot.

In the wake of the tragic events of September 11, he had a bunch of ideas to increase security on airplanes and airports. I asked him to write his ideas down. He found a scrap of paper and jotted them down. This is the paper he gave me. I am so pleased to see many of his ideas in S. 1447.

From Federal marshals on domestic flights to protecting our pilots in the cockpit. From vastly improving airport security measures to better screening of airport employees, this legislation takes a giant step forward in securing our flying public.

And securing our flying public is a giant step closer to securing our economy.

I would like to specifically address three items in the bill that I believe are of vital importance:

First, as chairman of the Finance Committee, I am pleased to say that there is no ticket tax levied on airline passengers. I don't believe that this is the time to raise taxes. In my State of Montana, people believe they pay enough to fly around the country. Since we are relieving the airlines of their security responsibilities, it makes perfect sense that the $2.50 per passenger user fee be assessed to the airlines, not the passengers.

Second, I am pleased to see a temporary expansion of the Airport Improvement Program and Passenger Facility Charge funds for use on security operations. This flexibility will surely help defray some of the costs for smaller airports.

I have been hearing from many airports back home. They are desperate for financial relief. These small, rural airports are faced with significant increased costs in order to comply with new FAA security standards. These new costs alone would be enough to tap their already paltry resources. However, like all airports around the country they are also facing declining revenues including landing fees, parking lot fees, car rental fees, bars and restaurants and gift shop fees. We need to help them, just like we helped the airlines.

I enthusiastically supported the airline relief package Congress passed 2 weeks ago. We needed to assist the airlines for the good of our traveling public and the good of our economy.

But relief to the airlines won't do anyone any good, if they don't have airports to land in. We are in danger of many of our airports closing their doors and their gates and their runways because they are out of money.

The flexibility provided in this bill will make a real dent in the airport's economic situation.

Third, I am also pleased to see a reimbursement program for these airports for completed security-related projects. This program, along with the AIP/PFC flexibility are extremely helpful, but are only a temporary life preserver for the airports. Discussions need to continue about how we can really save them from drowning.

I would like to close by once again commending the work done on this bill by both staff and Senators and to urge my colleagues to vote in favor of S. 1447. The public needs it and our economy needs it. Folks at home will thank you for it.

Ms. SNOWE. Mr. President, I rise today in support of the legislation before the Senate which is designed to overhaul aviation security in this Nation.

This is an issue of vital national importance during these dark days in America's history, and as a member of the Senate Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation, I believe it is critical that we pass the strongest possible enhancements to our existing system and do so as soon as possible.

The fact of the matter is, the images of the unspeakable horrors of September 11, 2001, will be etched in our minds forever. When the ''devil incarnate'' hit the United States, he attacked not only America, but freedom-loving nations everywhere. We are going to need the resources of the United States coupled with the cooperation of our global neighbors in order to wage this fight against terrorism. For it is a fight we must win, and will win.

But there should be no mistake, victory will not come overnight. We are here today debating this bill because, as we mourn the tremendous loss of life both of those in the air and on the ground, we also know that our transportation system must endure and must be secure if we are to move the Nation forward.

We must leave no stone unturned in the effort to preserve this Nation's transportation infrastructure, so that we might both carry on the business of the Nation and ensure our continued economic viability, and also ensure that we are in a position of strength to be able to wage the kind of war necessary to eradicate terrorism. And, we cannot remain strong if we cannot remain mobile.

Specifically, we are here today to improve our aviation security infrastructure and policies, to instill the kind of confidence that is vital to the health of our country's commercial airline industry. Clearly, our way of life, our freedom to travel and do so with relatively minimal encroachment, was used against us in the most horrific way imaginable. And it is vital that we take the necessary steps now to prevent such catastrophes from recurring.

The debate on this legislation is so critical because aviation security will only be addressed with a comprehensive, exhaustive approach that recognizes we are dealing with interlocking rings of issues, from perimeter security to on-site airport security to on-board aircraft security to a range of other issues, and that the entire aviation security system is only as strong as the weakest ring.

That is why I have cosponsored Senator HOLLINGS's comprehensive legislation to improve aviation security. This bipartisan legislation takes critical steps to safeguard the security of our airports and aircraft. It includes provisions to strengthen cockpit doors, increase the number of sky marshals, which is a critical issue also addressed in Senator HUTCHISON's bill, S. 1421, of which I am a cosponsor, to increase the number of sky marshals, federalize security, and improve training and testing for screening personnel.

Federalizing security, in particular, is an issue I feel very strongly about. The fact of the matter is, if the flying public does not have confidence in airport security, they will remain reluctant to fly, and this will have severe long-term repercussions in the aviation sector and in our economy. Imposing stringent Federal control and oversight over airport security will go a long way to helping instill confidence in the flying public, and will enable the government to exercise much greater control over the quality of screening.

This is a problem that was identified long ago. In September 1996, the White House Commission on Aviation Safety and Security recommended that FAA was, in fact, poised, at the time of the terrorist attacks, to issue a final rule, as directed by Congress last year in the Airport Security Improvement Act of 2000, establishing training requirements for screeners and requiring screening companies to be certified.

And in its January 18, 2001, Top DOT Management Challenges Report, the Department of Transportation Inspector General noted that, to close this critical gap in security, the Government ''. . . needs to have a means to measure screener performance, and methods of providing initial and recurrent screener training as well as ensuring that the screeners maintain their proficiency through actual experience with the machines in the airport environment.'' The IG also concluded that the ''. . . FAA must complete deployment of equipment that will help in the testing and training of screeners.''

Quite frankly, I am not convinced that we can ever have full confidence in our airport security without stringent Federal controls, which is why it is vital we resolve the issue of federalization once and for all.

In addition to addressing the issue of airport security, the Hollings legislation:

Establishes a Deputy Administrator within the U.S. DOT for Transportation Security,

Establishes an Aviation Security Council, comprised of representatives from FAA, DOJ, DOD, and the CIA to coordinate national security, intelligence, and aviation security information and make recommendations;

Stipulates hijack training for flight crews;

Requires background checks on students at flight schools; and Increases perimeter security.

I would note I am particularly pleased that the legislation before us includes my amendment directing a new Deputy Secretary for Transportation Security within U.S. DOT, which is established in the underlying bill, to focus on the critical mission of better coordinating all modes of transportation nationwide during a national emergency, such as the tragic events that unfolded on September 11. And I thank Senators HOLLINGS and MCCAIN, in particular, for working with me and for their support on this important issue.

I am also very pleased that the Hollings bill addresses the issue of background checks on students at flight schools. On September 21, I introduced legislation, S. 1455, to regulate the training of aliens to operate certain aircraft. Under S. 1455, background checks would be required before any alien would be permitted to receive jet flight training.

I also commend the President for his leadership. The President's proposal addresses many of the same core issues. His air travel security plan would expand the sky marshal program. It urges Governors to deploy the National Guard at Federal expense at all commercial airports. It would provide oversight and control of airport screening by the Federal Government. And it would provide $500 million to help airlines fortify cockpit doors, install surveillance cameras and install aircraft tracking devices that cannot be turned off.

Under the President's plan, contractors would continue to perform screening. The Federal Government would set standards, supervise operations, conduct background checks and training, purchase and maintain equipment, and oversee airport access control.

I believe the administration's proposal would be a major step in the right direction. And I understand that some have concerns that federalizing the screener workforce could make it difficult to remove employees who are not performing their important duties.

It is my hope and my expectation that we will find common ground on this point while coming together to ensure that Americans have complete confidence in the men and women who form the last line of defense when it comes to preventing weapons from getting on our aircraft. And I am very pleased that S. 1447 includes provisions to exert federal control over security screening once and for all.

One way or the other, this issue must be worked out so there is no doubt about the quality of this critical workforce, this has got to happen if we are to restore the American public's confidence in flying and, by extension, the health of America's commercial airline industry. At the end of the day, we must have a screening system with stringent Federal controls and oversight, so that the government will control hiring standards, compensation, training, and re-training. We need a reliable, professional force of screeners.

We must move heaven and earth to make flying safe. That is our mission here today. One national poll, CNN/USA Today/Gallup, found that 43 percent of Americans are less willing to fly, with the majority of their concerns centering on the adequacy of airport security. They are also willing to sacrifice convenience for safety, with the same poll finding widespread support for new measures, even if it means checking in two to three hours before a flight, or paying more to cover the increased security costs.

The failure to correct the existing deficiencies in the aviation security system has already cost us dearly, and we no longer have the luxury to postpone action. Accordingly, we must pass this bill now.

It is critical that we come together, as we did on a resolution supporting the use of force to combat terrorism, as we did on legislation providing emergency funding for the recovery and relief effort after the tragic attacks of September 11, as we did on a financial relief package for the airline industry, and pass legislation promptly to address the gaps in aviation security and restore the confidence of the American people in our aviation system.

Mr. SHELBY. Mr. President, I rise to make a few comments and observations about the September 11 attacks and about some of the aviation security issues facing the Senate in the pending legislation.

To put these issues in perspective, I'd like to recall the extraordinary actions of the passengers on United Flight 93 on September 11, the ill-fated flight that crashed in Pennsylvania. In the ultimate act of self-sacrifice and heroism, a group of passengers rushed the cockpit and thwarted the terrorists aboard that flight from inflicting additional damage and loss on this great Nation.

Without doubt, those fathers, mothers, husbands, and wives, patriots one and all, saved the lives of hundreds of Americans wherever that aircraft was targeted. They understood what was happening, that they would probably never again see their loved ones, but they acted heroically and, in sacrificing their own lives and dreams, probably saved the lives of hundreds of their fellow citizens.

This Nation, and perhaps this Congress on an even more personal level, owes them a debt of honor and gratitude that is hard to articulate.

They deserve our recognition and our commitment that we will meet, address, and repel the threat that forced them to pay so great a price.

They were among the many Americans in New York, Virginia, Pennsylvania, and around the Nation who acted courageously during and in the aftermath of the terrorist attack on September 11. They brought honor to all who love this country and what it represents, they are what America is all about.

These were not warriors or law enforcement officials. You might say that they were neighbors, members of parishes, or people we might meet in our grocery stores. They were just ''average'' Americans. And the world should wonder and our enemies should tremble at their mettle.

As devastating as the heinous act of September 11 was, and as incalculable as the pain, disruption, and loss inflicted upon the victims at the World Trade Center, the Pentagon, and onboard the four hijacked United and American flights was, America and our very way of life we cherish will endure.

No one can make right the loss that the families, the coworkers, the friends and loved ones of the victims suffered because of these despicable acts. I know that all of us here in the Senate and across this great Nation continue to reflect and pray every day for the aggrieved and the fallen.

We must take every step to assure the Nation that this tragedy cannot be repeated. That is a tall order. I commend to your attention the comments made by the pilot of United Flight 564 on Saturday, September 15 to the passengers aboard that flight after the door closed and as they prepared to depart from Denver International Airport. He is reported to have said:

I want to thank you brave folks for coming out today. We don't have any new instructions from the Federal government, so from now on we're on our own.

He continued:

Sometimes a potential hijacker will announce that he has a bomb. There are no bombs on this aircraft and if someone were to get up and make that claim, don't believe him.

If someone were to stand up, brandish something such as a plastic knife and say ''This is a hijacking'' or words to that effect, here is what you should do: Every one of you should stand up and immediately throw things at that person, pillows, books, magazines, eyeglasses, shoes, anything that will throw him off balance and distract his attention.

If he has a confederate or two, do the same with them. Most important: get a blanket over him, then wrestle him to the floor and keep him there. We'll land the plane at the nearest airport and the authorities will take it from there.

Remember, there will be one of him and maybe a few confederates, but there are 200 of you. You can overwhelm them.

The Declaration of Independence says, ''We, the people . . .'' and that's just what it is when we're up in the air: we, the people, vs. would-be terrorists. I don't think we are going to have any such problem today or tomorrow or for a while, but some time down the road, it is going to happen again and I want you to know what to do.

Now, since we're a family for the next few hours, I'll ask you to turn to the person next to you, introduce yourself, tell them a little about yourself and ask them to do the same.

That pilot's guidance is serious—but these are serious times. Americans are a people who empower themselves to do great things. Clearly, the actions of the passengers and the crew on the American airlines flight earlier this week illustrate that the flying public, the pilots and the crews are willing and committed to maintaining the safety and security of our airways.

We should not delude ourselves into thinking that simple pronouncements from the FAA, with all due respect, or tweaking the Federal Aviation Regulations, will allow us to sleep comfortably on transcontinental flights.

It is all of our responsibility to ensure the safety of our airways. The passengers aboard United Flight 93 knew that instinctively, the pilot on the United flight out of Denver merely reminds us of it.

Accordingly, as we review and reform our safety and security procedures, we must ask a simple question: would the actions and initiatives we propose to undertake have prevented the recent terrorist attacks and will they prevent future acts. Unfortunately, I'm concerned that the bill as currently drafted may fall short of meeting that standard.

Our actions must be meaningful, effective, and they must restore the confidence of the American public in the integrity and safety of our transportation systems.

If there ever were a time for bold and aggressive steps to improve the safety of our transportation systems, now is that time. I believe, no, I know, that this Congress and the American people will accept and embrace meaningful steps toward that end.

We only need look at the full measure of sacrifice made by the passengers aboard United Flight 93 to know the depths of our responsibility and I am heartened by the fact that I know that same spirit is aboard every plane in the sky.

I believe that it all starts with our intelligence capability, we have to have the best possible intelligence about potential or imminent threats in order to constantly focus and modify security procedures and efforts. Intelligence is the first line of offense in our war against terrorism.

The principle that should guide us is that through human scrutiny and technological screening, we should put passengers through sufficient security procedures to identify potential threats;

For the passenger, that might mean answering computer generated and tailored questions at the ticket counter which might be followed by interviews with security personnel; passage through a metal detector which might be followed by a thorough physical search of carry-on baggage, and perhaps passage through another magnetometer or wanding before boarding the aircraft.

For checked baggage, that should mean passage through various and increasingly sophisticated explosive detection systems followed by thorough physical search for any bag that requires further scrutiny, there should also be random physical searches for all bags to improve proficiency and to raise the security penetration.

In addition, we should accelerate our research into emerging technologies to improve our ability to detect weapons carried by people or explosives secreted away in baggage. We also may need to consider stronger limitations on both hand carried and checked bags.

For the aircraft, that should mean armed air marshals on flights and hardening the cockpit door, as Delta Airlines has already begun, revising access procedures to the cockpit, and increasing the security training of pilots and crews, including allowing pilots the option of defending themselves.

We should require background checks of everyone who has access to the aircraft: whether pilots, crew, ground personnel, baggage handlers, caterers, and other contract personnel, with regular and periodic reviews.

For the airport, it entails a more substantial armed police force, conspicuously and constantly present in the public areas and concourses. In addition, we need to improve the airport access procedures and technologies to make sure that people are where they are supposed to be and not in places that could present a threat to the aircraft or passengers.

Simply put, we need to expeditiously pursue security technologies and procedures at airport access points that cannot be defeated by even well organized and clever terrorists.

And so, we come full circle back to intelligence, without a robust and aggressive intelligence effort that is constantly questioning where, how, and who may plan the next attack, our security measure will not evolve to meet the challenge. Unfortunately, if that is the case, we're merely waiting for the next attack.

Clearly, we must approach airline, airport, and aircraft security issues in complementary and overlapping ways to establish a security ''net'' around our aviation system. What do I mean by a ''net?'' If we are suspicious about a bag or a passenger, that information is relayed and additional, more extensive security measure like I've described would be employed.

The increased tempo and breadth of security operations pose dramatic cost increases for airlines and airports and for the Federal Government. I note that the legislation before the Senate contains an authorization to reimburse airports for the direct costs of increased law enforcement requirements mandated by the FAA.

I think this is a legitimate and reasonable approach. The Federal Government should not place unfunded Federal mandates on our airports or any other unit of local government.

Clearly, the FAA mandated security directive requiring airports to increase the law enforcement presence is necessary. I intend to work with my colleagues on the appropriations committee to provide funding to help defray these costs and I commend the authorizing committee for providing that authorization in this bill.

However, notwithstanding that there are some useful provisions in this bill, I'm concerned that this legislation and this debate has gotten bogged down about whether we should ''federalize'' the aviation screening functions. I doubt that ''federalizing'' is the panacea that some would have you believe.

For some, it is an instinctive response to turn to the Federal Government in the wake of a crisis without ever questioning if it is the responsible action to take or if the federal bureaucracy will be any better. So, ''federalization'' may be a bad idea whose time has come.

We're missing the point if we misinterpret the mandate from the American people to improve aviation security with a public desire that the people searching our bags or manning the security checkpoint must be receive a paycheck from the U.S. Treasury.

Keep in mind, the weapons that the terrorists carried on the aircraft were legal to carry on the aircraft. What failed was intelligence, our response time, and the lack of security on board the aircraft. Let's fix those things. Until September 11, it was legal to take a 4-inch knife on board an aircraft, and metal knives were commonplace in first class meal service.

The price tag for full Federal assumption of airport security is not small, in excess of $2 billion annually and that cost will only rise. And that's forever.

We must weigh that commitment of taxpayer dollars against whether it would result in either improved security, or the perception of improved security. There are a lot of things that the Federal Government does well, I would argue that this is not one of them.

Let's not mislead the public into interpreting ''federalization'' to mean that baggage screening is going to be conducted by law enforcement officers.

Not even the supporters of full federalization are contemplating having Federal law enforcement officers search passengers or carry-on baggage.

In a federalized world, the metal detectors and bag searches would be conducted by Federal bureaucrats. I don't think that over time, the American taxpayer is going to look at a bureaucrat bag screener and say, ''I feel safer because a Federal employee is checking my bags.''

Remember, the money we spend on replacing private sector employees with government bureaucrats means we will have that much less money for other security improvements, and we're talking about hiring as many as 30,000 new Federal employees. That's three Army divisions.

I'm also concerned about the concept of a two-tier airport security construct. Some have advocated that we ''federalize'' at the largest airports while not ''federalizing'' at other smaller airports. That logic is inconsistent with its proponents' other flawed reasoning that security will somehow be magically improved and tightened by virtue of ''federalization.''

The simple fact is we must improve aviation security at all airports. We cannot have weaker points and stronger points in the system. Instead, we must tailor our security architecture to stop terrorists no matter where they attempt to get into the system.

Further, I fail to see how creating a new Deputy Administrator at the FAA or a new Deputy or Assistant Secretary at the Department of Transportation moves the aviation security ball down the field.

Since both the past administration and this administration have had such difficulty in filling the Deputy Administrator of the FAA position, I'm concerned that we're unnecessarily confusing and complicating the Federal bureaucracy.

I can't remember a case where an additional layer of bureaucracy led to the swift, decisive leadership I believe is necessary, especially in regards to safety and security. I'm also not certain that either the DOT or the FAA are the only, or the best place, for any new security function to reside.

I would hope that the relevant committees of jurisdiction would explore whether these responsibilities wouldn't be better executed at the Department of Justice, the Department of the Treasury, or in the new Office of Homeland Security.

Personally, I believe that the President got it right in his proposal. The Federal Government would assume management and oversight of the security function. It is imperative that we have standards for personnel, background checks, and training, as the President proposed, to improve the security net.

That is the appropriate role of the Federal Government. I'm disappointed that the bill before us today seems to be taking this issue in a different direction.

When we addressed the imminent financial crisis facing the airline industry 2 weeks ago, we acted expeditiously to restore the confidence of the financial markets that Congress and the administration had confidence in the future of air travel in America.

Congress and the administration must move expeditiously, but deliberately, to augment the interim security procedures already instituted by the Administration. This is not a one time infusion of capital or liquidity as was necessary in the Airline Stabilization legislation.

Make no mistake, we must get this done and get it right before the end of this Congress. Taking a few more weeks as this bill moves through conference will not shake the confidence of the American public.

The American people will live with our decisions on aviation security for a long time. It is critical that we address the problems in the system without rushing to judgment. If we act precipitously we run the risk of failing to address security in a thoughtful and comprehensive fashion, and, we may well lose the opportunity to make the meaningful improvements that are essential to provide a system worthy of the American public's confidence.

In the extreme, we run the risk of perpetrating a fraud on the American public by misleading them into a false sense of comfort that we have met the security challenge in this bill.

Congress has time to get this right. This is a complicated and crucial issue and we should take the time to get it right. The administration has taken the interim steps to restore public confidence and to bolster security at airports; our actions should augment and complement those steps, not quibble over organization charts and who mans the security checkpoints.

Clearly, the airlines, the airports, and pilots, such as the United Airline captain I quoted earlier, are taking responsible and meaningful steps to improve safety and security. We should follow their example.

Mr. FEINGOLD. Mr. President, I am pleased that the Senate will pass the Aviation Security Act. This bill will help restore our Nation's confidence in commercial aviation by boosting the security in our skies and our airports. The strengthening of cockpit doors and the deployment of sky marshals, among other security measures in this bill, are meaningful and worthwhile steps in making air travel safer.

This bill also includes a safety provision based on a bill I recently introduced. The idea is from a couple of Wisconsinites. When I held one of my listening sessions following the vicious attacks on September 11, Fire Chief James Reseburg and Deputy Police Chief Charles Tubbs of Beloit, WI, suggested an idea that they thought would help make our skies safer. Part of their idea was to create a registration system through which law enforcement officials, firefighters, and emergency medical technicians could register voluntarily to serve in the event of an emergency on a commercial airplane.

For example, if an official was going on vacation on an airplane, he would simply register with the airline beforehand to notify them that they would have a public safety official on that flight. Like the sky marshals, only authorized airline personnel would know when one of these volunteers was on the plane. In many cases, these public servants already notify the crew when they board that they are trained for emergencies and are willing to help out in the event they are needed. They are trained to respond calmly during emergencies and can be of great assistance to an airline crew.

As many of my colleagues have stated, if the airline industry is to recover fully from the events of September 11, 2001, we must make the flying public feel safe once again in our skies. The Aviation Security Act will help us do just that.

Ms. MIKULSKI. Mr. President, I rise in support of the Aviation Security Act.

On September 11, four civilian airliners from three of our nation's airports were used as weapons of war. As were debating this legislation, our military is taking action against those who are responsible. One way to support our troops is to improve safety for all Americans. That is the goal of this legislation. This bill enables us to take three concrete actions to improve safety in our skies.

First, it federalizes airport security operations. Security is a high skill job, yet airport screeners in this country are low paid, poorly trained, and inexperienced. Many of our airport screeners make $6.00 to $7.00 an hour. That is a lower wage than many of our fast food workers receive. Our airport screeners receive minimal training. The FAA currently requires 12 hours of classroom training for our airport screeners, while France requires at least 60 hours of training. Turnover rates are also abysmal. From May 1998 through April 1999, turnover rates for workers at our nation's nineteen largest airports averaged 126 percent, and as high as 416 percent in some instances. When morale and incentive are low, poor performance follows. FAA inspection reports reveal significant weaknesses in the performance of our airport screeners. Security inspections showed that B.W.I. ranked fifth among major airports in the number of bombs, grenades or other weapons that went undetected in federal inspections. This is not a new problem, however. The GAO reports that in 1987 airport screeners missed 20 percent of the potentially dangerous weapons used in tests, and it's been getting worse over the past decade. That is why this legislation is so important. We have Federal officials protecting our borders and protecting our President. We also need federal officials protecting our flying public. Federal workers can be fully trained and monitored. Their primary goal would be safety, not the economic bottom line. The Hollings bill does this by federalizing airport security operations, requiring extensive training and deploying law enforcement personnel at airport security screening locations.

The second item this bill addresses is the safety of our pilots. We all know that the safety of our pilots is critical to ensuring the safety of our passengers. The tragedies of September 11 showed that we need to strengthen the cockpit doors and locks to prevent entry by non-flight deck crew members. This bill prohibits access to the flight deck cockpit by any person other than a flight deck crew member and requires the strengthening of the cockpit door and locks to prevent entry by non-flight deck crew members.

The third critical item this bill addresses is the expansion of the Federal Air Marshal program. On September 11, some heroic Americans on United Airlines flight 93 lost their lives as they confronted the terrorists. They prevented the plane from possibly flying into the Capitol or the White House. These brave citizens lost their lives, yet they saved many others. Perhaps they saved the lives of those of us in this chamber. We can't ask American citizens to risk or lose their lives on airplanes. We need federal air marshals on our airplanes to protect our flying public. The Sky Marshal Program dates back to the Kennedy Administration when the concern of highjackings to Cuba was prevalent. In 1970 the program was greatly expanded to include U.S. Customs and military personnel. Two years later the program was phased out. Then, in 1985 a 727 flight from Athens was diverted to Beirut, where terrorists murdered Robert Dean Stetham of Maryland. The highjackings of 1985 prompted Congress to reinstate the Federal Air Marshal program, but it's skimpy and spartan. This bill would allow a federal air marshal on every domestic flight and every international flight originating in the United States.

The events of September 11 were an attack against America and an attack against humanity. We are a nation that is grief stricken, but we are not paralyzed in our determination to rid the world of terrorism. In the mean time we must act to make transportation safer in the United States. We must exhibit a sense of urgency and pass this legislation immediately.

Airline security is a crucial part of transportation security, but we can't stop there. We must also improve the safety of our railroads and our ports. We must ensure the safety of all components of our rail system, including: tunnel security, terminal safety, bridge safety and protection of our track switchboards. Over 22 million people a year ride our railroads and forty percent of all freight is transported on our rails. A terrorist attack on our rails could result in catastrophic loss of life and paralyze our economy. Amtrak is ready and willing to improve passenger rail safety in this country, but it also must address its critical infrastructure needs. For example, the tunnels that run through Washington, Baltimore, and New York accommodates trains that carry roughly 350,000 people a day. These tunnels don't meet minimum safety standards, they don't have proper ventilation, and there is not adequate lighting. Rail safety requires federal help, but annual appropriations for Amtrak is frozen at $521 million, about half of its $955 million authorization in TEA–21. The Amtrak emergency package would improve safety and security on our trains by: hiring more police officers to patrol trains, stations and railroads; provide anti-terrorism training for employees; install cameras to monitor facilities; improve the safety of tunnels, especially in the aging tunnels that run through Maryland, Washington, and New York.

The Amtrak emergency package would also provide additional rail capacity to accommodates increased ridership. In the days following the September 11th tragedy, Amtrak employees worked around the clock to provide a safe, viable option to our traveling public. Daily ridership from September 12 to September 17 jumped 17 percent, and that doesn't include all of the airline tickets that Amtrak honored to keep America on the move. On the Northeast Corridor, Amtrak added roughly 30 percent more seating capacity, or 2,000 more seats per day on unreserved trains. Amtrak responded to our national crisis in many ways: they helped carry our mail, they delivered thousand of emergency relief kits to New York, and they provided transportation to firefighters, police and medical personnel. Some may argue that now is not the time to discuss Amtrak. I would argue there's never been a better time. Now is the time to give Amtrak the support it needs to keep America moving quickly and safely. The simple truth is that we have a National Passenger Railroad System in this country that needs our immediate help with security and capacity upgrades. It is our duty to respond.

I would also like to take this opportunity to rise as a cosponsor of the Carnahan amendment. This important amendment would help those who are most hurt by the economic impact of the terrorist attacks of September 11. Thousands of American workers have lost their jobs during this economic downturn. These workers need our help. We need to act quickly on a economic stimulus package that targets the American worker. Airline and aviation employees have been especially hard hit. 140,000 thousand of these workers have been laid off since the terrorist attacks. Unemployment is steadily rising in the industry. Last week, 528,000 people filed for unemployment. That is the nearly the population of Baltimore City, and a figure we haven't seen in nine years. These people are our pilots, our flight attendants, baggage handlers, concessionaires and aircraft builders. These workers have lost their paychecks, lost their health care and could lose their homes. They need our immediate help, just as we helped their former employers with a $15 billion stabilization package of grant and loan guarantees.

I am confident that the airline industry and the U.S. economy will recover, but help is needed today. Senator CARNAHAN's amendment would provide financial assistance, training and health care coverage to employees of the airline industry who lose their jobs as a result of the attacks on September 11. The Carnahan amendment would provide income support by extending the number of weeks eligible individuals can receive unemployment insurance, from 26 weeks to 79 weeks. These cash payments would not create a strain on state budgets, because they would be funded entirely by the Federal Government. Workers who don't meet their states' requirements for unemployment insurance would not be left out. They would receive 26 weeks of federally financed unemployment insurance.

This amendment also addresses job training. Workers who may not return to their jobs within the airline industry would be eligible for retraining benefits. Other workers would be eligible for training to upgrade their skills. This amendment would enable laid off workers to keep their health care by expanding the COBRA program. This would enable people who have lost their jobs to retain their health insurance. Madame President, I strongly support the Carnahan amendment. It is a thoughtful and comprehensive airline workers relief package. It's also a good starting point to address the needs of working families in America, and provides a good model for a broader economic stimulus package.

Mr. MCCAIN. Mr. President, I believe in just a minute we will move to final passage.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, if there are no further amendments, we are ready for third reading.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading and was read the third time.

UNANIMOUS CONSENT AGREEMENT—S.J. RES. 25

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nevada.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that upon disposition of S. 1447, the aviation safety bill, the Senate proceed to the consideration of S.J. Res. 25, the joint resolution designating September 11 as a day of remembrance; that there be 20 minutes for debate on the resolution, equally divided between the two leaders or their designees; that no amendments or motions be in order; and that upon the use or yielding back of the time, the Senate vote without any intervening action on final passage of the joint resolution.

Mr. MCCAIN. Reserving the right to object, I ask the Senator from Nevada, could he include in there that immediately after the vote, Senator VOINOVICH be given 15 minutes to speak as in morning business on the legislation just passed?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator so modify his request?

Mr. REID. That would be fine. The Senator from Ohio would speak immediately following the vote on final passage. I am wondering: Everyone will be here. If consent is granted, we are going to have, immediately following that, two more votes on judges. It would appear to me the Senator from Ohio has to be here anyway. Perhaps we could have him give his speech then.

Mr. MCCAIN. I would ask in modification that both Senators from Ohio would like to speak for 10 minutes and it would take place following the election of the judges.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, could I have my first unanimous consent request approved; that is, we are going to take care of the resolution dealing with the day of remembrance?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

UNANIMOUS CONSENT AGREEMENT—EXECUTIVE CALENDAR

Mr. REID. Mr. President, as in executive session, I ask unanimous consent that immediately following the disposition of the joint resolution establishing a day of remembrance, the Senate proceed to executive session and vote on the nominations of Barrington Parker to be a circuit court judge and Michael Mills to be a Federal district court judge; that any statements thereon appear at the appropriate place in the RECORD, the President be immediately notified of the Senate's action, and the Senate return to legislative session.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, as in executive session, I ask unanimous consent that we now order the yeas and nays on both of these nominations with one show of seconds. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered. Is there a sufficient second?

There appears to be a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. REID. I further ask unanimous consent that following these votes, Senator VOINOVICH and Senator DEWINE be recognized for up to 10 minutes each as in morning business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I alert all Members, Senator DASCHLE has the right, under the order previously entered, to call up the antiterrorism legislation. It is my understanding, having spoken to the leader not too long ago, that that is his intention. Following all this, we would take up tonight the antiterrorism legislation, so everyone should be aware of that. We have four amendments in order. We have some time for general debate. It could be a long evening.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays on the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second?

There appears to be a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arizona.

Mr. MCCAIN. Mr. President, I thank the distinguished chairman of the committee for his leadership and effort on this very important legislation, and all the staff who have been involved. I also thank Senator ROCKEFELLER, particularly, and Senator HUTCHISON, as well, for her incredible efforts on this legislation.

This is an appropriate day for this legislation and the antiterrorism legislation, given that it has been 1 month since the terrorist attack. We in the Senate are taking a major step in ensuring that this kind of thing can never happen again. All of us in this body can be pleased at the effort that has been put forth on this legislation.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, I thank our distinguished ranking member, Senator MCCAIN, for his total cooperation and leadership on this measure, along with Senator HUTCHISON of Texas and Senator ROCKEFELLER of West Virginia who lead our Aviation Subcommittee. It is not only an important safety measure but, in a sense, an airport and airline stimulus bill because now, if the House can take this up in judicious fashion, we can move forward and everyone can be assured immediately of security in air travel.

For example, the American people will know once and forever that a domestic airliner is never going to be used as a weapon of mass destruction because we will have that cockpit secured, never to be opened in flight, so then we can economize on our requirements for the military patrolling over flights, ready to shoot down a domestic airline because it cannot be hijacked in the sense of taken over and directed anywhere, beyond a particular discord or disruption in the cabin itself. Once that occurs, the pilots will be informed, they will land, law enforcement will be there, and that will end hijacking in America, as it has in Israel.

It is a very important measure with which we move forward promptly. I am delighted and pleased, particularly with the cooperation I mentioned, the staffs on both sides. But the whip, Democratic whip, HARRY REID, Lord knows—I have been here 35 years; I am still 20 years younger than STROM; he was here a minute ago—he is the best whip I have seen.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill having been read the third time, the question is, Shall it pass? The yeas and nays have been ordered. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll.

The result was announced—yeas 100, nays 0, as follows:

The bill (S. 1447) was passed.

(The bill will be printed in a future edition of the RECORD.)

Mr. HOLLINGS. I move to reconsider the vote.

Mr. DASCHLE. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Texas.

Mrs. HUTCHISON. Mr. President, the Senate has done a terrific job of doing something on the 1-month anniversary of this tragedy for America that will begin to rehabilitate the economy of our country, and that is with aviation security we can begin to assure the American public they can fly in safety.

The Senate has passed its bill. I think it is a terrific bill. It will augment the cockpit. It will give better quality screening. It will put air marshals in the air.

The American public needs to know the flying system is safe, and this aviation bill is a good start in that direction. I hope the House will follow suit and pass its bill. I know there are some differences, but I hope they will act expeditiously so we can send a bill to the President that will begin to rehabilitate the whole aviation industry and the industries that depend on it.

So I thank the distinguished chairman of the committee, Senator HOLLINGS, Senator MCCAIN, Senator ROCKEFELLER, my counterpart on the Subcommittee on Aviation. We could not have done it without the total support and the total bipartisanship that produced the 100–0 vote.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CARPER). The Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Let me thank, once again, the distinguished Senator, Mrs. HUTCHISON of Texas. It is bipartisan, mainly because of her leadership.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The majority leader.

ORDER OF PROCEDURE

Mr. DASCHLE. I, too, compliment the distinguished chair, the ranking member, the subcommittee chair, and the ranking member for their outstanding work in getting us to this point.

A few days ago people would have been very skeptical about any prediction that this bill would have been passed 100–0, but it has been passed in large measure because of their leadership, and we are grateful.

The next vote, as I think our colleagues are aware, is the resolution on the day of remembrance.

I notify Senators there are three additional votes. There will be a vote on the National Day of Remembrance. There will be two additional rollcall votes on two judges.

I ask unanimous consent that the third and fourth vote in this next sequence be limited to 10 minutes each.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DASCHLE. Mr. President, it is my hope and expectation we will take up the counterterrorism legislation tonight following these votes. It is my hope we could finish the work tonight. If we cannot, of course, we will finish the work tomorrow morning. If there is the possibility we could finish it tonight, it would be my desire not to have any votes tomorrow. So we will leave that to Senators who wish to speak and wish to debate the bill, but we will go to counterterrorism immediately following the votes to which we have just referred.

We have a lot of work yet to do tonight, and I urge Senators to stay close to the Chamber.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. LOTT. Mr. President, with regard to the schedule, I support what Senator DASCHLE is trying to do. I think we have done the right thing by moving the aviation security bill. We will have an opportunity to work on it further in conference, for those who do have concerns, but we have to say to the American people—in fact, we have to be assured we can tell the American people we have addressed this aviation security question as soon as possible. Next week hopefully we will be able to get into conference and produce a bill.

It is very important that as soon as possible we move this counterterrorism legislation. Good work has been done in the Senate. We have pointed the way in this effort, and so I hope our colleagues will work to complete the bill as soon as possible. I hope all of the general debate time will not necessarily be used, although it is up to 4 hours. We also have as many as four amendments in order under the agreement that was reached. I hope we can get through that at a reasonable hour and complete the work tonight, but if it becomes evident it is going to take 4 or 5 hours to do this, then we will have to have the votes in the morning.

Even then, I presume the votes would begin at a relatively early hour, 9 or 9:30 a.m. Certainly Senator DASCHLE will announce that. Whether there are two or three votes, whatever it would be, we will be completed after that.

Having said that, at the end of this week, if we complete action on these two bills, I think we will have done a great deal to move toward restoring the confidence of the American people. I am proud of the progress I am seeing made.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Maryland.

Mr. SARBANES. I understand it is the intention, then, of the leadership to complete the counterterrorism bill this evening; is that correct?

Mr. DASCHLE. If the Senator will yield, I will phrase it by saying it is my hope to finish it. We know what the time parameters are. We have already agreed to that. If we are compelled to go through all of the votes and it gets to be too late, we may have to move it into tomorrow. So I am not going to say definitively tonight at this moment we will finish our work on the counterterrorism bill, but that would be my hope.

Mr. SARBANES. As I understand it, if we can complete work on the counterterrorism bill this evening, then we will not be in tomorrow, or at least we will not be transacting business that requires votes tomorrow. Is that correct?

Mr. DASCHLE. That is correct. We would not have votes tomorrow. We would have completed our work. I assume we could be in for morning business to accommodate Senators who may wish to speak, but it is my intention not to have any rollcall votes tomorrow.

Mr. SARBANES. I thank the leader.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. BYRD. I express the hope our leadership on both sides of the aisle can help to press hard to get the remaining appropriations bills completed and sent to the President singly and not as an omnibus bill. The Appropriations Committee in the Senate today reported out the D.C. appropriations bill and the Labor-HHS appropriations bill. This makes 12 of the 13 appropriations bills that the Appropriations Committee in the Senate has reported out.

The House, I understand, is working on the Defense appropriations bill and will soon act on it and will shortly send over the conference report on the Department of the Interior.

We will have to have another CR. That will be coming along probably today. In any event, our committee and our chairmen and ranking members on all the subcommittees have worked diligently and hard, and I hope the leadership will help us to bring pressure on both sides of the Capitol to move these appropriations conferences. The staffs have done the preliminary work, a good bit of it in many instances.

It is absolutely necessary we show the American people that this Congress can do its work, is doing its work, but it is going to take some effort on the part of all of us, I say to the distinguished minority leader and the majority leader, to bring these remaining conference reports to the floor. We shouldn't have to have another continuing resolution after this next one. We ought to complete these appropriations bills in the remaining days of this month.

Let's go home, for Heavens' sake, and see our families and constituents and not delay further. I don't think it is intentional, but it amounts to delay.

I thank both leaders for the efforts they made. We have some work yet to be done. We can do it.

Mr. DASCHLE. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. BYRD. Yes.

Mr. DASCHLE. I say to the distinguished Chairman, I share his determination to complete our work on the appropriations bills. He and I have had many private conversations, and if I recall, even considerations on the floor.

I informed him and our colleagues on Monday there will be a vote on an appropriations bill, either the Interior conference report or on cloture on the motion to proceed to foreign operations. I share his determination to continue to plow through these bills and to accomplish as much as we can in the next 2 weeks.

As I understand it, the next continuing resolution will be for 1 week. If that is the case, we have 2 weeks within which to complete our work so as not to pass yet another continuing resolution. We have a lot to do. I appreciate very much his willingness to call attention again to that fact tonight.

Mr. BYRD. I thank the distinguished majority leader. We must show the American people that we can pass these bills. We owe it to ourselves, we owe it to the country, we owe it to the President of the United States to send him individual appropriations bills, no omnibus bill. Let him have his opportunity to sign or veto the bills as he sees fit.

Mr. LOTT. If I might say briefly—I don't want to drag this out—obviously we need to be able to move our appropriations bills.

I must say, of course, how quickly we do that depends on several things: One, how many controversial issues are in these bills when they come out of the committee. I don't know what happened, for instance, on the D.C. appropriations bill, but it had difficult and time-consuming issues in it. There may not be now.

The other thing is several of the bills, including Labor-HHS, often take a week or two; Defense quite often takes 3 or 4 days. Part of it depends on the willingness of Senators to withhold controversial amendments to move the process along. We have been doing that magnificently over the past month. Hopefully, we can do that even with appropriations bills—even though these are big bills, important bills, and Senators may want to be heard and offer amendments.

We also have to continue to work together on other issues that become problematic, such as getting judicial confirmations moving because there is a need for that, too.

Senator DASCHLE and I are working on this on all fronts. I talked to Senator STEVENS about it. I want to get the appropriations bills completed. It will take a lot of cooperation. We are prepared to give it that cooperation and time.

Mr. BYRD. I thank both leaders.

NATIONAL DAY OF REMEMBRANCE

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the clerk will report Senate Joint Resolution 25.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

A joint resolution (S.J. Res. 25) designating September 11, 2001, as a National Day of Remembrance.

Mr. DASCHLE. Mr. President, one month ago today, more than 6,000 innocent men and women had their lives stolen from them in an act of terrorism so hideous and cruel that it still almost defies belief.

In the days since, we have come together—not as Democrats or Republicans—as Americans, to honor the memory of all those who died at the World Trade Center, the Pentagon and in that lonely field in western Pennsylvania.

We have come together to tell their families they are not alone. They are part of our American family and we are with them—now in their hour of grief, and in the days and years to come.

And we have also come together to say, in the strongest possible terms, that we stand with President Bush in his determination to find those who committed these hideous attacks and hold them accountable, and to destroy their global network of hate and terror.

I had the opportunity to join many of my Senate colleagues in the days after the attack to visit Ground Zero in New York City. There, in a mountain of rubble and wreckage that is beyond my ability to describe, I saw a sign scrawled on a wall. It read simply: ''We will never forget.''

That is true. Whether we live another hundred months, or another hundred years, we will never forget the thousands of innocent victims who lost their lives on September 11th.

We will never forget the heartbreak of those they left behind, or the stunning bravery of those who tried to save them.

And we will never forget our responsibility to find those who committed these evil acts and stop them.

That is our promise.

In the aftermath of the attacks, America has searched for words to describe the enormity of what happened.

Every description has fallen short—and so we simply refer to the day: September 11th.

This day has become hallowed in our memories, and in our history.

Today, Senator LOTT and I are introducing a resolution to honor it on our calendars, as well.

This resolution designates September 11 as our national day of mourning and remembrance.

We ask that each year on September 11, the President issue a proclamation, the flags be lowered to half-mast, and that America observe a moment of silence.

It is yet another guarantee that as years pass, and wounds heal, that we will never forget what happened on that day.

Mr. DASCHLE. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second? There is a sufficient second. The yeas and nays were ordered.

Is all time yielded back?

Mr. DASCHLE. I yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. LOTT. Mr. President, I yield back the remainder of our time.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading and was read the third time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution having been read the third time, the question is, Shall the resolution pass?

The yeas and nays have been ordered.

The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll.

The result was announced—yeas 100, nays 0, as follows:

SEC. 2. NATIONAL DAY OF REMEMBRANCE.

(a) DESIGNATION.—September 11 is National Day of Remembrance.

(b) PROCLAMATION.—The President is requested to issue each year a proclamation—

(1) remembering those who tragically lost their lives as a result of the terrorist attacks on the United States on September 11, 2001, and honoring the police, firefighters, and emergency personnel who responded with such valor on September 11, 2001;

(4) urging all people of the United States to observe a moment of silence on National Day of Remembrance in honor of those who lost their lives as a result of the terrorist attacks on the United States on September 11, 2001.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote.

Mr. BURNS. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, all Senators should know that the next two votes are 10-minute votes. When we finish these two votes, we will go on to the antiterrorism legislation. The majority leader said we are going to finish that night. We will stick to the 10-minute votes. If Members are not here at or near that time, we will close the vote.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

EXECUTIVE CALENDAR

NOMINATION OF BARRINGTON D. PARKER, JR., OF CONNECTICUT, TO BE UNITED STATES CIRCUIT JUDGE FOR THE SECOND CIRCUIT

NOMINATION OF MICHAEL P. MILLS, OF MISSISSIPPI, TO BE UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE FOR THE NORTHERN DISTRICT OF MISSISSIPPI

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, when the Senate confirms Barrington Parker to the Second Circuit, we will have confirmed more Court of Appeals judges since July of this year than were confirmed in the entire first year of the Clinton administration. When the committee completes its consideration of Edith Brown Clement and she is confirmed to the Fifth Circuit, we will match the total confirmed Court of Appeals judges for the entire first year of the first Bush administration.

When we confirmed Judge Roger Gregory to the Fourth Circuit on July 20, the Senate had confirmed more Court of Appeals judges than a Republican-controlled Senate was willing to confirm in all of the 1996 session—a year in which not a single nominee to the Courts of Appeals was confirmed, not one all session.

Until I became chairman and began holding hearings in July, no judicial nominations had hearings or were confirmed by the Senate this year. We are now ahead of the pace of confirmations for judicial nominees in the first year of the Clinton administration and the pace in the first year of the first Bush administration.

In the first year of the Clinton administration, 1993, without all the disruptions, distractions and shifts in Senate majority that we have experienced this year through July and without the terrorist attacks of September 11, the first Court of Appeals judge was not confirmed until September 30, the third was not confirmed until November and, as I have noted, the Senate never confirmed a fourth Court of Appeals nominee.

In the entire first year of the first Bush administration, 1989, without all the disruptions, distractions and shifts of Senate majority that we have experienced this year through July and without the terrorist attacks of September 11, the fourth Court of Appeals nominee was not confirmed until November 8. Today, on October 11, the Senate will confirm its fourth Court of Appeals nominee since July 20 of this year. Thus, in spite of everything we are more than one month ahead of the pace in 1989.

During the more than 6 years in which the Republicans most recently controlled the Senate schedule, there were 34 months with no hearing at all, 30 months with only one hearing and only 12 times in almost 6½ years did the Judiciary Committee hold as many as two hearings involving judicial nominations during a month. I held two hearings in July involving judicial nominations and two unprecedented hearings in August, during the traditional recess. I held a fifth hearing in September, the sixth last week, and have scheduled a seventh hearing and second for October for next week. Thus, during the 4 months that I have been chairman with a reconstituted Judiciary Committee we will have held seven hearings involving judicial nominees and held two hearings in three of those 4 months.

A fair assessment of the circumstances of this year—in this shortened time frame of only a few months in session, with the obstruction in reorganization, the Republican objection that required all judicial nominations to be returned to the White House over the August recess, the President's unprecedented change in the process that shunted ABA peer review to the back end after the nomination, and now with the aftermath of the September 11 terrorist attacks—the committee and the Senate should be commended, not criticized, for our efforts to out pace the confirmations in the first years of the Clinton administration and the first year of the first Bush administration. Although we have redirected much of the committee work and attention to hearings and a legislative response following the terrible terrorist attacks on September 11, I have continued to hold confirmation hearings for judicial nominations at a pace far in excess of that maintained by my Republican predecessor.

In spite of unfair and unfounded criticism, I have continued to proceed with additional hearings and press onward as best I can to have the committee work to fulfil its role in the confirmation process. With cooperation from the White House and all Senators, both Republican and Democratic, I have no doubt that we can match and likely better the confirmation totals for the first year of the first Bush administration in 1989 by the end of the month.

I was encouraged to hear the White House sound a different tune recently when its spokesperson suggested that the point at which to assess our progress on judicial nominations will be at the end of the session. That is a far cry from the predictions earlier that there would be no confirmations by the Democratic majority and the subsequent White House prediction, which we have already topped, that there would be only five confirmations all year. I think that is a sensible thought and that we would be in position to compare apples with apples at the end of the first year of this administration.

Some Republican Senators have worked with me to expedite consideration of judicial nominees needed for their States and I appreciate their courtesy and have tried to accommodate them and the needs of the Federal courts in their States at the earliest opportunity. Others will carp and criticize no matter what we are able to achieve. I only wish those who now are rushing forward in the first weeks of my chairmanship to ''champion'' the cause of the Federal judiciary and see the current vacancies as a crisis would have sounded the call during the slowdown over the last 7 years. Had they joined with me in my efforts when they were in the majority, we would not have the vacancies we have now around the country. Many more would have been filled more quickly. I welcome them to the cause of the administration of justice but have to wonder whether their conversion is one of principle or partisanship. With few exceptions—Senator SPECTER comes to mind as someone who urged prompt action on nominees over the course of his Senate career including during the last several years—today's critics were comfortable defenders of slower confirmation hearings, long-delayed action on scores of nominees and no action on many others. Given that none of the current critics has yet admitted that Republicans did anything wrong over the last 7 years and has steadfastly defended the pace at which the Republican majority chose to act then, I would think they would be praising our current efforts that exceed the confirmation pace and hearing schedule that Republicans maintained when they held the Senate majority.

When I became chairman in June, I expressed my commitment to improving upon the inefficiency and lack of bipartisanship displayed by the committee in recent years. With respect to judicial nominations, our first hearing was noticed within 10 minutes of the adoption of the reorganization resolution and within a day of the committee's membership being set on July 10. I have alluded to the two unprecedented August recess hearings I chaired last month involving judicial nominations.

Indeed, at the first on August 22, no Republican member of the committee even attended. In addition to taking place during the August recess, those August hearings were unusual in that they were held without having nominations pending before the committee.

Just before the Senate recessed in early August, the Senate leadership requested that nominations, including all pending nominations for judicial appointment, be retained through the August recess. This proposal was made by the Democratic leadership notwithstanding the Senate rule that nominations should be returned to the President when the Senate recesses for a period of more than 30 days.

It was the objection of the Republican leader to that unanimous consent request that resulted in the return of all nominations, including all judicial nominations, to the President in early August. That Republican objection has resulted in the strict application of the Senate rules which has required needless paperwork and occasioned more unnecessary delay.

Given the objection by the Republican leader, no nominations were pending before the Senate or the Judiciary Committee on August 22 or August 27 when we convened our recess hearings. In order to proceed last month, we did so in a highly unusual manner. I did so with a high level of concern about that unusual procedure and noting the exceptional nature of those hearings.

Like the month-long delay in reorganizing the Senate, the objection of the Republican leader to the Senate retaining pending nominations through the August recess served to complicate and delay consideration of nominations. The bumps in the road created by the other side are especially frustrating. Similarly, President Bush's decision to delay the American Bar Association's evaluation of a judicial nominee's qualifications until the nomination is made public, has forced delays in the rest of the process as well.

As a result of this administration's break with the 50-year-old precedent established under President Eisenhower, the confirmation process of even the least controversial and most qualified candidates is necessarily delayed by several weeks after nominations are received by the Senate. There were no District Court nominees who had been evaluated in time for the confirmation hearing I convened on July 24.

With the return to the President of the District Court nominees the President sent to the Senate in early August and the delay in ABA peer review that results from the White House's decision to change the process that had worked for more than 50 years for Republican and Democratic Presidents alike, we have continued to have a limited pool of District Court nominees available for consideration at hearings.

Likewise, this administration's failures early on to consult with Senators from both parties and to seek nominees who would enjoy broad bipartisan support remains a source of concern. We have nominees pending whom the home State Senators do not know, and with whom they are not familiar and have never met.

In spite of these difficulties, we continue to move forward and exceed the pace set by both the Bush administration in 1989 and the Clinton administration in 1993. Under Democratic leadership, the Judiciary Committee is making important strides toward replenishing our Federal judiciary. I have adhered, and will continue to adhere, to a rigorous schedule, despite the terrorist attacks of September 11, and despite the limited opportunities provided by my not assuming the chairmanship until mid-session.

The Federal courts remain a symbol of justice to our citizens and to believers in peace and democracy throughout the world, and therefore, I will work diligently to keep the judicial nominations process on track.

Judge Parker will be a good addition to the Second Circuit. He is universally praised by the Senators from New York and Connecticut. He has been an outstanding District Court Judge. He is another from among the first group of nominees sent to the Senate by President Bush in May and resubmitted in September. He was reported unanimously by the Judiciary Committee, received the highest possible review from the ABA, and comes from a distinguished family of jurists.

Justice Mills is strongly supported by his home State Senators. He literally went the extra mile and drove from Mississippi to his confirmation hearing on September 13 when the air travel system in the country was still recovering from the terrorist hijackings of September 11. I was gratified to hear Justice Mills testify that he will follow the time-honored principles of stare decisis and respect the settled law establishing a woman's right to choose.

I had been concerned about his interpretation of binding precedent and the law given his dissent in McMillan v. City of Jackson. In his dissent he concluded that a protester convicted of trespassing at a family planning clinic should have been permitted to present a defense of necessity—in other words to justify his unlawful conduct by arguing that the protester had a reasonable belief that such action was necessary to prevent a significant evil.

Having heard Justice Mills state at his hearing that he will have the utmost respect for judicial precedent as a judge on the federal bench, I am prepared to support his nomination in spite of his dissent in McMillan and out of respect for Senator COCHRAN and Senator LOTT.

In addition to the judicial nominees the Senate is considering, we are also considering the nominations of 14 men and women to become United States Attorneys across the country, as well as the nomination of Benigno Reyna to be the Director of the United States Marshals Service.

Earlier this year I raised the problem created by the administration being so slow to nominate United States Attorneys after calling upon those holding those critical law enforcement posts to tender their resignations. I am glad that the White House took those observations to heart and began sending us nominees to be the Justice Department representatives in districts in each of our States all across the country.

The President did not nominate anyone to be a United States Attorney until July 31, just before the August recess. Unfortunately, due to the objection of the Republican leader even those few nominations were required under Senate rules to be returned to the White House during the recess. In essence, we are working through nominees effectively received on September 5 and thereafter.

Since that time the Judiciary Committee has already reported almost half of the nominations received between September 5 and September 19 and will continue to press the administration to complete the paperwork requirements on these nominations as soon as possible. The paperwork on the first group of nominees was not completed until the second week of September. They were then reported out and confirmed.

This second large group of 14 United States Attorneys will bring to 26 the United States Attorneys confirmed in the period between September 14 and October 11. I am proud of our record. We have managed to work through almost half of the 54 nominations for United States Attorney in a short period. Of course, the President has yet to nominate as many as 40 United States Attorneys. We will continue to try to work with the administration to make progress on these nominations.

I remain disturbed that the administration has yet to nominate a single United States Marshal for the 95 Districts across the country. The Marshals Service is older than the Department of Justice itself and has long been an essential component in Federal law enforcement. Yet here we are in mid-October without a single nominee. It was created by the first Congress in the Judiciary Act of 1789.

When we are calling upon the Marshal Offices and their deputies to help with security at airports, to contribute to the sky marshal program, to provide security at Federal buildings and for the Federal courts and to protect us in so many ways, we need to take these matters seriously and move forward.

I know that Deputy Marshals from Vermont, for example, are helping with operations in Vermont and in other parts of New England to ensure airport security and to protect government operations and all Americans. Senators can be helpful to the administration in the selection of United States Marshals and trust that the administration will begin consulting with Senators so that we can move forward to fill these vital positions.

Today the Senate does have before it the nomination of Benigno Reyna to head the United States Marshals Service as its new Director. He will direct a crucial component of our Federal law enforcement family, the United States Marshals Service. In this difficult time for America in the wake of the attacks on September 11, I am pleased that we have been able to expedite his consideration by the Senate.

Having received his nomination on September 12, we proceeded to include him in a confirmation hearing on September. Even though we did not receive his nomination until September 12, we were able to move him quickly to a hearing within a week and he is being considered by the Senate less than one month after his nomination.

I thank the Acting Director of the United States Marshals Service, Louie T. McKinney, and all of the acting United States Marshals and Deputy Marshals from around the country for their service in the past difficult days and for their continuing dedication and sacrifice.

I wish Director Reyna, as well as the 14 new United States Attorneys around the country success in their new challenges.

I am proud of the hard work the Judiciary Committee has been doing to confirm these and others of the President's nominees to the Department of Justice. Since the committee was reassigned members on July 10, we have held ten nomination hearings for executive branch nominees.

We have proceeded expeditiously with hearings for the FBI Director, the Administrator of the Drug Enforcement Administration, the Commissioner of the Immigration and Naturalization Service, the Assistant Attorney General for the Tax Division, the Assistant Attorney General for the Office of Justice Programs, the Director of the National Institute of Justice, the Director of the Bureau of Justice Assistance, the Director of the Office for Victims of Crime, the Director of the United States Marshals Service, the Associate Attorney General, and the Assistant Attorney General for the Office of Legal Counsel.

Further, we have proceeded to confirm Assistant Attorneys General to head the Civil Rights, Antitrust, Civil and Tax Divisions.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Utah.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, let me just say, if I may, in the first year of the Clinton administration the committee was controlled by Democrats. In the last year of the Bush administration the committee was controlled by Democrats. I have to say—when the all-time champion, with 382 confirmed judges, was Ronald Reagan—that it seems to me the moaning should quit at this point because we confirmed 377, 5 fewer than Reagan, including the time Senator BIDEN was chairman; and he did a good job. There were five fewer than Reagan during the Clinton years. In my opinion, they would have had at least three more than Reagan, had it not been for Democratic holds and objections to their own nominees.

So let's just understand something: We are not putting these judges through anywhere near as fast as we should be putting them through. Most of the statistics show that the judges who were nominated in the first year of a President, up to August 1st, basically went through.

When we have had confirmation of these two judges, there will be eight who will have gone through, three of whom are Democrats, whom I support. I think we have to do a better job because the Federal judiciary is one-third of the separated powers of this country. We now have 110 vacancies. With these 2, it will be 108. We have 51 judges, nominees, sitting here, not getting hearings.

I happen to appreciate the work the distinguished Senator from Vermont has done with the ones who have gone through, but we have not done nearly what we should do before the end of this particular session of Congress. I hope we can do a better job in the last week or so of this Congress to get more judges confirmed.

It isn't a matter of politics; it is a matter of doing what is right for a third of the separated powers of our Government. I have to say, I do get a little tired of hearing that we put through as many as the first year of the Clinton administration and the last year of the Bush administration, both of which were controlled by Democrats.

Several Senators addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Republican leader is recognized.

Mr. LOTT. Thank you, Mr. President.

First, let me say to Senator LEAHY from Vermont, for those who have been confirmed and those who are going to be reported out, I say thank you very much. We do appreciate that sincerely. I am convinced that Senator LEAHY, as chairman of the Judiciary Committee, and the Judiciary Committee, working with the leadership, will be having more hearings and will be reporting out additional judges. I certainly hope that is the case.

Our concern, though, is some of the statistics that I think are not disputable. For instance, since the August recess, I believe we have only confirmed two judges—one circuit, one district. I understand there have been two more reported, and we will be voting on those two. So that is four.

I understand there has been a hearing, and maybe five more may be reported out this week, and then that they would be voted on, I assume, next week. But it is a fact that there are 110 vacancies, and there are 49 nominees pending before the committee. I believe that is right.

Mr. HATCH. Fifty-three.

Mr. LOTT. Well, I keep hearing different numbers. The fact is, there is a large number pending. But here is what really does concern me. Of the judges whose names were submitted as far back as May and June, of that group of circuit judges, which included 19 of them, and including Judge Gregory, who clearly is a Democratic nominee, only 3 have been confirmed. One more has been reported. And there has been 1 hearing, leaving 14 of the 19 circuit judges' names submitted in May or early June. I understand the ABA reports are completed. They have had no hearing and have not been reported.

On the circuit judges, of those who were reported in May and June, three have been confirmed. None is on the calendar. Two hearings have been completed. And there are two on which there has been no action.

So there are 16 judges—circuit and district—who have been there since May and June.

Having said that, I know the chairmanship changed in June, and it took time to get organized in July, and we were out in August, and we had an incident on September 11 that affected our schedule, and the Senator from Vermont and the committee have been involved in the counterterrorism.

But that is as it is.

What I have asked Senator DASCHLE and Senator LEAHY is to give me some indication of how the hearings will proceed, how the reports will proceed throughout the rest of October and into November.

You know, it is so funny. One final point.

Mr. LEAHY. Would the Senator like an answer?

Mr. LOTT. I would. One final point: It is amazing how history repeats itself. What you were saying last year we are saying this year. I guess before that, we were saying it or you were saying it.

So I would like to submit for the RECORD—and I ask unanimous consent to have this printed in the RECORD—quotes that were being offered just 1 year ago on this same subject. There were complaints from me that the intelligence authorization bill was being held up, appropriations bills were being delayed, not enough judges were being moved. So this is not new. But I just ask that we continue to work together to try to move the judicial nominations forward.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

A YEAR AGO, IT WAS DEMOCRATS PUSHING FOR JUDICIAL CONFIRMATIONS

''I was in the Minority for a number of years in my present position and . . . I worked very hard in moving legislation, and we did not hold up legislation based on judges. We did not do that. . . . We did not hold up legislation based upon judges . . . we had a right to do so, but I felt, and Senator Daschle felt as minority leader that we had an obligation to move legislation. . . .''—Senator Harry Reid, Congressional Record, 10/10/2001, S10405

Compare the Majority Whip's remarks yesterday with the following statements he and the then Minority Leader made a year ago when they were in the minority and their party's president was in the White House.

EXHIBIT NO. 1: On July 21, 2000, while objecting to Majority Leader Lott's attempt to proceed to S. 2507, the Intelligence Authorization Bill, Minority Leader Daschle stated: ''I hope we can accommodate this unanimous consent request for the intelligence authorization. As [does] Senator Lott, I recognize that it is important, and I hope we can address it. I also hope we can address the additional appropriations bills. There is no reason we can't. We can find a compromise if there is a will, and I am sure there is. But we also want to see the list of what we expect will probably be the final list of judicial nominees to be considered for hearings in the Judicial Committee this year. I am anxious to talk with him and work with him on that issue. All of this is interrelated, as he said, and because of that, we take it slowly.'' [Congressional Record, S7426]

EXHIBIT NO. 2: On July 24, 2000, while objecting to Senator Lott's repeated attempt to proceed to S. 2507, the Intelligence Authorization Bill, Minority Whip Reid stated: ''I think it is unfortunate that we have been unable today to deal with [Judiciary Committee Chairman] Hatch. . . . I hope this evening or tomorrow we can sit down and talk. For example, I believe the judge's name is White . . . who has been before the committee and has not had a hearing. . . . In short, we hope in the meeting with Senator Hatch, either tonight or tomorrow, we will be in a position where we can expedite the rest of the work this week and move on to other things.'' [Congressional Record, S7469]

EXHIBIT NO. 3: On July 25, 2000, while discussing with Senator Domenici the delays in proceeding to the Energy and Water Appropriations Bill, Senator Reid stated: ''We believe there should be certain rights protected. Also under [the] Constitution, we have a situation that was developed by our Founding Fathers in which Senators would give the executive branch—the President—recommendations for people to serve in the judiciary. Once these recommendations were given, the President would send the names back to the Senate and we would confirm or approve those names. One of the problems we are having here is it is very difficult to get people approved, confirmed. This has nothing to do with the energy and water bill. It does, however, have something to do with the other bills. We could have moved forward on the energy and water bill on Friday until this glitch came up.'' [Congressional Record, S7525]

EXHIBIT NO. 4: On July 25, 2000, while discussing with Senator Wellstone the need to ''do the Senate's business'' and the then-current status of bills under the Republican-lead Senate, Senator Reid stated: ''We have a very simple situation here. We in the minority believe we have had the right to have a few judges approved by the Senate. . . . We also believe we have some appropriation bills that need to move forward, and there are some strings on that. We want to work, but there are some things that we think, in fairness, we deserve. As a result of that, things have slowed down, which is too bad.'' [Congressional Record, S7504]

Mr. LOTT. Mr. President, I understand that a judge whose name was submitted in June, and had his ABA rating of ''excellent'' in July, has not had a hearing. But, as a matter of fact, he is going to have one next week. So the process is moving. I hope we will continue to get that done. But we have a lot of them who have been here since May and June on whom we do need action. I hope we can get a commitment to get that action soon.

With that, I yield for a question or comment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Vermont.

Mr. LEAHY. The distinguished Republican leader and I have been friends for over 20 years. He is a year younger, so I think of him as still a good friend. I must admit that he is ahead of me in one area, especially: He has two grandchildren now, and will be happy to show any Senators pictures. I only have one.

But he asked where we are going to go. I will tell him there is a couple things we will not do. We had 34 months the Republicans controlled the Senate during the Clinton years where there were no hearings at all. I have no idea how many months or years I might be chairman of this committee, but I have no intention of having a record like that.

In fact, when we reorganized committees, we actually had a committee within 10 minutes of the time—10 minutes—and the notice of the first hearing in a matter of days. When Senators have told me there was a problem—the Senator from Mississippi had no problem getting his judges up. We are going to vote on one in just a few minutes. There were earlier objections because of rulings that judge made. I helped clear those objections. I believe the Senator from Mississippi has another judge up for a hearing next week.

So, one, I will not go 34 months; two, I have been trying to accommodate Senators when they have told me they have had a problem. I even had hearings in the August recess to help out with this.

Now the Republicans did control the Senate for a while this year. They did not have any hearings. I had 2 days of hearings during the August recess. Ironically enough, no Republican even showed up for one of them, for judges; and one Republican member of the committee issued—actually two members criticized us for even holding the hearings in August on President Bush's nominees.

So I think you are kind of in a ''damned if you do, damned if you don't'' situation. One Republican Senator announced to the whole Senate that I had announced in the press that one of these nominees would never get a hearing. When I asked him where that was in the press, he said, well, maybe somebody else said it; but he did nothing to retract that, of course.

So it is kind of a difficult thing, I tell my good friend. But I am not going to do as the Republicans did in 1996, where we had no courts of appeals hearings. I do recognize there are some vacancies. Of course, there were nominees for those vacancies. Some sat here for 3 or 4 years without having any hearing or vote under the Republican administration of the Senate; 3 or 4 years unable to even get a hearing or vote.

We are moving. We will have more hearings next week. I will probably continue to have hearings during recesses. I will probably continue to have complaints from Republican Senators or their offices when I have those hearings during a recess, and some will probably not bother to show up. But because I have told my friend from Mississippi we will keep moving, we will. He should rest assured that, as tonight, when his judge is here, in a couple more weeks, his judge will be here again. I don't know if that helps as an answer to him.

I also suspect, I say to my friend from Mississippi, we have a terrorism bill to go to tonight. He would probably like us to get to votes on his judge and another judge so we can get to terrorism.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Utah.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I will take another couple minutes. I want to set the record straight. During the first year of the Clinton administration, only five court of appeals nominees were nominated during the first year. Of those five nominees, three were reported out the same year. That is 60 percent of President Clinton's court of appeals nominees in his first year that were reported. In contrast, President Bush has nominated 25 circuit court nominees, and the committee has reported 4. That is 16 percent. There were only two circuit court nominees at the end of President Clinton's first year left in the committee. There are currently 21 of President Bush's circuit court nominees pending in committee and who will be left at the end of his first year if the committee does not act soon.

It is an unfair comparison when you take into account the fact that President Bush has chosen to nominate 20 more circuit court nominees than President Clinton did in his first year.

The fact is, most of these circuit court nominees have well-qualified ratings, meaning they have the highest ratings the American Bar Association can give. I can point to a lot of instances where the ABA has not done a fair job. You have to presume they really have to be good to get well-qualified ratings. It is absolutely wrong that we are not moving on those circuit court nominees as well as the district court nominees. I hope we can get that done in the near future.

I will work with Senator LEAHY to try to get it done. We have to do better than we are doing.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I agree, we want to do better than we did in the last 6 years. I will certainly try to move faster on these than the Senator from Utah did when he was chairman.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Maryland.

Mr. SARBANES. Mr. President, in light of the conversations just ensued, I say to the Senator from Vermont that he has done an absolutely superb job over the last month since September 11 in being able to put together the antiterrorism bill we will be considering later this evening. I, for one, think this should have been clearly the first and only priority of the committee over that period of time.

We have had this long discussion. Certainly for the period since September 11, the accomplishments of the chairman of the Judiciary Committee and his colleagues on that committee in shaping that legislation and getting it before us tonight were splendid.

I yield the floor.

Mr. DODD. Mr. President, I rise in support of the nomination of Judge Barrington Parker to be United States Circuit Judge for the Second Circuit. It is a distinct pleasure for me to recommend Judge Parker to the Senate.

I would like to point out that this is not the first time that the Senate has been called upon to confirm Judge Parker. On September 14, 1994, he was unanimously confirmed by the Senate to serve as judge for the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York.

Judge Parker is a distinguished jurist. He has proven that the Senate's trust in his abilities were well placed. He has accumulated a superb record as a Federal jurist. His career on the bench has been marked by the same character of excellence and the same principled work ethic that marked his career as a lawyer first at the New York law firm of Sullivan & Cromwell, Parker Auspitz Neesemann & Delehanty and finally at the firm of Morrison & Foerster.

I suppose we shouldn't be surprised that Judge Parker has made such great contributions to the legal community in New York and to the Federal bench. After all, he was educated at an extraordinary college and law school in the great state of Connecticut. The time he spent at Yale equipped him to serve with distinction. And incidentally, his choice of residence in the State of Connecticut further demonstrates, at least to me, that he possesses excellence judgement.

Members of law enforcement sometimes refer to themselves as the ''thin blue line.'' In a similar way, members of the judicial branch can be considered the ''thin black line.'' Judges stand as the critical bulwarks in our society against forces that can break down a society, against injustice, against prejudice and against the neglect of individual rights. They take the high and lofty principles upon which our republic is founded and hand them down to all, the rich and the poor, the high and the low, all alike.

It has been said that the Constitution and the laws that are enacted under the Constitution comprise living, breathing documents. That is, of course, true. But it's also true that it is the labor of people who live, professionally speaking, in the law, the students, the practitioners, and especially the adjudicators of the law, that constantly breath new life into what would otherwise be fine but ineffectual words on a page.

The rights and freedoms that we each enjoy as Americans are an inheritance, not an entitlement. They exist for us only to the degree that we are willing to struggle to retain them and to constantly define what they mean for our times.

Judges are indispensable actors in this struggle. In Judge Parker I believe we have a jurist whose experience and temperament will prove a valuable asset to the Second Circuit and the great and enduring cause of equal justice under law. Especially now, when that cause has come under unprecedented attack from acts of terror, our nation needs the commitment and service of people like Barrington Parker. Based on everything I know about Judge Parker, he meets the highest standards of judicial professionalism.

I hope and trust that the Senate will reach the same conclusion that I have reached and will confirm Judge Parker as United States Circuit Judge for the Second Circuit.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I would like to respond to three points raised earlier this evening concerning judicial nominations. The first is the assertion that the Judiciary Committee has acted on as many nominations this year as it did during President Clinton's first year in office. That assertion is not only incorrect, but also ignores several important facts.

President Clinton nominated 32 judges before October 31, 1993, his first year in office. Twenty-eight were confirmed that year. That's an 88 percent confirmation rate. It's similar to the confirmation rate during the first year of President G.H.W. Bush's presidency—89 percent—and compares to President Reagan's 100 percent rate of confirmation for nominees sent to the Senate before October 31, 1981.

Compare these rates to where we are under President Bush and Chairman LEAHY. President Bush has nominated 59 judicial nominees. Only eight have been confirmed—including the two the Senate confirmed tonight. That's a rate of 13.5 percent. If the Senate completes this session without raising this rate to the range of 88 to 100 percent, it will be a dramatic break with precedent and a great embarrassment to this entire body. This is especially true because today we have 108 vacancies in the federal judiciary. That means that 12.6 percent of federal judgeships are unfilled. These empty seats should especially concern us in light of the enormous law enforcement effort underway to investigate the recent terrorist attacks and to prevent any future terrorist events.

Today's 12.6 percent vacancy is atypical. Compare it to the rates at the conclusion of the three Congresses when Bill Clinton was President and I was Chairman of the Judiciary Committee. At the end of the 104th Congress, the vacancy rate was 7.7 percent. At the end of the 105th, it was 5.9 percent. And last year at the end of the 106th Congress, it was 7.9 percent. Ironically, some of the same people who constantly bemoaned the judicial vacancies when Bill Clinton was President are silent today despite the much larger number of vacancies.

Mr. President, the second point to which I want to respond is the implication that the lack of a Senate organizational resolution in June of this year precluded the Judiciary Committee from holding confirmation hearings on judicial nominees during the three weeks that elapsed between June 5, the date our Democratic colleagues assumed control of the Senate, and June 29, the date the Senate reached an agreement on reorganization. That implication arises from the statement that the Committee scheduled a hearing within minutes of the Senate reorganization. I am puzzled by these remarks, because I see no reason why the Committee could not have held confirmation hearings under Democratic control prior to reorganization.

The lack of an organizational resolution did not stop other Senate committees from holding confirmation hearings. In fact, by my count, after the change in Senate control, nine different Senate Committee Chairmen held 16 different nomination hearings for 44 different nominees before reorganization. One of these committees—Veterans' Affairs—even held a mark-up on a pending nomination. But in the same period of time, the Judiciary Committee did not hold a single confirmation hearing for any of the then 39 judicial and executive branch nominees pending before us—despite the fact that some of those nominees had been waiting nearly two months.

What's more, the lack of an organizational resolution did not prevent the Judiciary Committee from holding five hearings in three weeks on a variety of other issues besides pending nominations. Between June 5 and June 27, the Committee held hearings on the Federal Bureau of Investigation, the faith-based initiative, and death penalty cases. There were also subcommittee hearings on capital punishment and on injecting political ideology into the Committee's process of reviewing judicial nominations.

Although several members were not technically on the Committee until the Senate reorganization was completed, there was no reason why Senators who were slated to become official members of the Committee upon reorganization could not have been permitted to participate in any nomination hearings. This was successfully accomplished in the case of the confirmation hearing of Attorney General John Ashcroft, which was held when the Senate was similarly situated in January of this year. So, while I appreciate the Chairman's efforts, I am compelled to clarify that neither the lack of an organizational resolution nor any other factor prevented this Committee from holding confirmation hearings in June. Consequently, there is simply no significance to the fact that the scheduling of a hearing occurred in proximity to the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. President, the third point to which I want to respond is the use of a statistic: the number of months during my chairmanship in which no nominations hearings were held. I am not going to quibble over that particular number here tonight because I disagree with the whole idea that such a statistic could be relevant to any analysis of whether the Senate is performing its constitutional advice and consent function sufficiently.

Perhaps an analogy would help. Say you had a fire that is going to require 108 gallons of water to extinguish. And say that the person in charge of supplying you the water prefers to count in ''containers'' rather than gallons—but won't tell you how big the containers are or how much water is in them. Every time you say ''I need 108 gallons of water,'' he responds, ''I've already delivered several containers.''

My point is that, with 108 judicial vacancies in our courts, and only 8 of 59 nominees confirmed this year, it is not particularly useful to measure progress in terms of the number of hearings held. I suppose the Committee could hold 8 hearings to confirm 8 nominees if it wanted to, but the result would be no different than having a single hearing with 8 nominees. Although we cannot have confirmations without hearings, hearings are not an end in themselves. What matters is the number of judges confirmed to the bench.

The bottom line of the Chairmanship is that the Senate confirmed essentially the same number of judges for President Clinton as it did for President Reagan—only 5 fewer. This proves the Republicans were fair—especially because it was a six-year Republican-controlled Senate that confirmed 382 Reagan nominees, and a six-year Republican controlled Senate that confirmed 377 Clinton nominees. Some Democrats avoid discussing this bottom-line fairness because they know there is no partisan retort. So instead of working toward their own bottom-line number proving fairness to President Bush, some are focusing instead on the number of hearings held. In the end, the only statistic that matters is the number of confirmations. I urge the Democrats to get to work.

LEGISLATIVE SESSION

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate will return to legislative session.

Under the previous order, the Senator from Ohio is recognized.

FEDERALIZATION OF AVIATION SECURITY

Mr. DEWINE. Mr. President, let me first thank Senator HOLLINGS and Senator MCCAIN for their hard work and diligence in getting the aviation security bill passed this evening. I congratulate them for this accomplishment.

Let me also thank and commend my colleague from Montana, Senator BURNS, for his contribution to this bill. I cosponsored and I spoke earlier today in support of his amendment to put certain aspects of aviation security in the hands of the Justice Department.

I support this effort because the Justice Department is in the law enforcement and security business. The Department has a law enforcement mindset, a security mindset, and that is the mindset, a way of thinking, that is essential to making sure our airports and aircraft are safe and our people are secure.

Having said that, the bill we passed today, though it has some very good and very important provisions, also has, in my opinion, a very significant problem. That problem is the bill as currently written mandates all security functions at the Nation's major airports be handled exclusively by Federal employees. I believe this is a problem because this provision does not allow for the hiring flexibility necessary to protect the traveling public. How can this Congress say with absolute certainty that a 100-percent federalized security force will in every case do the best job in carrying out security measures? I do not think we really can say that.

The reality is we do not know right now. Yes, we do know we need the Federal Government to be in charge at our airports, and this bill, thank Heavens, does that. I also believe strongly that flexibility is key to determining the best makeup of the security workforce. Flexibility in hiring between Federal workers and private contractors is absolutely essential.

At the same time, we need the Government to establish and enforce higher, more stringent security standards. That is clear. The Government must set the security standards. The Government must be in charge. The Government must assess the risks, set the standards, and then test compliance with those standards. The standards, yes, must be strict and they must be tough and they must be comprehensive.

The public demands we do this, and the public is right. That does not necessarily mean a 100-percent federalized security workforce at our airports is in every case going to be the best security; that somehow a Federal takeover and full Government presence at our airports will restore the public's confidence in air travel. Rather, higher standards and enforcement of those standards by our Government will give the public back its trust in the system.

There are certainly gaps in our current airport security system. The way security works now is the airlines that have the biggest presence at a given airport usually are the ones responsible for hiring contract security employees. Not surprisingly, the jobs normally go to the lowest bidders. It should come as no shock that current security is not what it should be. Screeners of baggage are low-skilled, low-paid employees. Turnover is subsequently often as high as 100 percent in a given year, with the average employee today staying no longer than 6 months in that job.

The fact is, unless there is accountability, unless there is a way to ensure the security personnel are doing their jobs, we cannot protect the traveling public. If private sector personnel are not doing the job, we will and can cancel their contract. It is that simple. They have a very real and very practical incentive to do a good job.

Further, it is difficult for the Government to be in the business of ''regulating security'' and carrying out its actual operation. Other nations around the world don't do it that way. Israel, with one of the best security records and one of the most dangerous terrorist-ridden parts of the world, does not do it that way. They do not do what this bill mandates.

Most nations in Europe had total federalization, and now they have changed to a mixed system. Most of the countries in Europe, as the chart indicates, contract out well over a majority of the security operations while the government maintains the regulatory role.

The average Federal private personnel split in airport security across Europe is 85-percent private employees, mostly handling screening; 15 percent are government employees, performing the main law enforcement duties. The chart clearly shows this. European passenger screening is the responsibility of the government, not the airlines, but the European governments, in turn, have the flexibility to use either civil servants or private contractors to do the job. This works and it works very well. It is a public-private mix.

A recent FAA study found airport screeners in an unnamed European country were twice as likely as their American counterparts to spot dangerous items in scanned baggage. Additionally, in European airports they have a 2.5 times greater personnel outlay than in the United States. They pay more. The cost is 2½ times for security in Europe than in the United States. We see the results.

The fact is, privately contracted security personnel in Europe are seen as professionals. They take their jobs very seriously and the public respects that. It is no secret that there is a perception problem at home at our airports about the image of the current airport screening workforce. I understand that. But the way to repair that image is by setting better standards, repair that by raising the bar.

Like the U.S. Marshals I spoke about earlier today, the men and women tasked with protecting our Federal buildings and our courtrooms, we respect them. They do a fine job. The Marshal Service is able to do this great job largely because it sets high standards and then contracts out many of the functions of its security in the protection of our courtrooms and courthouses. For example, the Federal Marshal Service hires and manages about 3,300 contracted court security officers, CSOs. They are mostly, as we would expect, former law enforcement personnel who assist with the court security. They get the job done. They do it well. That blend works very well. The Marshal Service stays in charge, they are the professionals, but they contract out a portion of what they do.

There is no question we need to pay people better. We need to train them better, and we need to make this a professionalized workforce, one that gets respect and reflects the importance of the work they do. We need to think about things differently. The first step in doing so involves improving and enhancing security measures at our airports. That means we need better standards; we need better enforcement.

I hope by the time this bill reaches the President, we will have given the executive branch more flexibility. What we really need to do is to say to the executive branch and through our legislation, set higher standards. Then give them the job. Whether that is the Justice Department, the FAA, give the administration the job to get that job done and then hold them accountable.

When you give someone a job, when you say you are going to hold them accountable and when you set high standards but give them the obligation to get the job done, it only makes sense to allow them some flexibility in deciding how best to get that job done. Judge them by the results but give them the flexibility.

I hope we will look at this again, and by the time this bill finally reaches the President of the United States, we will give the President the tools he needs to get the job done for our security.

I yield the floor.

CARNAHAN AMENDMENT NO. 1855

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Ohio is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. VOINOVICH. Mr. President, I rise today to speak about fiscal responsibility. Before I begin, I take a moment to discuss the Carnahan amendment to the aviation security bill. First, I congratulate Senator MCCAIN and Senator HOLLINGS for the passage of the airport security bill. The passage of that bill is long overdue. It is needed to secure our airports and aviation and to build confidence in the American public.

One of the things that has gone unmentioned is most economists agree one of the best things we can do to get the economy off the ground is to get our airlines into the air.

My constituents in Ohio have a significant stake in this bill because Ohio has a significant aviation presence. In fact, with no disrespect to my good friends from North Carolina, Ohio is the birth place of aviation since the Wright brothers hailed from Dayton and honed their skills in Ohio. They just happened to test out the ''flyer'' at Kitty Hawk.

Today, a number of airlines have hubs in Ohio: Continental in Cleveland, Delta in Cincinnati, America West has a big presence in Columbus.

Thousands of men and women working in the airline industry are hurting. I greatly appreciate the effort of my colleague from Missouri to aid them. There is no question the aviation sector has suffered particularly hard from this economic downturn and was hit right in the eye with the terrorist attack on September 11. However, as my colleagues well know, there are tens of thousands around the country who have lost their jobs in the past few months. There are tens of thousands more who are facing tough times, particularly in manufacturing States such as Ohio. There are thousands of Ohioans who lost their jobs in the steel mills, in the polymer industry, and in the auto plants. According to the most recent statistics from the Ohio Department of Jobs and Family Services, 250,000 Ohioans today are unemployed. This figure is before September 11. Now, undoubtedly that number is larger. The vast majority of these workers would not benefit from the provisions of the Carnahan amendment.

It is very important that whatever assistance Congress renders to the workers of this Nation, it is not just restricted to a set of workers.

I would have offered an amendment to the airport security bill, but I felt it would delay the bill and I also felt it would be more properly a part of the economic stimulus package. I intend to offer an amendment to that package when it comes before the Senate. I hope that happens quite soon.

ALTERED FISCAL PRIORITIES

Mr. VOINOVICH. Mr. President, discussions of the budget that once dominated the news headlines have been eclipsed since the world was forever changed by the horrendous events of September 11, and no one knows more about those events than the Presiding Officer.

Perhaps one of the most significant changes resulting from the terrorist attacks is how significantly our fiscal priorities have been altered. Almost instantly the debate shifted from how to protect the Social Security surplus to how we should spend it to pay for counterterrorism and homeland defense efforts and stimulate the economy.

By necessity, this dramatic change in our fiscal situation calls for Congress to sort out our top priorities between those that existed before September 11 and which continue to demand our attention and our new priorities, defending our homeland, fighting terrorism, and boosting the economy. We will commit the resources that are needed to succeed in this challenge and we will obtain those resources in whatever way is necessary.

Some of my colleagues will remember that prior to the events of September 11 I was working closely with the administration and several of my colleagues on a bill designed to protect the Social Security surplus, control spending, and ensure debt reduction. That legislation had two exceptions: recession and war. If it had been in place, both of these exceptions would apply.

Having said that, I emphatically say to my colleagues that the need for fiscal discipline is greater now than ever before. It must not be a casualty of September 11. We still need to prioritize our spending and we still need to make hard choices. As I said, the events of September 11 changed everything, and they have also changed our fiscal outlook for years to come.

Over the past few fiscal years, sustained by peace, prosperity, and assuredness, our Nation has had record budget surpluses. Unfortunately, the existence of surpluses has had an undesirable effect. Congress has expanded the Government, created new programs, and dramatically increased spending in others. The speed at which the fiscal fortunes of the Federal Government have shifted is astounding. Almost 8 months ago, CBO projected we would run an on-budget surplus for fiscal year 2001 of $125 billion, as well as a $156 billion Social Security surplus—a total of $281 billion that was supposed to be used for debt reduction.

However, on September 26, the CBO released its monthly budget review and revealed a much different story. According to the CBO, when all is said and done the total unified budget surplus in fiscal year 2001 will be $121 billion, a change of $160 billion from the January estimate. This means Congress used $40 billion of the Social Security surplus to fund the general Government activities.

The news for fiscal year 2002 is equally sobering. Last week the Senate Budget Committee, working in a bipartisan manner, released new figures on the budget outlook for fiscal year 2002 through fiscal year 2011. The committee predicts that we are on track to spend the entire Social Security surplus in the 2002 fiscal year, and most or part of the Social Security surplus in the following year.

We see that on this chart. We show a $52 billion surplus, but the fact is, we are truly in deficit because we will be using $122 billion of Social Security in 2002, $125 billion in 2003, and so forth. So we are going to be using the Social Security surplus, according to this chart, all the way out to the year 2006.

I remind my colleagues the projected $52 billion unified surplus is a gross exaggeration of the possible surplus this year because we have pledged we are going to use $60 to $75 billion to stimulate the economy, which means we are going to wipe out this $52 billion surplus in 2002. In fact, we are going to have to borrow the money from the public to pay for the things we want to do.

I would like to remind my colleagues the bleak budget outlook I described goes way out into future years. The Senate Budget Committee projected we will spend significant portions of Social Security surpluses, as I mentioned, in 2003 to 2006.

I further remind my colleagues that these figures on this chart, as bad as they are, do not tell the whole story. These we are showing are based on a cost-of-living increase in spending based on inflation. Remember Congress spent 14.5 percent more in fiscal 2001 on nondefense discretionary spending than they did in fiscal year 2000. We should have no illusions that Congress is going to spend at the rate of inflation. I don't know of any time that Congress has spent money at the rate of inflation. As to these numbers on this chart, you might as well forget them. They are gone because the projections are based on inflationary increases and we know that is not going to be the case.

Our current crisis should not be used as an excuse to run up the tab for programs and projects not related to the war on terrorism or stimulating our economy. Now more than ever before we have to prioritize our funding and make tough choices. Do our spending choices put the safety of American lives at home and abroad front and center? Will they truly boost the economy? These are the questions that should be applied to every dollar Congress spends. Our current fiscal position does not allow for any unnecessary spending. Domestic needs must be reprioritized. Those of us who have been concerned about fiscal responsibility have to recommit ourselves to fiscal discipline. We have to make the tough choices to keep in check the urge to spend, keeping in mind we are spending the Nation's Social Security money with every additional dollar that goes out the door. Once it has gone out the door, we are then going to borrow that money from the public.

I am concerned that some proposals being considered in this Senate are inappropriate, given the long-term budget pressures we face. You will be hearing from me and hopefully many others about some of those proposals. If the stimulus package we put in place results in chronic budget deficits, it is going to drive up interest rates. And make no mistake about it, the financial markets are closely watching what we do. If they see Congress taking actions that will steer the Federal Government towards persistent deficits, they will drive interest rates higher. Higher interest rates will have exactly the opposite effect on the economy from what we want. They would put a brake on the economy by raising consumers' interest payments and discouraging economic activity.

Remember, low interest rates are important to the economy. In fact, Federal Reserve Chairman Alan Greenspan has been quite clear about this as he has highlighted this to many of us.

I think this is very important. This is not merely an academic exercise. The recent rise in long-term interest rates is attributed to the deteriorating budget condition of the Federal Government in the past few weeks. As my colleagues know, Congress will consider a true stimulus package in the near future. Helping America's workers, all workers, should be and will be a part of that package and should be our No. 1 priority.

The stimulus package can only be so big. So it is critical that we touch as many Americans as possible. All of them should participate in that economic stimulus package. That same message applies to the money we allocate to fight terrorism at home and abroad. We need to prioritize and we need to get the biggest bang for our buck, literally and figuratively.

We in this body must never lose sight that the day of reckoning with the baby boomer retirement has not been put off by our current crisis. Like it or not, the baby boomers will begin to retire in about 10 years, and if we fail to act, we will put an unacceptable burden on our children and grandchildren. We face an important challenge in preparing for that day. Our goal should be to fund our war on terrorism at home and abroad, respond to the needs of the victims of the terrorist attack in New York and here in Washington, get our economy going, and as soon as possible end deficit spending. We owe it to our children and grandchildren.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Utah is recognized.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, what is the parliamentary situation under the unanimous consent request?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is nothing pending before the Senate.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I yield to the Democratic leader.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I appreciate the Senator yielding.

On behalf of Senator DASCHLE, I now ask that the Senate consider S. 1510.

UNITING AND STRENGTHENING AMERICA ACT

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the bill by title.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 1510) to deter and punish terrorist acts in the United States and around the world, to enhance law enforcement investigatory tools, and for other purposes.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, what is the time agreement that we are now operating under?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There are 4 hours equally divided. In addition, there are 40 minutes on each of the four amendments to be offered by the Senator from Wisconsin, Mr. FEINGOLD.

Mr. LEAHY. I thank the distinguished Presiding Officer.

I cannot help but think in looking at our distinguished Presiding Officer, the senior Senator from New York, how much his State has suffered. Both he and his distinguished colleague, Senator CLINTON, have spoken so eloquently, both on the floor and elsewhere, about that. I know in my own private conversations with the distinguished Presiding Officer I felt the depth of his grief and emotion for a city that he obviously and unabashedly loves. His references to New York City over the years are almost similar to the kind of comments I make about Vermont. But I do note the accent is somewhat different. I assume it is because of the Vermont accent.

But I think the Senators from New York, and the Senators from New Jersey and Connecticut have especially spoken of the effect on families and loved ones in the New York City area. People who work there are from New York, New Jersey, and Connecticut. I know how sad they feel.

I think of the people who died in Pennsylvania in an airplane that was probably planning to strike the very building we are in—this symbol of democracy. Only with a great loss of life did it not happen. But there would be an enormous disruption in our Government. The next day, the view that most people around the world have—our symbol of democracy—would be gone.

I think of the brave men and women who died, as the President and others have said, doing their duty at the Pentagon, and the hundreds—even thousands—of children who went to school happily in the morning and came home to find that they were orphans.

It was a terrible, terrible day.

I think back to what happened in Oklahoma City in 1995 and the actions we took then. We are moving, of course, much faster now than we did at that time, and I hope perhaps with more care on legislation.

We have before us the USA Act of 2001. I worked with Chairman SENSENBRENNER and Congressman CONYERS and Republican and Democratic leaders in the House because I hope Congress can act swiftly to enact this measure.

Some may be concerned if we have a conference—because the House is somewhat different than the Senate—that we could take a year or more to resolve these issues. That happened after Oklahoma City. That legislation took nearly a year to reconcile.

I believe the American people and my fellow Senators, both Republican and Democratic, deserve faster final action.

I assure the Senate, when we go to conference, we will complete that conference very quickly. We have demonstrated the ability in this body—and also Senators who have worked with me on both sides of the aisle and our staff—that we can work around the clock.

The distinguished senior Senator from Utah, Mr. HATCH, and I have been working together in constant communication with our staffs.

Last Thursday, October 4, I was pleased to introduce, along with the majority leader, Senator DASCHLE, and the Republican leader, Senator LOTT, also the chairmen of the Banking and Intelligence Committees, Senator SARBANES, Senator GRAHAM of Florida, Senator HATCH, and Senator SHELBY, the USA Act.

I must say this bill is not the bill I would have written if I were the only one writing it. I daresay it is not the bill the distinguished Presiding Officer, one of the brightest and most accomplished people I know, would have written, if he were writing it. It is not the bill the distinguished chairman of the Banking Committee would have written if he were writing it. It is not the bill the distinguished ranking member, Mr. HATCH, would have written when he was chairman, if he was solely writing the bill. It is really not the bill that any one of the other Members would have written. We can't pass 100 bills.

We have tried to put together the best possible bill. Of course, Republican and Democratic colleagues must come together, and that is what we did.

I should point out that this is not the bill the administration, through the Attorney General, delivered to us and asked for immediate passage. We actually did the administration a favor because rather than take the bill they dropped in our laps and said pass immediately, we did something that apparently they had not done. We read it and were able to refine and supplement their proposal in a number of ways. We were able to remove a number of unconstitutional parts. The administration accepted a number of practical steps that I proposed to improve our security on the Northern Border to assist our State, Federal, and local law enforcement officers and provide compensation to the victims of terrorist acts and to the public safety officers that gave their lives to protect us.

It also provides proposed checks on Government powers—checks that were not contained in the Attorney General's initial proposal.

In negotiations with the administration, I have done my best to strike a reasonable balance between the need to address the threat of terrorism, which we all keenly feel at the present time, and the need to protect our constitutional freedoms. Despite my misgivings, I have acquiesced in some of the administration's proposals because it is important to preserve national unity in this time of national crisis and to move the legislative process forward.

We still have room for improvement. Even after the Senate passes judgment on this bill—I believe it will tonight—the debate is not going to be finished because we have to consider those important things done in the other body.

What I have done throughout this time is to remember the words of Benjamin Franklin—when he literally had his neck on the line because if the Revolution had failed, he and the others would have been hanged—when he said: A people who would trade their liberty for security deserve neither.

We protected our security, but I am not going to give up the liberties that Americans have spent 220 years to obtain.

Moreover, our ability to make rapid progress was impeded because the negotiations with the Administration did not progress in a straight line. On several key issues that are of particular concern to me, we had reached an agreement with the Administration on Sunday, September 30. Unfortunately, within two days, the Administration announced that it was reneging on the deal. I appreciate the complex task of considering the concerns and missions of multiple federal agencies, and that sometimes agreements must be modified as their implications are scrutinized by affected agencies. When agreements made by the Administration must be withdrawn and negotiations on resolved issues reopened, those in the Administration who blame the Congress for delay with what the New York Times described last week as ''scurrilous remarks,'' do not help the process move forward.

Hearings. We have expedited the legislative process in the Judiciary Committee to consider the Administration's proposals. In daily news conferences, the Attorney General has referred to the need for such prompt consideration. I commend him for making the time to appear before the Judiciary Committee at a hearing September 25 to respond to questions that Members from both parties have about the Administration's initial proposals. I also thank the Attorney General for extending the hour and a half he was able to make in his schedule for the hearing for another fifteen minutes so that Senator FEINSTEIN and Senator SPECTER were able to ask questions before his departure. I regret that the Attorney General did not have the time to respond to questions from all the Members of the committee either on September 25 or last week, but again thank him for the attention he promised to give to written questions Members submitted about the legislation. We have not received answers to those written questions yet, but I will make them a part of the hearing whenever they are sent.

The Chairman of the Constitution Subcommittee, Senator FEINGOLD, also held an important hearing on October 3 on the civil liberties ramifications of the expanded surveillance powers requested by the Administration. I thank him for his assistance in illuminating these critical issues for the Senate.

Rule 14. To accede to the Administration's request for prompt consideration of this legislation, the Leaders decided to hold the USA Act at the desk rather than refer the bill to the Committee for mark-up, as is regular practice. Senator HATCH specifically urged that this occur and I support this decision. Indeed, when the Senate considered the anti-terrorism act in 1995 after the Oklahoma City bombing, we bypassed Committee in order to deal with the legislation more promptly on the floor.

Given the expedited process that we have used to move this bill, I will take more time than usual to detail its provisions.

Victims. The heart of every American aches for those who died or have been injured because of the tragic terrorist attacks in New York, Virginia, and Pennsylvania on September 11th. Even now, we cannot assess the full measure of this attack in terms of human lives, but we know that the number of casualties is extraordinarily high.

Congress acted swiftly to help the victims of September 11th. Within 10 days, we passed legislation to establish a Victims Compensation Program, which will provide fair compensation to those most affected by this national tragedy. I am proud of our work on that legislation, which will expedite payments to thousands of Americans whose lives were so suddenly shattered.

But now more than ever, we should remember the tens of thousands of Americans whose needs are not being met—the victims of crimes that have not made the national headlines. Just one day before the events that have so transformed our nation, I came before this body to express my concern that we were not doing more for crime victims. I noted that the pace of victims legislation has slowed, and that many opportunities for progress had been squandered. I suggested that this year, we had a golden opportunity to make significant progress in this area by passing S. 783, the Leahy-Kennedy Crime Victims Assistance Act of 2001.

I am pleased, therefore, that the antiterrorism package now before the Senate contains substantial portions of S. 783 aimed at refining the Victims of Crime Act of 1984 (VOCA), and improving the manner in which the Crime Victims Fund is managed and preserved. Most significantly, section 621 of the USA Act will eliminate the cap on VOCA spending, which has prevented more than $700 million in Fund deposits from reaching victims and supporting essential services.

Congress has capped spending from the Fund for the last two fiscal year, and President Bush has proposed a third cap for fiscal year 2002. These limits on VOCA spending have created a growing sense of confusion and unease by many of those concerned about the future of the Fund.

We should not be imposing artificial caps on VOCA spending while substantial unmet needs continue to exist. Section 621 of the USA Act replaces the cap with a self-regulating system that will ensure stability and protection of Fund assets, while allowing more money to be distributed to the States for victim compensation and assistance.

Other provisions included from S. 783 will also make an immediate difference in the lives of victims, including victims of terrorism. Shortly after the Oklahoma City bombing, I proposed and the Congress adopted the Victims of Terrorism Act of 1995. This legislation authorized the Office for Victims of Crime (OVC) to set aside an emergency reserve of up to $50 million as part of the Crime Victims Fund. The emergency reserve was intended to serve as a ''rainy day'' fund to supplement compensation and assistance grants to States to provide emergency relief in the wake of an act of terrorism or mass violence that might otherwise overwhelm the resources of a State's crime victim compensation program and crime victim assistance services. Last month's disaster created vast needs that have all but depleted the reserve. Section 621 of the USA Act authorizes OVC to replenish the reserve with up to $50 million, and streamlines the mechanism for replenishment in future years.

Another critical provision of the USA Act will enable OVC to provide more immediate and effective assistance to victims of terrorism and mass violence occurring within the United States. I proposed this measure last year as an amendment to the Justice for Victims of Terrorism Act, but was compelled to drop it to achieve bipartisan consensus. I am pleased that we are finally getting it done this year.

These and other VOCA reforms in the USA Act are long overdue. Yet, I regret that we are not doing more. In my view, we should pass the Crime Victims Assistance Act in its entirety. In addition to the provisions that are included in today's antiterrorism package, this legislation provides for comprehensive reform of Federal law to establish enhanced rights and protections for victims of Federal crime. It also proposes several programs to help States provide better assistance for victims of State crimes.

I also regret that we have not done more for other victims of recent terrorist attacks. While all Americans are numbed by the heinous acts of September 11th, we should not forget the victims of the 1998 embassy bombings in East Africa. Eleven Americans and many Kenyan and Tanzanian nationals employed by the United States lost their lives in that tragic incident. It is my understanding that compensation to the families of these victims has in many instances fallen short. It is my hope that OVC will use a portion of the newly replenished reserve fund to remedy any inequity in the way that these individuals have been treated.

Hate crimes. We cannot speak of the victims of the September 11 without also noting that Arab-Americans and Muslims in this country have become the targets of hate crimes, harassment, and intimidation. I applaud the President for speaking out against and condemning such acts, and visiting a mosque to demonstrate by action that all religions are embraced in this country. I also commend the FBI Director for his periodic reports on the number of hate crime incidents against Arab-American and Muslims that the FBI is aggressively investigating and making clear that this conduct is taken seriously and will be punished.

The USA Act contains, in section 102, a sense of the Congress that crimes and discrimination against Arab and Muslim Americans are condemned. Many of us would like to do more, and finally enact effective hate crimes legislation, but the Administration has asked that the debate on that legislation be postponed. One of my greatest regrets regarding the negotiations in this bill was the objections that prevented the Local Law Enforcement Enhancement Act, S. 625, from being included in the USA Act.

State and local law enforcement. The Administration's initial proposal was entirely focused on Federal law enforcement. Yet, we must remember that state and local law enforcement officers have critical roles to play in preventing and investigating terrorist acts. I am pleased that the USA Act we consider today recognizes this fact.

As a former State prosecutor, I know that State and local law enforcement officers are often the first responders to a crime. On September 11th, the nation saw that the first on the scene were the heroic firefighters, police officers and emergency personnel in New York City. These New York public safety officers, many of whom gave the ultimate sacrifice, remind us of how important it is to support our State and local law enforcement partners. The USA Act provides three critical measures of Federal support for our State and local law enforcement officers in the war against terrorism.

First, we streamline and expedite the Public Safety Officers' Benefits application process for family members of fire fighters, police officers and rescue workers who perish or suffer a disabling injury in connection with prevention, investigation, rescue or recovery efforts related to a future terrorist attack.

The Public Safety Officers' Benefits Program provides benefits for each of the families of law enforcement officers, firefighters, and emergency response crew members who are killed or disabled in the line of duty. Current regulations, however, require the families of public safety officers who have fallen in the line of duty to go through a cumbersome and time-consuming application process. In the face of our national fight against terrorism, it is important that we provide a quick process to support the families of brave Americans who selflessly give their lives so that others might live before, during and after a terrorist attack.

This provision builds on the new law championed by Senator CLINTON, Senator SCHUMER and Congressman NADLER to speed the benefit payment process for families of public safety officers killed in the line of duty in New York City, Virginia, and Western Pennsylvania, on September 11.

Second, we have raised the total amount of Public Safety Officers' Benefit Program payments from approximately $150,000 to $250,000. This provision retroactively goes into effort to provide much-needed relief for the families of the brave men and women who sacrificed their own lives for their fellow Americans during the year. Although this increase in benefits can never replace a family's tragic loss, it is the right thing to do for the families of our fallen heroes. I want to thank Senator BIDEN and Senator HATCH for their bipartisan leadership on this provision.

Third, we expand the Department of Justice Regional Information Sharing Systems Program to promote information sharing among Federal, State and local law enforcement agencies to investigate and prosecute terrorist conspiracies and activities and authorize a doubling of funding for this year and next year. The RISS Secure Intranet is a nationwide law enforcement network that already allows secure communications among the more than 5,700 Federal, State and local law enforcement agencies. Effective communication is key to effective law enforcement efforts and will be essential in our national fight against terrorism.

The RISS program enables its member agencies to send secure, encrypted communications—whether within just one agency or from one agency to another. Federal agencies, such as the FBI, do not have this capability, but recognize the need for it. Indeed, on September 11, 2001, immediately after the terrorist attacks, FBI Headquarters called RISS officials to request ''Smartgate'' cards and readers to secure their communications systems. The FBI agency in Philadelphia called soon after to request more Smartgate cards and readers as well.

The Regional Information sharing Systems Program is a proven success that we need to expand to improve secure information sharing among Federal, State and local law enforcement agencies to coordinate their counterterrorism efforts.

Our State and local law enforcement partners welcome the challenge to join in our national mission to combat terrorism. We cannot ask State and local law enforcement officers to assume these new national responsibilities without also providing new Federal support. The USA Act provides the necessary Federal support for our State and local law enforcement officers to serve as full partners in our fight against terrorism.

I am deeply troubled by continuing reports that information is not being shared with state local law enforcement. In particular, the testimony of Baltimore Police Chief Ed Norris before the House Government Reform Committee last week highlighted the current problem.

Northern borders. The unfolding facts about how the terrorists who committed the September 11 attack were able to enter this country without difficulty are chilling. Since the attacks many have pointed to our northern border as vulnerable to the entry of future terrorists. This is not surprising when a simple review of the numbers shows that the northern border has been routinely short-changed in personnel. While the number of border patrol agents along the southern border has increased over the last few years to over 8,000, the number at the northern border has remained the same as a decade ago at 300. This remains true despite the fact that Admad Ressam, the Algerian who planned to blow up the Los Angeles International Airport in 1999, and who has been linked to those involved in the September 11 attacks, chose to enter the United States at our northern border. It will remain an inviting target until we dramatically improve our security.

The USA Act includes my proposals to provide the substantial and long overdue assistance for our law enforcement and border control efforts along the Northern Border. My home state of Vermont has seen huge increases in customs and INS activity since the signing of NAFTA. The number of people coming through our borders has risen steeply over the years, but our staff and our resources have not.

I proposed—and this legislation authorizes in section 402—tripling the number of Border Patrol, INS inspectors, and customs Service employees in each of the States along the 4,000-mile Northern Border. I was gratified when 22 Senators—Democrats and Republicans—wrote to the President supporting such an increase, and I am pleased that the Administration agreed that this critical law enforcement improvement should be included in the bill. Senators CANTWELL and SCHUMER in the Committee and Senators MURRAY and DORGAN have been especially strong advocates of these provisions and I thank them for their leadership. In addition, the USA Act, in section 401, authorizes the Attorney General to waive the FTE cap on INS personnel in order to address the national security needs of the United States on the northern border. Now more than ever, we must patrol our border vigilantly and prevent those who wish America harm from gaining entry. At the same time, we must work with the Canadians to allow speedy crossing to legitimate visitors and foster the continued growth of trade which is beneficial to both countries.

In addition to providing for more personnel, this bill also includes, in section 402(4), my proposal to provide $100 million in funding for both the INS and the Customs Service to improve the technology used to monitor the Northern Border and to purchase additional equipment. The bill also includes, in section 403(c), an important provisions from Senator CANTWELL directing the Attorney General, in consultation with other agencies, to develop a technical standard for identifying electronically the identity of persons applying for visas or seeking to enter the United States. In short, this bill provides a comprehensive high-tech boost for the security of our nation.

This bill also includes important proposals to enhance data sharing. The bill, in section 403, directs the Attorney General and the FBI Director to give the State Department and INS access to the criminal history information in the FBI's National Crime Information Center (NCIC) database, as the Administration and I both proposed. The Attorney General is directed to report back to the Congress in two years on progress in implementing this requirement. We have also adopted the Administration's language, in section 413, to make it easier for the State Department to share information with foreign governments for aid in terrorist investigations.

Criminal justice improvements. The USA Act contains a number of provisions intended to improve and update the federal criminal code to address better the nature of terrorist activity, assist the FBI in translating foreign language information collected, and ensure that federal prosecutors are unhindered by conflicting local rules of conduct to get the job done. I will mention just a few of these provisions.

FBI translators. The truth certainly seems self-evident that all the best surveillance techniques in the world will not help this country defend itself from terrorist attack if the information cannot be understood in a timely fashion. Indeed, within days of the September 11, the FBI Director issued an employment ad on national TV by calling upon those who speak Arabic to apply for a job as an FBI translator. This is a dire situation that needs attention. I am therefore gratified that the Administration accepted by proposal, in section 205, to waive any federal personnel requirements and limitations imposed by any other law in order to expedite the hiring of translators at the FBI.

This bill also directs the FBI Director to establish such security requirements as are necessary for the personnel employed as translators. We know the effort to recruit translators has a high priority, and the Congress should provide all possible support. Therefore, the bill calls on the Attorney General to report to the Judiciary Committees on the number of translators employed by the Justice Department, any legal or practical impediments to using translators employed by other Federal, State, or local agencies, on a full, part-time, or shared basis; and the needs of the FBI for specific translation services in certain languages, and recommendations for meeting those needs.

Federal crime of terrorism. The Administration's initial proposal assembled a laundry list of more than 40 Federal crimes ranging from computer hacking to malicious mischief to the use of weapons of mass destruction, and designated them as ''Federal terrorism offenses,'' regardless of the circumstances under which they were committed. For example, a teenager who spammed the NASA website and, as a result, recklessly caused damage, would be deemed to have committed this new ''terrorism'' offense. Under the Administration's proposal, the consequences of this designation were severe. Crimes on the list would carry no statute of limitations. The maximum penalties would shoot up to life imprisonment, and those released earlier would be subject to a lifetime of supervised release. Moreover, anyone who harbored a person whom he had ''reasonable grounds to suspect'' had committed, or was about to commit, a ''Federal terrorism offense''—whether it was the Taliban or the mother of my hypothetical teenage computer hacker—would be subject to stiff criminal penalties. I worked closely with the Administration to ensure that the definition of ''terrorism'' in the USA Act fit the crime.

First, we have trimmed the list of crimes that may be considered as terrorism predicates in section 808 of the bill. This shorter, more focused list, to be codified at 18 U.S.C. §2332(g)(5)(B), more closely reflects the sorts of offenses committed by terrorists.

Second, we have provided, in section 810, that the current 8-year limitations period for this new set of offenses will remain in place, except where the commission of the offense resulted in, or created a risk of, death or serious bodily injury.

Third, rather than make an across-the-board, one-size-fits-all increase of the penalties for every offense on the list, without regard to the severity of the offense, we have made, in section 811, more measured increases in maximum penalties where appropriate, including life imprisonment or lifetime supervised release in cases in which the offense resulted in death. We have also added, in section 812, conspiracy provisions to a few criminal statutes where appropriate, with penalties equal to the penalties for the object offense, up to life imprisonment.

Finally, we have more carefully defined the new crime of harboring terrorists in section 804, so that it applies only to those harboring people who have committed, or are about to commit, the most serious of federal terrorism-related crimes, such as the use of weapons of mass destruction. Moreover, it is not enough that the defendant had ''reasonable grounds to suspect'' that the person he was harboring had committed, or was about to commit, such a crime; the government must prove that the defendant knew or had ''reasonable grounds to believe'' that this was so.

McDade fix. The massive investigation underway into who was responsible for and assisted in carrying out the September 11 attacks stretches across state and national boundaries. While the scope of the tragedy is unsurpassed, the disregard for state and national borders of this criminal conspiracy is not unusual. Federal investigative officers and prosecutors often must follow leads and conduct investigations outside their assigned jurisdictions. At the end of the 105th Congress, a legal impediment to such multi-jurisdiction investigations was slipped into the omnibus appropriations bill, over the objection at the time of every member of the Senate Judiciary Committee.

I have spoken many times over the past two years of the problems caused by the so-called McDade law, 28 U.S.C. §530B. According to the Justice Department, the McDade law has delayed important criminal investigations, prevented the use of effective and traditionally-accepted investigative techniques, and served as the basis of litigation to interfere with legitimate federal prosecutions. At a time when we need federal law enforcement authorities to move quickly to catch those responsible for the September 11th attacks, and to prevent further attacks on our country, we can no longer tolerate the drag on federal investigations and prosecutions caused by this ill-considered legislation.

On September 19th, I introduced S. 1437, the Professional Standards for Government Attorneys Act of 2001, along with Senators HATCH and WYDEN. This bill proposes to modify the McDade law by establishing a set of rules that clarify the professional standards applicable to government attorneys. I am delighted that the Administration recognized the importance of S. 1437 for improving federal law enforcement and combating terrorism, and agreed to its inclusion as section 501 of the USA Act.

The first part of section 501 embodies the traditional understanding that when lawyers handle cases before a Federal court, they should be subject to the Federal court's standards of professional responsibility, and not to the possibly inconsistent standards of other jurisdictions. By incorporating this ordinary choice-of-law principle, the bill preserves the Federal courts' traditional authority to oversee the professional conduct of Federal trial lawyers, including Federal prosecutors. It thus avoids the uncertainties presented by the McDade law, which potentially subjects Federal prosecutors to State laws, rules of criminal procedure, and judicial decisions which differ from existing Federal law.

Another part of section 501 specifically addresses the situation in Oregon, where a state court ruling has seriously impeded the ability of Federal agents to engage in undercover operations and other covert activities. See In re Gatti, 330 Or. 517 (2000). Such activities are legitimate and essential crime-fighting tools. The Professional Standards for Government Attorneys Act ensures that these tools will be available to combat terrorism.

Finally, section 501 addresses the most pressing contemporary question of government attorney ethics—namely, the question of which rule should govern government attorneys' communications with represented persons. It asks the Judicial Conference of the United States to submit to the Supreme Court a proposed uniform national rule to govern this area of professional conduct, and to study the need for additional national rules to govern other areas in which the proliferation of local rules may interfere with effective Federal law enforcement. The Rules Enabling Act process is the ideal one for developing such rules, both because the Federal judiciary traditionally is responsible for overseeing the conduct of lawyers in Federal court proceedings, and because this process would best provide the Supreme Court an opportunity fully to consider and objectively to weigh all relevant considerations.

The problems posed to Federal law enforcement investigations and prosecutions by the McDade law are real and urgent. The Professional Standards for Government Attorneys Act provides a reasonable and measured alternative: It preserves the traditional role of the State courts in regulating the conduct of attorneys licensed to practice before them, while ensuring that Federal prosecutors and law enforcement agents will be able to use traditional Federal investigative techniques. We need to pass this corrective legislation before more cases are compromised.

Terrorist attacks against mass transportation systems. Another provision of the USA Act that was not included in the Administration's initial proposal is section 801, which targets acts of terrorism and other violence against mass transportation systems. Just last week, a Greyhound bus crashed in Tennessee after a deranged passenger slit the driver's throat and then grabbed the steering wheel, force the bus into the oncoming traffic. Six people were killed in the crash. Because there are currently no federal law addressing terrorism of mass transportation systems, however, there may be no federal jurisdiction over such as case, even if it were committed by suspected terrorists. Clearly, there is an urgent need for strong criminal legislation to deter attacks against mass transportation systems. Section 801 will fill this gap.

Cybercrime. The Computer Fraud and Abuse Act, 18 U.S.C. §1030, is the primary federal criminal statue prohibiting computer frauds and hacking. I worked with Senator HATCH in the last Congress to make improvements to this law in the Internet Security Act, which passed the Senate as part of another bill. Our work is included in section 815 of the USA Act. This section would amend the statute to clarify the appropriate scope of federal jurisdiction. First, the bill adds a definition of ''loss'' to cover any reasonable cost to the victim in responding to a computer hacker. Calculation of loss is important both in determining whether the $5,000 jurisdictional hurdle in the statute is met, and, at sentencing, in calculating the appropriate guideline range and restitution amount.

Second, the bill amends the definitions of ''protected computer'' to include qualified computers even when they are physically located outside of the United States. This clarification will preserve the ability of the United States to assist in internal hacking cases.

Finally, this section eliminates the current directive to the Sentencing Commission requiring that all violations, including misdemeanor violations, of certain provisions of the Computer Fraud and Abuse Act be punished with a term of imprisonment of at least six months.

Biological weapons. Borrowing from a bill introduced in the last Congress By Senator BIDEN, the USA Act contains a provision in section 802 to strengthen our federal laws relating to the threat of biological weapons. Current law prohibits the possession, development, or acquisition of biological agents or toxins ''for use as a weapon.'' This section amends the definition of ''for use as a weapon'' to include all situations in which it can be proven that the defendant had any purpose other than a peaceful purpose. This will enhance the government's ability to prosecute suspected terrorists in possession of biological agents or toxins, and conform the scope of the criminal offense in 18 U.S.C. §175 more closely to the related forfeiture provision in 18 U.S.C. §176. This section also contains a new statute, 18 U.S.C. §175b, which generally makes it an offense for certain restricted persons, including non-resident aliens from countries that support international terrorism, to possess a listed biological agent or toxin.

Of greater consequence, section 802 defines another additional offense, punishable by up to 10 years in prison, of possessing a biological agent, toxin, or delivery system ''of a type or in a quantity that, under the circumstances,'' is not reasonably justified by a peaceful purpose. As originally proposed by the Administration, this provision specifically stated that knowledge of whether the type or quantity of the agent or toxin was reasonably justified was not an element of the offense. Thus, although the burden of proof is always on the government, every person who possesses a biological agent, toxin, or delivery system was at some level of risk. I am pleased that the Administration agreed to drop this portion of the provision.

Nevertheless, I remain troubled by the subjectivity of the substantive standard for violation of this new criminal prohibition, and question whether it provides sufficient notice under the Constitution. I also share the concerns of the American Society for Microbiology and the Association of American Universities that this provision will have a chilling effect upon legitimate scientific inquiry that offsets any benefit in protecting against terrorism. While we have tried to prevent against this by creating an explicit exclusion for ''bona fide research,'' this provision may yet prove unworkable, unconstitutional, or both. I urge the Justice Department and the research community to work together on substitute language that would provide prosecutors with a more workable tool.

Secret Service jurisdiction. Two sections of the USA Act were added at the request of the United States Secret Service, with the support of the Administration. I was pleased to accommodate the Secret Service by including these provisions in the bill to expand Electronic Crimes Task Force and to clarify the authority of the Secret Service to investigator computer crimes.

The Secret Service is committed to the development of new tools to combat the growing areas of financial crime, computer fraud, and cyberterrorism. Recognizing a need for law enforcement, private industry and academia to pool their resources, skills and revision to combat criminal elements in cyberspace, the Secret Service created the New York Electronic Crimes Task Force (NYECTF). This highly successful model is comprised of over 250 individual members, including 50 different Federal, State and local enforcement agencies, 100 private companies, and 9 universities. Since its inception in 1995, the NYECTF has successfully investigated a range of financial and electronic crimes, including credit card fraud, identify theft, bank fraud, computer systems intrusions, and e-mail threats against protectees of the Secret Service. Section 105 of the USA Act authorizes the Secret Service to develop similar task forces in cities and regions across the country where critical infrastructure may be vulnerable to attacks from terrorists or other cyber-criminals.

Section 507 of the USA Act gives the Secret Service concurrent jurisdiction to investigate offenses under 18 U.S.C. §1030. relating to fraud and related activity in connection with computers. Prior to the 1996 amendments to the Computer Fraud and Abuse Act, the Secret Service was authorized to investigate any an all violations of section 1030, pursuant to an agreement between the Secretary of Treasury and the Attorney General. The 1996 amendments, however, concentrated Secret Service jurisdiction on certain specified subsections of section 1030. The current amendment would return full jurisdiction to the Secret Service and would allow the Justice and Treasury Departments to decide on the appropriate work-sharing balance between the two. This will enable the Secret Service to investigate a wide range of potential White House network intrusions, as well as intrusions into remote sites (outside of the White House) that could impact the safety and security of its protectees, and to continue its mission to protect the nation's critical infrastructure and financial payment systems.

Counter-terrorism Fund. The USA Act also authorizes, for the first time, a counter-terrorism fund in the Treasury of the United States to reimburse Justice Department for any costs incurred in connection with the fight against terrorism.

Specifically, this counter-terrorism fund will: (1) reestablish an office or facility that has been damaged as the result of any domestic or international terrorism incident; (2) provide support to counter, investigate, or prosecute domestic or international terrorism, including paying rewards in connection with these activities; (3) conduct terrorism threat assessments of Federal agencies; and (4) for costs incurred in connection with detaining individuals in foreign countries who are accused of acts of terrorism in violation of United States law.

I first authored this counter-terrorism fund in the S. 1319, the 21st Century Department of Justice Appropriations Authorization Act, which Senator HATCH and I introduced in August.

Enhanced surveillance procedures. The USA Act provides enhanced surveillance procedures for the investigation of terrorism and other crimes. The challenge before us has been to strike a reasonable balance to protect both security and the liberties of our people. In some respects, the changes made are appropriate and important ones to update surveillance and investigative procedures in light of new technology and experience with current law. Yet, in other respects, I have deep concerns that we may be increasing surveillance powers and the sharing of criminal justice information without adequate checks on how information may be handled and without adequate accountability in the form of judicial review.

The bill contains a number of sensible proposals that should not be controversial.

Wiretap predicates. For example, sections 201 and 202 of the USA Act would add to the list of crimes that may be used as predicates for wiretaps certain offenses which are specifically tailored to the terrorist threat. In addition to crimes that relate directly to terrorism, the list would include crimes of computer fraud and abuse which are committed by terrorists to support and advance their illegal objectives.

FISA roving wiretraps. The bill, in section 206, would authorize the use of roving wiretaps in the course of a foreign intelligence investigation and brings FISA into line with criminal procedures that allow surveillance to follow a person, rather than requiring a separate court order identifying each telephone company or other communication common carrier whose assistance is needed. This is a matter on which the Attorney General and I reached early agreement. This is the kind of change that has a compelling justification, because it recognizes the ease with which targets of investigations can evade surveillance by changing phones. In fact, the original roving wiretap authority for use in criminal investigations was enacted as part of the Electronic Communications Privacy Act (ECPA) in 1986. I was proud to be the primary Senate sponsor of that earlier law.

Paralleling the statutory rules applicable to criminal investigations, the formulation I originally proposed made clear that this roving wiretap authority must be requested in the application before the FISA court was authorized to order such roving surveillance authority. Indeed, the Administration agrees that the FISA court may not grant such authority sua sponte. Nevertheless, we have accepted the Administration's formulation of the new roving wiretap authority, which requires the FISA court to make a finding that the actions of the person whose communications are to be intercepted could have the effect of thwarting the identification of a specified facility or place. While no amendment is made to the statutory directions for what must be included in the application for a FISA electronic surveillance order, these applications should include the necessary information to support the FISA court's finding that roving wiretap authority is warranted.

Search warrants. The USA Act, in section 219, authorizes nationwide service of search warrants in terrorism investigations. This will allow the judge who is most familiar with the developments in a fast-breaking and complex terrorism investigation to make determinations of probable cause, no matter where the property to be searched is located. This will not only save time by avoiding having to bring up-to-speed another judge in another jurisdiction where the property is located, but also serves privacy and Fourth Amendment interests in ensuring that the most knowledgeable judge makes the determination of probable cause. The bill, in section 209, also authorizes voice mail messages to be seized on the authority of a probable cause search warrant rather than through the more burdensome and time-consuming process of a wiretap.

Electronic records. The bill updates the laws pertaining to electronic records in three primary ways. First, in section 210, the bill authorizes the nationwide service of subpoenas for subscriber information and expands the list of items subject to subpoena to include the means and source of payment for the service.

Second, in section 211, the bill equalizes the standard for law enforcement access to cable subscriber records on the same basis as other electronic records. The Cable Communications Policy Act, passed in 1984 to regulate various aspects of the cable television industry, did not take into account the changes in technology that have occurred over the last fifteen years. Cable television companies now often provide Internet access and telephone service in addition to television programming. This amendment clarifies that a cable company must comply with the laws governing the interception and disclosure of wire and electronic communications just like any other telephone company or Internet service provider. The amendments would retain current standards that govern the release of customer records for television programming.

Finally, the bill, in section 212, permits, but does not require, an electronic communications service to disclose the contents of and subscriber information about communications in emergencies involving the immediate danger of death or serious physical injury. Under current law, if an ISP's customer receives an e-mail death threat from another customer of the same ISP, and the victim provides a copy of the communication to the ISP, the ISP is limited in what actions it may take. On one hand, the ISP may disclose the contents of the forwarded communication to law enforcement (or to any other third party as it sees fit). See 18 U.S.C. §2702(b)(3). On the other hand, current law does not expressly authorize the ISP to voluntarily provide law enforcement with the identity, home address, and other subscriber information of the user making the threat. See 18 U.S.C. §2703(c)(1)(B),(C) (permitting disclosure to government entities only in response to legal process). In those cases where the risk of death or injury is imminent, the law should not require providers to sit idly by. This voluntary disclosure, however, in no way creates an affirmative obligation to review customer communications in search of such imminent dangers.

Also, under existing law, a provider (even one providing services to the public) may disclose the contents of a customer's communications—to law enforcement or anyone else—in order to protect its rights or property. See 18 U.S.C. §2702(b)(5). However, the current statute does not expressly permit a provider voluntarily to disclose non-content records (such as a subscriber's login records) to law enforcement for purposes of self-protection. See 18 U.S.C. §2703(c)(1)(B). Yet the right to disclose the content of communications necessarily implies the less intrusive ability to disclose non-content records. Cf. United States v. Auler, 539 F.2d 642, 646 n.9 (7th Cir. 1976) (phone company's authority to monitor and disclose conversations to protect against fraud necessarily implies right to commit lesser invasion of using, and disclosing fruits of, pen register device) (citing United States v. Freeman, 524 F.2d 337, 341 (7th Cir. 1975)). Moreover, as a practical matter providers must have the right to disclose the facts surrounding attacks on their systems. When a telephone carrier is defrauded by a subscriber, or when an ISP's authorized user launches a network intrusion against his own ISP, the provider must have the legal ability to report the complete details of the crime to law enforcement. The bill clarifies that service providers have the statutory authority to make such disclosures.

Pen registers. There is consensus that the existing legal procedures for pen register and trap-and-trace authority are antiquated and need to be updated. I have been proposing ways to update the pen register and trap and trace statutes for several years, but not necessarily in the same ways as the Administration initially proposed. In fact, in 1998, I introduced with then-Senator Ashcroft, the E–PRIVACY Act, S. 2067, which proposed changes in the pen register laws. In 1999, I introduced the E–RIGHTS Act, S. 934, also with proposals to update the pen register laws.

Again, in the last Congress, I introduced the Internet Security Act, S. 2430, on April 13, 2000, that proposed (1) changing the pen register and trap and trace device law to give nationwide effect to pen register and trap and trace orders obtained by Government attorneys and obviate the need to obtain identical orders in multiple federal jurisdictions; (2) clarifying that such devices can be used for computer transmissions to obtain electronic addresses, not just on telephone lines; and (3) as a guard against abuse, providing for meaningful judicial review of government attorney applications for pen registers and trap and trace devices.

As the outline of my earlier legislation suggests, I have long supported modernizing the pen register and trap and trace device laws by modifying the statutory language to cover the use of these orders on computer transmissions; to remove the jurisdictional limits on service of these orders; and to update the judicial review procedure, which, unlike any other area in criminal procedure, bars the exercise of judicial discretion in reviewing the justification for the order. The USA Act, in section 216, updates the pen register and trap and trace laws only in two out of three respects I believe are important, and without allowing meaningful judicial review. Yet, we were able to improve the Administration's initial proposal, which suffered from the same problem as the provision that was hastily taken up and passed by the Senate, by voice vote, on September, 13, 2001, as an amendment to the Commerce Justice State Appropriations Act.

Nationwide service. The existing legal procedures for pen register and trap-and-trace authority require service of individual orders for installation of pen register or trap and trace device on the service providers that carried the targeted communications. Deregulation of the telecommunications industry has had the consequence that one communication may be carried by multiple providers. For example, a telephone call may be carried by a competitive local exchange carrier, which passes it at a switch to a local Bell Operating Company, which passes it to a long distance carrier, which hands it to an incumbent local exchange carrier elsewhere in the U.S., which in turn may finally hand it to a cellular carrier. If these carriers do not pass source information with each call, identifying that source may require compelling information from a host of providers located throughout the country.

Under present law, a court may only authorize the installation of a pen register or trap device ''within the jurisdiction of the court.'' As a result, when one provider indicates that the source of a communication is a carrier in another district, a second order may be necessary. The Department of Justice has advised, for example, that in 1996, a hacker (who later turned out to be launching his attacks from a foreign country) extensively penetrated computers belonging to the Department of Defense. This hacker was dialing into a computer at Harvard University and used this computer as an intermediate staging point in an effort to conceal his location and identity. Investigators obtained a trap and trace order instructing the phone company, Nynex, to trace these calls, but Nynex could only report that the communications were coming to it from a long-distance carrier, MCI. Investigators then applied for a court order to obtain the connection information from MCI, but since the hacker was no longer actually using the connection, MCI could not identify its source. Only if the investigators could have served MCI with a trap and trace order while the hacker was actively on-line could they have successfully traced back and located him.

In another example provided by the Department of Justice, investigators encountered similar difficulties in attempting to track Kevin Mitnick, a criminal who continued to hack into computers attached to the Internet despite the fact that he was on supervised release for a prior computer crime conviction. The FBI attempted to trace these electronic communications while they were in progress. In order to evade arrest, however, Mitnick moved around the country and used cloned cellular phones and other evasive techniques. His hacking attacks would often pass through one of two cellular carriers, a local phone company, and then two Internet service providers. In this situation, where investigators and service providers had to act quickly to trace Mitnick in the act of hacking, only many repeated attempts—accompanied by an order to each service provider—finally produced success. Fortunately, Mitnick was such a persistent hacker that he gave law enforcement many chances to complete the trace.

This duplicative process of obtaining a separate order for each link in the communications chain can be quite time-consuming, and it serves no useful purpose since the original court has already authorized the trace. Moreover, a second or third order addressed to a particular carrier that carried part of a prior communication may prove useless during the next attack: in computer intrusion cases, for example, the target may use an entirely different path (i.e., utilize a different set of intermediate providers) for his or her subsequent activity.

The bill would modify the pen register and trap and trace statutes to allow for nationwide service of a single order for installation of these devices, without the necessity of returning to court for each new carrier. I support this change.

Second, the language of the existing statute is hopelessly out of date and speaks of a pen register or trap and trace ''device'' being ''attached'' to a telephone ''line.'' However, the rapid computerization of the telephone system has changed the tracing process. No longer are such functions normally accomplished by physical hardware components attached to telephone lines. Instead, these functions are typically performed by computerized collection and retention of call routing information passing through a communications system.

The statute's definition of a ''pen register'' as a ''device'' that is ''attached'' to a particular ''telephone line'' is particularly obsolete when applied to the wireless portion of a cellular phone call, which has no line to which anything can be attached. While courts have authorized pen register orders for wireless phones based on the notion of obtaining access to a ''virtual line,'' updating the law to keep pace with current technology is a better course.

Moreover, the statute is ill-equipped to facilitate the tracing of communications that take place over the Internet. For example, the pen register definition refers to telephone ''numbers'' rather than the broader concept of a user's communications account. Although pen register and trap orders have been obtained for activity on computer networks, Internet service providers have challenged the application of the statute to electronic communications, frustrating legitimate investigations. I have long supported updating the statute by removing words such as ''numbers . . . dialed'' that do not apply to the way that pen/trap devices are used and to clarify the statute's proper application to tracing communications in an electronic environment, but in a manner that is technology neutral and does not capture the content of communications. That being said, I have been concerned about the FBI and Justice Department's insistence over the past few years that the pen/trap devices statutes be updated with broad, undefined terms that continue to flame concerns that these laws will be used to intercept private communications content.

The Administration's initial pen/trap device proposal added the terms ''routing'' and ''addressing'' to the definitions describing the information that was authorized for interception on the low relevance standard under these laws. The Administration and the Department of Justice flatly rejected my suggestion that these terms be defined to respond to concerns that the new terms might encompass matter considered content, which may be captured only upon a showing of probable cause, not the mere relevancy of the pen/trap statute. Instead, the Administration agreed that the definition should expressly exclude the use of pen/trap devices to intercept ''content,'' which is broadly defined in 18 U.S.C. 2510(8).

While this is an improvement, the FBI and Justice Department are shortsighted in their refusal to define these terms. We should be clear about the consequence of not providing definitions for these new terms in the pen/trap device statutes. These terms will be defined, if not by the Congress, then by the courts in the context of criminal cases where pen/trap devices have been used and challenged by defendants. If a court determines that a pen register has captured ''content,'' which the FBI admits such devices do, in violation of the Fourth Amendment, suppression may be ordered, not only of the pen register evidence but any other evidence derived from it. We are leaving the courts with little or no guidance of what is covered by ''addressing'' or ''routing.''

The USA Act also requires the government to use reasonably available technology that limits the interceptions under the pen/trap device laws ''so as not to include the contents of any wire or electronic communications.'' This limitation on the technology used by the government to execute pen/trap orders is important since, as the FBI advised me June, 2000, pen register devices ''do capture all electronic impulses transmitted by the facility on which they are attached, including such impulses transmitted after a phone call is connected to the called party.'' The impulses made after the call is connected could reflect the electronic banking transactions a caller makes, or the electronic ordering from a catalogue that a customer makes over the telephone, or the electronic ordering of a prescription drug.

This transactional data intercepted after the call is connected is ''content.'' As the Justice Department explained in May, 1998 in a letter to House Judiciary Committee Chairman Henry Hyde, ''the retrieval of the electronic impulses that a caller necessarily generated in attempting to direct the phone call'' does not constitute a ''search'' requiring probable cause since ''no part of the substantive information transmitted after the caller had reached the called party'' is obtained. But the Justice Department made clear that ''all of the information transmitted after a phone call is connected to the called party . . . is substantive in nature. These electronic impulses are the 'contents' of the call: They are not used to direct or process the call, but instead convey certain messages to the recipient.''

When I added the direction on use of reasonably available technology (codified as 18 U.S.C. 3121(c)) to the pen register statute as part of the Communications Assistance for Law Enforcement Act (CALEA) in 1994, I recognized that these devices collected content and that such collection was unconstitutional on the mere relevance standard. Nevertheless, the FBI advised me in June, 2000, that pen register devices for telephone services ''continue to operate as they have for decades'' and that ''there had been no change . . . that would better restrict the recording or decoding of electronic or other impulses to the dialing and signaling information utilized in call processing.'' Perhaps, if there were meaningful judicial review and accountability, the FBI would take the statutory direction more seriously and actually implement it.

Judicial review. Due in significant part to the fact that pen/trap devices in use today collect ''content,'' I have sought in legislation introduced over the past few years to update and modify the judicial review procedure for pen register and trap and trace devices. Existing law requires an attorney for the government to certify that the information likely to be obtained by the installation of a pen register or trap and trace device will be relevant to an ongoing criminal investigation. The court is required to issue an order upon seeing the prosecutor's certification. The court is not authorized to look behind the certification to evaluate the judgment of the prosecutor.

I have urged that government attorneys be required to include facts about their investigations in their applications for pen/trap orders and allow courts to grant such orders only where the facts support the relevancy of the information likely to be obtained by the orders. This is not a change in the applicable standard, which would remain the very low relevancy standard. Instead, this change would simply allow the court to evaluate the facts presented by a prosecutor, and, if it finds that the facts support the government's assertion that the information to be collected will be relevant, issue the order. Although this change will place an additional burden on law enforcement, it will allow the courts a greater ability to assure that government attorneys are using such orders properly.

Some have called this change a ''rollback'' in the statute, as if the concept of allowing meaningful judicial review was an extreme position. To the contrary, this is a change that the Clinton Administration supported in legislation transmitted to the Congress last year. This is a change that the House Judiciary Committee also supported last year. In the Electronic Communications Privacy Act, H.R. 5018, that Committee proposed that before a pen/trap device ''could be ordered installed, the government must first demonstrate to an independent judge that 'specific and articulable facts reasonably indicate that a crime has been, is being, or will be committed, and information likely to be obtained by such installation and use . . . is relevant to an investigation of that crime.'' (Report 106–932, 106th Cong. 2d Sess., Oct. 4, 2000, p. 13). Unfortunately, the Bush Administration has taken a contrary position and has rejected this change in the judicial review process.

Computer trespasser. Currently, an owner or operator of a computer that is accessed by a hacker as a means for the hacker to reach a third computer, cannot simply consent to law enforcement monitoring of the computer. Instead, because the owner or operator is not technically a party to the communication, law enforcement needs wiretap authorization under Title III to conduct such monitoring. I have long been interested in closing this loophole. Indeed, when I asked about this problem, the FBI explained to me in June, 2000, that:

> This anomaly in the law creates an untenable situation whereby providers are sometimes forced to sit idly by as they witness hackers enter and, in some situations, destroy or damage their systems and networks while law enforcement begins the detailed process of seeking court authorization to assist them. In the real world, the situation is akin to a homeowner being forced to helplessly watch a burglar or vandal while police seek a search warrant to enter the dwelling.

I therefore introduced as part of the Internet Security Act, S. 2430, in 2000, an exception to the wiretap statute that would explicitly permit such monitoring without a wiretap if prior consent is obtained from the person whose computer is being hacked through and used to send ''harmful interference to a lawfully operating computer system.''

The Administration initially proposed a different formulation of the exception that would have allowed an owner/operator of any computer connected to the Internet to consent to FBI wiretapping of any user who violated a workplace computer use policy or online service term of service and was thereby an ''unauthorized'' user. The Administration's proposal was not limited to computer hacking offenses under 18 U.S.C. 1030 or to conduct that caused harm to a computer or computer system. The Administration rejected these refinements to their proposed wiretap exception, but did agree, in section 217 of the USA Act, to limit the authority for wiretapping with the consent of the owner/operator to communications of unauthorized users without an existing subscriber or other contractual relationship with the owner/operator.

Sharing criminal justice information. The USA Act will make significant changes in the sharing of confidential criminal justice information with various Federal agencies. For those of us who have been concerned about the leaks from the FBI that can irreparably damage reputations of innocent people and frustrate investigations by alerting suspects to flee or destroy material evidence, the Administration's insistence on the broadest authority to disseminate such information, without any judicial check, is disturbing. Nonetheless, I believe we have improved the Administration's initial proposal in responsible ways. Only time will tell whether the improvements we were able to reach agreement on are sufficient.

At the outset, we should be clear that current law allows the sharing of confidential criminal justice information, but with close court supervision. Federal Rule of Criminal Procedure 6(e) provides that matters occurring before a grand jury may be disclosed only to an attorney for the government, such other government personnel as are necessary to assist the attorney and another grand jury. Further disclosure is also allowed as specifically authorized by a court.

Similarly, section 2517 of title 18, United States Code provides that wiretap evidence may be disclosed in testimony during official proceedings and to investigative or law enforcement officers to the extent appropriate to the proper performance of their official duties. In addition, the wiretap law allows disclosure of wiretap evidence ''relating to offenses other than specified in the order'' when authorized or approved by a judge. Indeed, just last year, the Justice Department assured us that ''law enforcement agencies have authority under current law to share title III information regarding terrorism with intelligence agencies when the information is of overriding importance to the national security.'' (Letter from Robert Raben, Assistant Attorney General, September 28, 2000).

For this reason, and others, the Justice Department at the time opposed an amendment proposed by Senators KYL and FEINSTEIN to S. 2507, the ''Intelligence Authorization Act for FY 2001 that would have allowed the sharing of foreign intelligence and counterintelligence information collected from wiretaps with the intelligence community. I deferred to the Justice Department on this issue and sought changes in the proposed amendment to address the Department's concern that this provision was not only unnecessary but also ''could have significant implications for prosecutions and the discovery process in litigation'', ''raises significant issues regarding the sharing with intelligence agencies of information collected about United States persons'' and jeopardized ''the need to protect equities relating to ongoing criminal investigations.'' In the end, the amendment was revised to address the Justice Department's concerns and passed the Senate as a free-standing bill, S. 3205, the Counterterrorism Act of 2000. The House took no action on this legislation.

Disclosure of wiretap information. The Administration initially proposed adding a sweeping provision to the wiretap statute that broadened the definition of an ''investigative or law enforcement officer'' who may receive disclosures of information obtained through wiretaps to include federal law enforcement, intelligence, national security, national defense, protective and immigration personnel and the President and Vice President. This proposal troubled me because information intercepted by a wiretap has enormous potential to infringe upon the privacy rights of innocent people, including people who are not even suspected of a crime and merely happen to speak on the telephone with the targets of an investigation. For this reason, the authority to disclose information obtained through a wiretap has always been carefully circumscribed in law.

While I recognize that appropriate officials in the executive branch of government should have access to wiretap information that is important to combating terrorism or protecting the national security, I proposed allowing such disclosures where specifically authorized by a court order. Further, with respect to information relating to terrorism, I proposed allowing the disclosure without a court order as long as the judge who authorized the wiretap was notified as soon as practicable after the fact. This would have provided a check against abuses of the disclosure authority by providing for review by a neutral judicial official. At the same time, there was a little likelihood that a judge would deny any requests for disclosure in cases where it was warranted.

On Sunday, September 30, the Administration agreed to my proposal, but within two days, it backed away from its agreement. I remain concerned that the resulting provision will allow the unprecedented, widespread disclosure of this highly sensitive information without any notification to or review by the court that authorizes and supervises the wiretap. This is clearly an area where our Committee will have to exercise close oversight to make sure that the newly-minted disclosure authority is not being abused.

The Administration offered three reasons for reneging on the original deal. First, they claimed that the involvement of the court would inhibit Federal investigators and attorneys from disclosing information needed by intelligence and national security officials. Second, they said the courts might not have adequate security and therefore should not be told that information was disclosed for intelligence or national security purposes. And third, they said the President's constitutional powers under Article II give him authority to get whatever foreign intelligence he needs to exercise his national security responsibilities.

I believe these concerns are unfounded. Federal investigators and attorneys will recognize the need to disclose information relevant to terrorism investigations. Courts can be trusted to keep secrets and recognize the needs of the President.

Current law requires that such information be used only for law enforcement purpose. This provides an assurance that highly intrusive invasions of privacy are confined to the purpose for which they have been approved by a court, based on probable cause, as required by the Fourth Amendment. Current law calls for minimization procedures to ensure that the surveillance does not gather information about private and personal conduct and conversations that are not relevant to the criminal investigation.

When the Administration reneged on the agreement regarding court supervision, we turned to other safeguards and were more successful in changing other questionable features of the Administration's bill. The Administration accepted my proposal to strike the term ''national security'' from the description of wiretap information that may be shared throughout the executive branch and replace it with ''foreign intelligence'' information. This change is important in clarifying what information may be disclosed because the term ''foreign intelligence'' is specifically defined by statute whereas ''national security'' is not.

Moreoever, the rubric of ''national security'' has been used to justify some particularly unsavory activities by the government in the past. We must have at least some assurance that we are not embarked on a course that will lead to a repetition of these abuses because the statute will now more clearly define what type of information is subject to disclosure. In addition, Federal officials who receive the information may use it only as necessary to the conduct of their official duties. Therefore, any disclosure or use outside the conduct of their official duties remains subject to all limitations applicable to their retention and dissemination of information of the type of information received. This includes the Privacy Act, the criminal penalties for unauthorized disclosure of electronic surveillance information under chapter 119 of title 18, and the contempt penalties for unauthorized disclosure of grand jury information. In addition, the Attorney General must establish procedures for the handling of information that identifies a United States person, such as the restrictions on retention and dissemination of foreign intelligence and counterintelligence information pertaining to United States persons currently in effect under Executive Order 12333.

While these safeguards do not fully substitute for court supervision, they can provide some assurance against misuse of the private, personal, and business information about Americans, that is acquired in the course of criminal investigations and that may flow more widely in the intelligence, defense, and national security worlds.

Disclosure of grand jury information. The wiretap statute was not the only provision in which the Administration sought broader authority to disclose highly sensitive investigative information. It also proposed broadening Rule 6(e) of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure to allow the disclosure of information relating to terrorism and national security obtained from grand jury proceedings to a broad range of officials in the executive branch of government. As with wiretaps, few would disagree that information learned in a criminal investigation that is necessary to combating terrorism or protecting the national security ought to be shared with the appropriate intelligence and national security officials. The question is how best to regulate and limit such disclosures so as not to compromise the important policies of secrecy and confidentiality that have long applied to grand jury proceedings.

I proposed that we require judicial review of requests to disclose terrorism and foreign intelligence information to officials in the executive branch beyond those already authorized to receive such disclosures. Once again, the Administration agreed to my proposal on Sunday, September 30, but reneged within two days. As a result, the bill does not provide for any judicial supervision of the new authorization for dissemination of grand jury information throughout the executive branch. The bill does contain the safeguards that I have discussed with respect to law enforcement wiretap information. However, as with the new wiretap disclosure authority, I am troubled by this issue and plan to exercise the close oversight of the Judiciary Committee to make sure it is not being abused.

Foreign intelligence information sharing. The Administration also sought a provision that would allow the sharing of foreign intelligence information throughout the executive branch of the government notwithstanding any current legal prohibition that may prevent or limit its disclosure. I have resisted this proposal more strongly than anything else that still remains in the bill. What concerns me is that it is not clear what existing prohibitions this provision would affect beyond the grand jury secrecy rule and the wiretap statute, which are already covered by other provisions in the bill. Even the Administration, which wrote this provision, has not been able to provide a fully satisfactory explanation of its scope.

If there are specific laws that the Administration believes impede the necessary sharing of information on terrorism and foreign intelligence within the executive branch, we should address those problems through legislation that is narrowly targeted to those statutes. Tacking on a blunderbuss provision whose scope we do not fully understand can only lead to consequences that we cannot foresee. Further, I am concerned that such legislation, broadly authorizing the secret sharing of intelligence information throughout the executive branch, will fuel the unwarranted fears and dark conspiracy theories of Americans who do not trust their government. This was another provision of which the Administration reneged on its agreement with me; it agreed to drop it on September 30, but resurrected it within two days, insisting that it remain in the bill. I have been able to mitigate its potential for abuse somewhat by adding the same safeguards that apply to disclosure of law enforcement wiretap and grand jury information.

''Sneak and peek'' search warrants. Another issue that has caused me serious concern relates to the Administration's proposal for so-called ''sneak and peek'' search warrants. The House Judiciary Committee dropped this proposal entirely from its version of the legislation. Normally, when law enforcement officers execute a search warrant, they must leave a copy of the warrant and a receipt for all property seized at the premises searched. Thus, even if the search occurs when the owner of the premises is not present, the owner will receive notice that the premises have been lawfully searched pursuant to a warrant rather than, for example, burglarized.

Two circuit courts of appeal, the Second and the Ninth Circuits, have recognized a limited exception to this requirement. When specifically authorized by the issuing judge or magistrate, the officers may delay providing notice of the search to avoid compromising an ongoing investigation or for some other good reason. However, this authority has been carefully circumscribed.

First, the Second and Ninth Circuit cases have dealt only with situations where the officers search a premises without seizing any tangible property. As the Second Circuit explained, such searches are ''less intrusive than a conventional search with physical seizure because the latter deprives the owner not only of privacy but also of the use of his property.'' United States v. Villegas, 899 F.2d 1324, 899 F.2d 1324, 1337 (2d Cir. 1990).

Second, the cases have required that the officers seeking the warrant must show good reason for the delay. Finally, while the courts have allowed notice of the search may be delayed, it must be provided within a reasonable period thereafter, which should generally be no more than seven days. The reasons for these careful limitations were spelled out succinctly by Judge Sneed of the Ninth Circuit: ''The mere thought of strangers walking through and visually examining the center of our privacy interest, our home, arouses our passion for freedom as does nothing else. That passion, the true source of the Fourth Amendment, demands that surreptitious entries be closely circumscribed.'' United States v. Freitas, 800 F.2d 1451, 1456 (9th Cir. 1986).

The Administration's original proposal would have ignored some of the key limitations created by the caselaw for sneak and peek search warrants. First, it would have broadly authorized officers not only to conduct surreptitious searches, but also to secretly seize any type of property without any additional showing of necessity. This type of warrant, which has never been addressed by a published decision of a federal appellate court, has been referred to in a law review article written by an FBI agent as a ''sneak and steal'' warrant. See K. Corr, ''Sneaky But Lawful: The Use of Sneak and Peek Search Warrants,'' 43 U. Kan. L. Rev. 1103, 1113 (1995). Second, the proposal would simply have adopted the procedural requirements of 18 U.S.C. §2705 for providing delayed notice of a wiretap. Among other things, this would have extended the permissible period of delay to a maximum of 90 days, instead of the presumptive seven-day period provided by the caselaw on sneak and peek warrants.

I was able to make significant improvements in the Administration's original proposal that will help to ensure that the government's authority to obtain sneak and peek warrants is not abused. First, the provision that is now in section 213 of the bill prohibits the government from seizing any tangible property or any wire or electronic communication or stored electronic information unless it makes a showing of reasonable necessity for the seizure. Thus, in contrast to the Administration's original proposal, the presumption is that the warrant will authorize only a search unless the government can make a specific showing of additional need for a seizure. Second, the provision now requires that notice be given within a reasonable time of the execution of the warrant rather than giving a blanket authorization for up to a 90-day delay. What constitutes a reasonable time, of course, will depend upon the circumstances of the particular case. But I would expect courts to be guided by the teachings of the Second and the Ninth Circuits that, in the ordinary case, a reasonable time is no more than seven days.

FISA. Several changes in the Foreign Intelligence Surveillance Act (FISA) are designed to clarify technical aspects of the statutory framework and take account of experience in practical implementation. These changes are not controversial, and they will facilitate the collection of intelligence for counterterrorism and counterintelligence purposes. Other changes are more significant and required careful evaluation and revision of the Administration's proposals.

Duration of surveillance. The USA Act, in section 297, changes the duration of electronic surveillance under FISA in cases of an agent of a foreign power, other than a United States persons, who acts in the United States as an officer or employee of a foreign power or as a member of an international terrorist group. Current law limits court orders in these cases to 90 days, the same duration as for United States persons. Experience indicates, however, that after the initial period has confirmed probable cause that the foreign national meets the statutory standard, court orders are renewed repeatedly and the 90-day renewal becomes an unnecessary procedural for investigators taxed with far more pressing duties.

The Administration proposed that the period of electronic surveillance be changed from 90 days to one year in these cases. This proposal did not ensure adequate review after the initial stage to ensure that the probable cause determination remained justified over time. Therefore, the bill changes the initial period of the surveillance 90 to 120 days and changes the period for extensions from 90 days to one year. The initial 120-day period provides for a review of the results of the surveillance or search directed at an individual before one-year extensions are requested. These changes do not affect surveillance of a United States person.

The bill also changes the period for execution of an order for physical search under FISA from 45 to 90 days. This change applies to United States persons as well as foreign nationals. Experience since physical search authority was added to FISA in 1994 indicates that 45 days is frequently not long enough to plan and carry out a covert physical search. There is no change in the restrictions which provide that United States persons may not be the targets of search or surveillance under FISA unless a judge finds probable cause to believe that they are agents of foreign powers who engage in specified international terrorist, sabotage, or clandestine intelligence activities that may involve a violation of the criminal statutes of the United States.

FISA judges. The bill, in section 208, seeks to ensure that the special court established under FISA has sufficient judges to handle the workload. While changing the duration of orders and extensions will reduce the number of cases in some categories, the bill retains the court's role in pen register and trap and trace cases and expands the court's responsibility for issuing orders for records and other tangible items needed for counterintelligence and counter terrorism investigations. Upon reviewing the court's requirements, the Administration requested an increase in the number of federal district judges designated for the court from seven to 11 of whom no less than 3 shall reside within 20 miles of the District of Columbia. The latter provision ensures that more than one judge is available to handle cases on short notice and reduces the need to invoke the alternative of Attorney General approval under the emergency authorities in FISA.

Agent of a foreign power standard. Other changes in FISA and related national security laws are more controversial. In several areas, the bill reflects a serious effort to accommodate the requests for expanded surveillance authority with the need for safeguards against misuse, especially the gathering of intelligence about the lawful political or commercial activities of Americans. One of the most difficult issues was whether to eliminate the existing statutory ''agent of a foreign power'' standards for surveillance and investigative techniques that raise important privacy concerns, but not at the level that the supreme Court has held to require a court order and a probable cause finding under the Fourth Amendment. These include pen register and trap and trace devices, access to business records and other tangible items held by third parties, and access to records that have statutory privacy protection. The latter include telephone, bank, and credit records.

The ''agent of a foreign power'' standard in existing law was designed to ensure that the FBI and other intelligence agencies do not use these surveillance and investigative methods to investigate the lawful activities of Americans in the name of an undefined authority to collect foreign intelligence or counterintelligence information. The law has required a showing of reasonable suspicion, less than probable cause, to believe that a United States person is an ''agent of a foreign power'' engaged in international terrorism or clandestine intelligence activities.

However, the ''agent of a foreign power'' standard is more stringent than the standard under comparable criminal law enforcement procedures which require only a showing of relevance to a criminal investigation. The FBI's experience under existing laws since they were enacted at various time over the past 15 years has been that, in practice, the requirement to show reasonable suspicion that a person is an ''agent of a foreign power'' has been almost as burdensome as the requirement to show probable cause required by the Fourth Amendment for more intrusive techniques. The FBI has made a clear case that a relevance standard is appropriate for counterintelligence and counterterrorism investigations, as well as for criminal investigations.

The challenge, then, was to define those investigations. The alternative proposed by the Administration was to cover any investigation to obtain foreign intelligence information. This was extremely broad, because the definition includes any information with respect to a foreign power that relates to, and if concerning a United States person is necessary to, the national defense or the security of the United States or the conduct of the foreign affairs of the United States. This goes far beyond FBI counterintelligence and counterterrorism requirements. Instead, the bill requires that use of the surveillance technique or access to the records concerning a United States person be relevant to an investigation to protect against international terrorism or clandestine intelligence activities.

In addition, an investigation of a United States person may not be based solely on activities protected by the First Amendment. This framework applies to pen registers and trap and trace under section 215, access to records and other items under section 215, and the national security authorities for access to telephone, bank, and credit records under section 506. Lawful political dissent and protest by American citizens against the government may not be the basis for FBI counterintelligence and counterterrorism investigations under these provisions.

A separate issue for pen registers and trap and trace under FISA is whether the court should have the discretion to make the decision on relevance. The Administration has insisted on a certification process. I discussed this issue as it comes up in the criminal procedures for pen registers and trap and trace under title 18, and my concerns apply to the FISA procedures as well.

The purpose of FISA. The most controversial change in FISA requested by the Administration was the proposal to allow surveillance and search when ''a purpose'' is to obtain foreign intelligence information. Current law requires that the secret procedures and different probable cause standards under FISA be used only if a high-level executive official certifies that ''the purpose'' is to obtain foreign intelligence formation. The Administration's aim was to allow FISA surveillance and search for law enforcement purposes, so long as there was at least some element of a foreign intelligence purpose. This proposal raised constitutional concerns, which were addressed in a legal opinion provided by the Justice Department, which I insert in the record at the end of my statement.

The Justice Department opinion did not defend the constitutionality of the original proposal. Instead, it addressed a suggestion made by Senator Feinstein to the Attorney General at the Judiciary Committee hearing to change ''the purpose'' to ''a significant purpose.'' No matter what statutory change is made even the Department concedes that the court's may impose a constitutional requirement of ''primary purpose'' based on the appellate court decisions upholding FISA against constitutional challenges over the past 20 years.

Section 218 of the bill adopts ''significant purpose,'' and it will be up to the courts to determine how far law enforcement agencies may use FISA for criminal investigation and prosecution beyond the scope of the statutory definition of ''foreign intelligence information.''

In addition, I proposed and the Administration agreed to an additional provision in Section 505 that clarifies the boundaries for consultation and coordination between officials who conduct FISA search and surveillance and Federal law enforcement officials including prosecutors. Such consultation and coordination is authorized for the enforcement of laws that protect against international terrorism, clandestine intelligence activities of foreign agents, and other grave foreign threats to the nation. Protection against these foreign-based threats by any lawful means is within the scope of the definition of ''foreign intelligence information,'' and the use of FISA to gather evidence for the enforcement of these laws was contemplated in the enactment of FISA. The Justice Department's opinion cites relevant legislative history from the Senate Intelligence Committee's report in 1978, and there is comparable language in the House report.

Immigration. The Administration initially proposed that the Attorney General be authorized to detain any alien indefinitely upon certification of suspicion to links to terrorist activities or organizations. Under close questioning by both Senator KENNEDY and Senator SPECTER at the Committee hearing on September 25, the Attorney General said that his proposal was intended only to allow the government to hold an alien suspected of terrorist activity while deportation proceedings were ongoing. In response to a question by Senator SPECTER, the Attorney General said: ''Our intention is to be able to detain individuals who are the subject of deportation proceedings on other grounds, to detain them as if they were the subject of deportation proceedings on terrorism.'' The Justice Department, however, continued to insist on broader authority, including the power to detain even if the alien was found not to be deportable.

I remain concerned about the provision, in section 412, but I believe that it has been improved from the original proposal offered by the Administration. First, the Justice Department must now charge an alien with an immigration or criminal violation within seven days of taking custody, and the Attorney General's certification of an alien under this section is subject to judicial review. Second, if an alien is found not to be removable, he must be released from custody. Third, the Attorney General can only delegate the power to certify an alien to the Deputy Attorney General, ensuring greater accountability and preventing the certification decision from being made by low-level officials. Despite these improvements, I would have preferred that this provision not be included, and I would urge the Attorney General and his successors to employ great discretion in using this new power.

In addition, the Administration initially proposed a sweeping definition of terrorist activity and new powers for the Secretary of State to designate an organization as a terrorist organization for purposes of immigration law. We were able to work with the Administration to refine this definition to limit its application to individuals who had innocent contacts with non-designated organizations. We also limited the retroactive effect of these new definitions. If an alien solicited funds or membership, or provided material support for an organization that was not designated at that time by the Secretary of State, the alien will have the opportunity to show that he did not know and should have known that his acts would further the organization's terrorist activity. This is substantially better than the administration's proposal, which by its terms, would have empowered the INS to deport someone who raised money for the African National Congress in the 1980s.

Throughout our negotiations on these issues, Senator KENNEDY provided steadfast leadership. Although neither of us are pleased with the final product, it is far better than it would have been without his active involvement.

Trade Sanctions. I was disappointed that the Administration's initial proposal authorizing the President to impose unilateral food and medical sanctions would have undermined a law we passed last year with overwhelming bipartisan support.

Under that law, the President already has full authority to impose unilateral food and medicine sanctions during this crisis because of two exceptions built into the law that apply to our current situation. Nevertheless, the Administration sought to undo this law and obtain virtually unlimited authority in the future to impose food and medicine embargoes, without making any effort for a multi-lateral approach in cooperation with other nations. Absent such a multi-lateral approach, other nations would be free to step in immediately and take over business from American firms and farmers that they are unilaterally barred from pursuing.

Over 30 farm and export groups, including the American Farm Bureau Federation, the Grocery Manufacturers of America, the National Farmers Union, and the U.S. Dairy Export Council, wrote to me and explained that the Administration proposal would ''not achieve its intended policy goal.''

I worked with Senator ENZI, and other Senators, on substitute language to give the Administration the tools it needs in this crisis. This substitute has been carefully crafted to avoid needlessly hurting American farmers in the future, yet it will assure that the U.S. can engage in effective multilateral sanctions.

This bipartisan agreement limits the authority in the bill to existing laws and executive orders, which give the President full authority regarding this conflict, and grants authority for the President to restrict exports of agricultural products, medicine or medical devices. I continue to agree with then-Senator Ashcroft who argued in 1999 that unilateral U.S. food and medicine sanctions simply do not work when he introduced the ''Food and Medicine for the World Act.''

As recently as October 2000, then-Senator Ashcroft pointed out how broad, unilateral embargoes of food or medicine are often counterproductive. Many Republican and Democratic Senators made it clear just last year that the U.S. should work with other countries on food and medical sanctions so that the sanctions will be effective in hurting our enemies, instead of just hurting the U.S. I am glad that with Senator ENZI's help, we were able to make changes in the trade sanctions provision to both protect our farmers and help the President during this crisis.

Money Laundering. Title III of the USA Act consists of a bipartisan bill that was reported out of the Banking Committee on October 4, 2001. I commend the Chairman and Ranking Member of that Committee, Senators SARBANES and GRAMM, for working together to produce a balanced and effective package of measures to combat international money laundering and the financing of terrorism.

I am pleased that the Chairman and Ranking Member of the Banking Committee agreed to our inclusion in the managers' amendment of a small change to a provision of title III, section 319, relating to forfeiture of funds in United States interbank accounts. As reported by the Banking Committee, this provision included language suggesting that in a criminal case, the government may have authority to seek a pretrial restraining order of substitute assets. In fact, as all but one of the circuit courts to consider the issue have held, the government has no such authority. The managers' amendment strikes the offending language from section 319.

Another provision added as part of the Banking Committee title—section 351—is far more troubling. Section 351 creates a new Bank Secrecy Act offense involving the bulk smuggling of more than $10,000 in currency in any conveyance, article of luggage or merchandise or container, either into or out of the United States. The obvious purpose of this section is to circumvent the Supreme Court's decision in United States v. Bajakajian, 118 S. Ct. 2029 (1998), which held that a ''punitive'' forfeiture violates the Excessive Fines Clause of the Eighth Amendment if it is grossly disproportional to the gravity of the offense it is designed to punish.

In fact, the crime created in section 351—willfully evading a currency reporting requirement by ''concealing'' and transporting more than $10,000 across a U.S. border—is no different than the crime at issue in Bajakajian—willfully evading a currency reporting requirement by transporting more than $10,000 across a U.S. border. A forfeiture that is ''grossly disproportional'' with respect to the latter will inevitably be found ''grossly disproportional'' with respect to the former. The new element of ''concealment'' does little or nothing to bolster the government's claim to forfeiture of the unreported currency, since this element is already implicit in the current crime of evasion: It is hardly likely that a person who is in the process of willfully evading the currency reporting requirement will be waiving his currency around for all the world to see.

Conclusion. I have done my best under the circumstances and want to thank especially Senator KENNEDY for his leadership on the Immigration parts of the bill. My efforts have not been completely successful and there are a number of provisions on which the Administration has insisted with which I disagree. Frankly, the agreement of September 30, 2001 would have led to a better balanced bill. I could not stop the Administration from reneging on the agreement any more than I could have sped the process to reconstitute this bill in the aftermath of those breaches. In these times we need to work together to face the challenges of international terrorism. I have sought to do so in good faith.

Mr. President, I reserve the remainder of my time and yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

The Senator from Utah.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I enjoyed the remarks of my distinguished colleague from Vermont. I compliment him for the work he has done on this bill and for the hard work, over the last 3 weeks, that he and his staff have put into this bill, as well as other members of the Judiciary Committee as a whole, and, of course, people on my side as well.

Mr. President, I do not intend to take very long. I know our colleagues are tired, and I know they would like to go home. I also know that we have a distinguished colleague in the Chamber who has some amendments on which we may have to vote.

Four weeks ago we were a relatively tranquil nation, but on September 11, in what amounted to a dastardly attack, an unprovoked attack of war, the World Trade Center was destroyed, along with almost 6,000 people, or maybe more. Our Pentagon was struck by a volitionary act of terrorism.

As a result of the acts of heroes, one of the planes was downed in Pennsylvania, killing all aboard, including those heroes who made sure that that plane did not strike either the Capitol or the White House. I want to pay special tribute to those people who were so heroic as to give up their own lives to protect the lives of so many others.

There have been so many acts of heroism and self-sacrifice—the firefighters who gave their lives, the firefighters who worked day and night, the volunteers who have gone in there, the mayor of New York City, the Governor, and so many others who deserve mention.

This bill, hopefully, will help to at least rectify and redeem some of the problems, problems that have existed ever since September 11.

We did not seek this war; it was thrust upon us. It was an unprovoked attack by people who claim that they represent a religious point of view when, in fact, what they represent is a complete distortion of the religion of Islam.

Islamic people do not believe in murder, murdering innocent civilians. The Koran does not teach that. They do not believe in suicide. The Koran does not teach that.

This is not a war against Islam; this is a war against terrorism and people who have so little regard for human life that they would do something against innocent civilians that was unthinkable before September 11.

Therefore, we live in a dangerous and difficult world today. It is a different world. And we are going to have to wake up and do the things we have to do to protect our citizenry and, of course, to protect the rest of the world to the extent this great Nation can, with the help of other nations, a number of which have become supportive of our efforts. We are very grateful to them.

But a lot of people do not realize we have terror cells in this country—that has been in the media even—and there are people in this country who are dedicated to the overthrow of America. There are people who are dedicated to terrorism right here within our Nation. And some of these people who have participated in this matter may very well be people who were rightfully in our Nation—or at least we thought were rightfully in our Nation.

The responsibility of redeeming and rectifying this situation is the responsibility of the Congress, the Justice Department, the FBI, the INS, and the Border Patrol. It is our job to provide the tools, and for them to first identify and then eradicate terrorist activity within our borders. And our President has taken the extraordinary step of saying we are going to go after terrorists worldwide and those who harbor them.

I agree with the President. I think it is time to do it. It is time to hit them where it hurts. It is time to let them know we are not going to put up with this type of activity.

A few weeks ago, the Justice Department sent up its legislative proposal. It was a good legislative proposal. They had a lot of ideas in there that literally we have been trying to get through for years. When we passed the 1996 antiterrorism, effective death penalty act, a number of us tried to get some of these provisions in at that time, but we were unsuccessful for a variety of reasons, some very sincere.

The fact is, a lot of the provisions we have in the bill are not brand new; a lot of them have been requested for years. And had they been in play, who knows but we might have been able to interdict these terrorists and have stopped what happened and have stopped the loss of civil liberties for approximately 6,000 or more people.

In the past several weeks, after the Justice Department sent up its bill, Senator LEAHY and I, Justice Department officials, White House officials, staff members from both of our staffs, and staff members from other members of the committee have worked day and night to come up with this particular bill.

I congratulate my partner and my colleague, Senator LEAHY, for his hard work on this bill, and his staffers' for the work they have done on this bill, and, of course, my own staffers, and, of course, those others I have named.

This has been a very difficult bill to put forward because there are all kinds of cross-pressures, all kinds of ideas, all kinds of different thoughts, all kinds of differing philosophies. We believe, with all kinds of deliberation and work, we have been able to put together a bill that really makes sense, that will give the Justice Department the tools it needs to be able to work and stamp out terrorist activity within our country. At least we want to give them the very best tools we possibly can.

We have tried to accommodate the concerns of Senators on both sides of the aisle. We have worked very hard to do so. We cannot accommodate everybody's concerns. As Senator LEAHY has said, this is not a perfect bill. Nothing ever seems to be perfect around here. But this is as good a bill as can be put together, in a bipartisan way, in this area in the history of the Senate. I really feel good about it, that we have done this type of a job.

As I say, a lot of these provisions have been requested by the Justice Department and both Democrat and Republican White Houses for years. We took into consideration civil liberties throughout our discussions on this bill. I think we got it just right. We are protective of civil liberties while at the same time giving the tools to the law enforcement agencies to be able to do their jobs in this country.

I might mention that this bill encourages information sharing, that would be absolutely prohibited under current law, among various agencies of Government, information sharing that should have been allowed a long time ago, at least in my view.

It updates the laws with regard to electronic surveillance and brings those laws into the digital age, and brings them into an effective way so that we can, in a modernized way, protect our society, at least to the extent we can, from these types of terrorist activities.

Of course, little things, such as pen registers, trap-and-trace authority—we have been able to resolve these problems after years of problems.

I would like to make a few comments regarding the process for this legislation. Although we have considered this in a more expedited manner than other legislation, my colleagues can be assured that this bill has received thorough consideration. First, the fact is that the bulk of these proposals have been requested by the Department of Justice for years, and have languished in Congress for years because we have been unable to muster the collective political will to enact them into law.

No one can say whether these tools could have prevented the attacks of September 11. But, as the Attorney General has said, it is certain that without these tools, we did not stop the vicious acts of last month. I say to my colleagues, Mr. President, that if these tools could help us now to track down the perpetrators—if they will help us in our continued pursuit of terrorist activities within our national borders then we should not hesitate any further to pass these reforms into law. As long as these reforms are consistent with our—Constitution and they are—it is difficult to see why anyone would oppose their passage.

Furthermore, I would like to clearly dispel the myth that the reforms in this legislation somehow abridge the Constitutional freedoms enjoyed by law-abiding American citizens. Some press reports have portrayed this issue as a choice between individual liberties on the one hand, and on the other hand, enhanced powers for our law enforcement institutions. This is a false dichotomy. We should all take comfort that the reforms in this bill are primarily directed at allowing law enforcement agents to work smarter and more efficiently—in no case do they curtail the precious civil liberties protected by our Constitution. I want to assure my colleagues that we worked very hard over the past several weeks to ensure that this legislation upholds all of the constitutional freedoms our citizens cherish. It does.

Mr. President, I will submit for the RECORD my extended remarks describing this legislation, but I would like to take a minute to explain briefly a few of the most important provisions of this critical legislation.

First, the legislation encourages information-sharing between various arms of the federal government. I believe most of our citizens would be shocked to learn that, even if certain government agents had prior knowledge of the September 11 attacks, under many circumstances they would have been prohibited by law from sharing that information with the appropriate intelligence or national security authorities.

This legislation makes sure that, in the future, such information flows freely within the Federal government, so that it will be received by those responsible for protecting against terrorist attacks.

By making these reforms, we are rejecting the outdated Cold War paradigm that has prevented cooperation between our intelligence community and our law enforcement agents. Current law does not adequately allow for such cooperation, artificially hampering our government's ability to identify and prevent acts of terrorism against our citizens.

In this new war, terrorists are a hybrid between domestic criminals and international agents. We must lower the barriers that discourage our law enforcement and intelligence agencies from working together to stop these terrorists. These hybrid criminals call for new, hybrid tools.

Second, this bill updates the laws relating to electronic surveillance. Electronic surveillance, conducted under the supervision of a federal judge, is one of the most powerful tools at the disposal of our law enforcement community. It is simply a disgrace that we have not acted to modernize the laws currently on the books which govern such surveillance, laws that were enacted before the fax machine came into common usage, and well before the advent of cellular telephones, e-mail, and instant messaging. The Department of Justice has asked us for years to update these laws to reflect the new technologies, but there has always been a call to go slow, to seek more information, to order further studies.

This is no hypothetical problem. We now know that e-mail, cellular telephones, and the Internet have been principal tools used by the terrorists to coordinate their atrocious activities. We need to pursue all solid investigatory leads that exist right now that our law enforcement agents would be unable to pursue because they must continue to work within these outdated laws. It is high time that we update our laws so that our law enforcement agencies can deal with the world as it is, rather than the world as it existed 20 years ago.

A good example of way we our handicapping our law enforcement agencies relates to devices called ''pen registers.'' Pen registers may be employed by the FBI, after obtaining a court order, to determine what telephone numbers are being dialed from a particular telephone. These devices are essential investigatory tools, which allow law enforcement agents to determine who is speaking to whom, within a criminal conspiracy.

The Supreme Court has held, in Smith v. Maryland, that the information obtained by pen register devices is not information that is subject to any constitutional protection. Unlike the content of your telephone conversation once your call is connected, the numbers you dial into your telephone are not private. Because you have no reasonable expectation that such numbers will be kept private, they are not protected under the Constitution. The Smith holding was cited with approval by the Supreme Court just earlier this year.

The legislation under consideration today would make clear what the Federal courts have already ruled—that Federal judges may grant pen register authority to the FBI to cover, not just telephones, but other more modern modes of communication such as e-mail or instant messaging. Let me make clear that the bill does not allow law enforcement to receive the content of the communication, but they can receive the addressing information to identify the computer or computers a suspect is using to further his criminal activity.

Importantly, reform of the pen register law does not allow—as has sometimes been misreported in the press—for law enforcement agents to view the content of any e-mail messages—not even the subject line of e-mails. In addition, this legislation we are considering today makes it explicit that content can not be collected through such pen register orders.

This legislation also allows judges to enter pen register orders with nationwide scope. Nationwide jurisdiction for pen register orders makes common sense. It helps law enforcement agents efficiently identify communications facilities throughout the country, which greatly enhances the ability of law enforcement to identify quickly other members of a criminal organization, such as a terrorist cell.

Moreover, this legislation provides our intelligence community with the same authority to use pen register devices, under the auspices of the Foreign Intelligence Surveillance Act, that our law enforcement agents have when investigating criminal offenses. It simply makes sense to provide law enforcement with the same tools to catch terrorists that they already possess in connection with other criminal investigations, such as drug crimes or illegal gambling.

In addition to the pen register statute, this legislation updates other aspects of our wiretapping statutes. It is amazing that law enforcement agents do not currently have authority to seek wiretapping authority from a Federal judge when investigating a terrorist offense. This legislation fixes that problem.

Moving on, I note that much has been made of the complex immigration provisions of this bill. I know Senators SPECTER, KOHL and KENNEDY had questions about earlier provisions, particularly the detention provision for suspected alien terrorists.

I want to assure my colleagues that we have worked hard to address your concerns, and the concerns of the public. As with the other immigration provisions of this bill, we have made painstaking efforts to achieve this workable compromise.

Let me address some of the specific concerns. In response to the concern that the INS might detain a suspected terrorist indefinitely, the Senator KENNEDY, Senator KYL, and I worked out a compromise that limits the provision. It provides that the alien must be charged with an immigration or criminal violation within seven days after the commencement of detention or be released. In addition, contrary to what has been alleged, the certification itself is subject to judicial review. The Attorney General's power to detain a suspected terrorist under this bill is, then, not unfettered.

Moreover, Senator LEAHY and I have also worked diligently to craft necessary language that provides for the deportation of those aliens who are representatives of organizations that endorse terrorist activity, those who use a position of prominence to endorse terrorist activity or persuade others to support terrorist activity, or those who provide material support to terrorist organizations. If we are to fight terrorism, we can not allow those who support terrorists to remain in our country. Also, I should note that we have worked hard to provide the State Department and the INS the tools they need to ensure that no applicant for admission who is a terrorist is able to secure entry into the United States through legal channels.

Finally, the bill gives law enforcement agencies powerful tools to attack the financial infrastructure of terrorism giving our Government the ability to choke off the financing that these dangerous terrorist organizations need to survive. It criminalizes the practice of harboring terrorists, and puts teeth in the laws against providing material support to terrorists and terrorist organizations. It gives the President expanded authority to freeze the assets of terrorists and terrorist organizations, and provides for the eventual seizure of such assets. These tools are vital to our ability to effectively wage the war against terrorism, and ultimately to win it.

There have been few, if any, times in our nation's great history where an event has brought home to so many of our citizens, so quickly, and in such a graphic fashion, a sense of our vulnerability to unexpected attack.

I believe we all took some comfort when President Bush promised us that our law enforcement institutions would have the tools necessary to protect us from the danger that we are only just beginning to perceive.

The Attorney General has told us what tools he needs. We have taken the time to review the problems with our current laws, and to reflect on their solutions. The time to act is now. Let us please move forward expeditiously, and give those who are in the business of protecting us the tools that they need to do the job.

Mr. President, I think most people understand this is an important bill. All of us understand it needs to be done. All of us understand that these are tools our law enforcement people deserve and need to have. And, frankly, it is a bill that I think can make a real difference with regard to the interdiction of future acts of terrorism in our society.

Nobody can guarantee, when you have people willing to commit suicide in the perpetration of these awful acts, at all times that we can absolutely protect our Nation. But this bill will provide the tools whereby we might be able—and in most cases should be able—to resolve even those types of problems.

So with that, I am happy to yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. DURBIN). Who yields time?

The Senator from Maryland.

Mr. SARBANES. Mr. President, I yield myself 10 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Maryland is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. SARBANES. Mr. President, I rise in very strong support of S. 1510, the Uniting and Strengthening America Act of 2001, and in particular, Title III of S. 1510, the International Money Laundering Abatement and Anti-Terrorist Financing Act of 2001.

Title III was reported out of the Committee on Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs, which I am privileged to chair, a week ago today by a unanimous vote of 21 to 0.

President Bush said on September 24: ''We have launched a strike on the financial foundation of the global terror network.''

Title III of our comprehensive antiterrorism package supplies the armament for that strike. Osama bin Laden may have boasted that ''al-Qaeda [includes] modern, educated youth who are aware of the cracks inside the western financial system, as they are aware of the lines in their hands.'' With Title III, we are sealing up those cracks.

Title III contains, among other things, authority to take targeted action against countries, institutions, transactions, or types of accounts the Secretary of the Treasury finds to be of ''primary money-laundering concern.'' It also contains requirements for due diligence standards directed at corresponding accounts opened at U.S. banks by foreign offshore banks and banks in jurisdictions that have been found to fall significantly below international anti-money laundering standards.

It contains a bar on the maintenance of U.S. correspondent accounts for offshore shell banks—those banks that have no physical presence or employees anywhere, and that are not part of a regulated and recognized banking company. There is also a requirement that all financial institutions establish anti-money laundering programs.

Title III also contains several provisions that should enhance the ability of the Government to share more specific information with banks, and the ability of banks to share information with one another relating to potential terrorist or money-laundering activities, and a large number of important technical improvements in anti-money laundering statutes, as well as, mandates to the Department of the Treasury to act or formulate recommendations to improve our anti-money laundering programs.

The problem of money laundering is not a new one. There have been significant efforts for some time in Congress to cut the financial lifelines on which criminal operations depend. Senator JOHN KERRY'S exhaustive investigation nearly a decade ago into the collapse of a shady institution called BCCI, which he found was established with ''the specific purpose of evading regulation or control by governments,'' led him to introduce anti-money laundering legislation. A bill similar to his was approved last year by the Banking Committee of the House of Representatives on a 31 to 1 vote.

Recent investigations by Senator CARL LEVIN'S Permanent Subcommittee on Investigations produced two excellent reports on the ways criminals use financial institutions to launder funds and how we can counter these activities. Senator LEVIN's reports demonstrated dramatically how correspondent banking facilities and private banking services impede financial transparency and hide foreign client identity and activity, thereby contributing to international money laundering.

Senator CHARLES GRASSLEY has also advocated for stronger money laundering legislation, and sponsored the Money Laundering and Financial Crimes Strategy Act of 1998, which mandates the development of an annual national money laundering strategy.

Two weeks ago we held our own hearings in the Banking Committee. We heard from a number of expert witnesses and from Under Secretary of the Treasury Gurule; Assistant Attorney General Chertoff; and Ambassador Stuart Eizenstat, the former Deputy Secretary of the Treasury.

On October 4, the Banking Committee marked-up and reported out our own bill. The committee print was built, in a sense, on the foundation given to us by Senators KERRY, LEVIN, GRASSLEY, and by others in this institution.

Before describing the provisions of Title III in greater detail, I want to thank all members of the Banking Committee for their contributions to this legislation. As I indicated, it came out of the committee on a vote of 21 to 0. The Ranking Member, Senator GRAMM, provided crucial support. He raised certain issues which were addressed in the course of the mark-up involving, among other things, important due process protections. Senators STABENOW and JOHNSON were instrumental in producing a compromise to resolve a dispute over one of the package's most important provisions. Senator ENZI contributed his experience as an accountant in refining another critical provision.

Senator SCHUMER, who has been involved in past efforts to address money laundering activities, played an important role, as did Senators ALLARD, BAYH, CORZINE, and CRAPO, who offered amendments and contributed important improvements to various parts of the subtitle.

I am deeply grateful to all of the members of the committee for their strong, positive, and constructive contributions and for their willingness to work day and night. It is my understanding that the committee staff went three consecutive nights without any sleep in order to prepare this legislation. This is carefully considered legislation because it reflects and builds upon efforts which have been made over a number of years.

Earlier today, our colleagues on the Financial Services Committee in the House of Representatives marked-up a bill, many of the provisions of which are identical or virtually identical to those contained in Title III of the package now before us.

Public support across the country for anti-money laundering legislation is extremely strong. Jim Hoagland put it plainly in the Washington Post:

> This crisis offers Washington an opportunity to force American and international banks to clean up concealment and laundering practices they now tolerate or encourage and which terrorism can exploit.

Terrorist attacks require major investments of time, planning, training, practice, and financial resources to pay the bills. Money laundering is the transmission belt that gives terrorists the resources to carry out their campaigns of carnage. We intend, with Title III of this legislation, to end that transmission belt and its ability to bring resources to the networks that enable terrorists to carry out their campaigns of violence.

Title III addresses all aspects of our defenses against money laundering. Those defenses generally fall into three parts. The first is the Bank Secrecy Act, ''BSA'', passed in 1970. It requires financial institutions to keep standardized transaction records and report large currency transactions and suspicious transactions and mandates reporting of the movement of more than $10,000 in currency into or out of the country. The statute is called the ''bank secrecy act,'' because it bars bank secrecy in America, by preventing financial institutions from maintaining opaque records, or discarding their records altogether. Secrecy is the hiding place for crime, and Congress has barred our institutions from allowing those hiding places. The financial institutions covered by that act include banks, broker-dealers, casinos, and non-bank transmitters of funds, currency exchangers, and check cashers—all financial services businesses through which our citizens—and criminals hiding as legitimate citizens—can move funds into and through our economy. Unfortunately, reporting regulations covering some of these institutions have not yet been promulgated.

The second part of our money laundering defenses are the criminal statutes first enacted in 1986 that make it a crime to launder money and allow criminal and civil forfeiture of the proceeds of crime. The third part is the statutory framework that allows information to be communicated to and between law enforcement officials. Our goal must be to assure—to the greatest extent consistent with reasonable privacy protections—that the necessary information can be used by the right persons in ''real time'' to cut off terrorism and crime.

Title III modernizes provisions in all three areas to meet today's threats in a global economy. Its provisions are divided into five subtitles, dealing, respectively, with ''international counter-money laundering measures''—sections 311–328—''Bank Secrecy Act improvements''—sections 331–342—bulk cash smuggling—section 351 and anti-corruption measures—sections 361–363.

There are 39 provisions in Title III. At this time, I want to summarize some of the bill's most important provisions.

Section 311 gives the Secretary of the Treasury, in consultation with other senior government officials, authority to impose one or more of five new ''special measures'' against foreign jurisdictions, entities, transactions or accounts that the Secretary, after consultation with other senior federal officials, determines to pose a ''primary money laundering concern'' to the United States. The special measures all involve special recordkeeping and reporting measures—to eliminate the curtains behind which launderers hide. In extreme cases the Secretary is permitted to bar certain kinds of interbank accounts from especially problematic jurisdictions. The statute specifies the considerations the Secretary must take into account in using the new authority and contains provisions to supplement the Administrative Procedure Act to assure that any remedies—except certain short-term measures—are subject to full comment from all affected persons.

This new provision gives the Secretary real authority to act to close overseas loopholes through which U.S. financial institutions are abused. At present the Secretary has no weapons except Treasury Advisories—which don't impose specific requirements—or full economic sanctions that suspend financial and trade relations with offending targets. President Bush's invocation of the International Economic Emergency Powers Act (IEEPA) several weeks ago was obviously appropriate. But there are many other situations in which we will not want to block all transactions, but in which we will want to do more than simply advise financial institutions about underregulated foreign financial institutions or holes in foreign counter-money laundering efforts. Former Deputy Secretary Eizenstat testified before the Committee that adding this tool to the Secretary's arsenal was essential.

Section 312 focuses on another aspect of the fight against money laundering, the financial institutions that are on the front lines making the initial decisions about what foreign banks to allow inside the United States. It requires U.S. financial institutions to exercise appropriate due diligence when dealing with private banking accounts and interbank correspondent relationships with foreign banks. With respect to foreign banks, the section requires U.S. financial institutions to apply appropriate due diligence to all correspondent accounts with foreign banks, and enhanced due diligence for accounts sought by offshore banks or banks in jurisdictions found to have substandard money laundering controls or which the Secretary determines to be of primary money laundering concern under the new authority given him by section 311.

The section also specifies certain minimum standards for the enhanced due diligence that U.S. financial institutions are required to apply to accounts opened for two categories of foreign banks with high money laundering risks—offshore banks and banks in jurisdictions with weak anti-money laundering and banking controls. These minimum standards were developed from, and are based upon, the factual record and analysis contained in the Levin staff report on correspondent banking and money laundering.

Section 312 is essential to Title III. It addresses, with appropriate flexibility, mechanisms whose very importance for the conduct of commercial banking makes them special targets of money launderers, as illustrated in Senator LEVIN's extensive reports and hearings. A related provision, in section 319, requires foreign banks that maintain correspondent accounts in the United States to appoint agents for service of process within the United States and authorizes the Attorney General and the Secretary of the Treasury to issue a summons or subpoena to any such foreign bank seeking records, wherever located, relating to such a correspondent account. U.S. banks must sever correspondent arrangements with foreign banks that do not either comply with or contest any such summons or subpoena, and if the Attorney General or the Secretary of the Treasury asks them to sever the arrangements.

These provisions send a simple message to foreign banks doing business through U.S. correspondent accounts: be prepared, if you want to use our banking facilities, to operate in accordance with U.S. law.

Section 313 also builds on the factual record before the Banking Committee to bar from the United States financial system pure ''brass-plate'' shell banks created outside the U.S. that have no physical presence anywhere and are not affiliated with recognized banking institutions. These shell banks carry the highest money laundering risks in the banking world because they are inherently unavailable for effective oversight—there is no office where a bank regulator or law enforcement official can go to observe bank operations, review documents or freeze funds.

Section 327 permits the Secretary to deal with abuse of another recognized commercial banking mechanism—concentration accounts that are used to commingle related funds in one place temporarily pending disbursement or the transfer of funds into individual client accounts. Concentration accounts have been used to launder funds, and the bill permits the Secretary to issue rules to bar the use of concentration accounts to move client funds anonymously, without documentation linking particular funds to their true owners.

Section 332 requires financial institutions to establish minimum anti-money laundering programs that include appropriate internal policies, management, employee training, and audit features. This is not a ''one size fits all'' requirement; in fact its very generality recognizes that different types of programs will be appropriate for different types and sizes of institutions.

A number of improvements are made to the suspicious activity reporting rules. First, technical changes strengthen the safe harbor from civil liability for institutions that report suspicious activity to the Treasury. The provisions not only add to the protection for reporting institutions; they also address individual privacy concerns by making it clear that government officers may not disclose suspicious transaction reports information except in the conduct of their official duties. The Act also requires the issuance of suspicious transaction reporting rules applicable to brokers and dealers in securities within 270 days of the date of enactment.

Sections 341 and 342 of the Title deal with underground banking systems such as the Hawala, which is suspected of being a channel used to finance the al Qaeda network. Section 341 makes it clear that underground money transmitters are subject to the same record-keeping rules—and the same penalties for violating those rules—as above-ground, recognized, money transmitters. It also directs the Secretary of the Treasury to report to Congress, within one year, on the need for additional legislation or regulatory controls relating to underground banking systems. Section 342 authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to instruct the United States Executive Director of each of the international financial institutions to use such Director's ''voice and vote'' to support loans and other use of resources to benefit nations that the President determines to be contributing to efforts to combat international terrorism, and to require the auditing of each international financial institution to ensure that funds are not paid to persons engaged in or supporting terrorism.

Section 351 creates a new Bank Secrecy Act offense involving the bulk smuggling of more than $10,000 in currency in any conveyance, article of luggage or merchandise or container, either into or out of the United States, and related forfeiture provisions. This provision has been sought for several years by both the Departments of Justice and Treasury.

Other provisions of the bill address relevant provisions of the Criminal Code. These provisions were worked out with the Judiciary Committee and are included in Title III because of their close relationship to the provisions of Title 31 added or modified by Title III.

The most important is section 315, which expands the list of specified unlawful activities under 18 U.S.C. 1956 and 1957 to include foreign corruption offenses, certain U.S. export control violations, offenses subject to U.S. extradition obligations under multilateral treaties, and misuse of funds of international financial institutions.

Section 316 establishes procedures to protect the rights of persons whose property may be subject to confiscation in the exercise of the government's anti-terrorism authority.

Section 319 treats amounts deposited by foreign banks in interbank accounts with U.S. banks as having been deposited in the United States for purposes of the forfeiture rules, but grants the Attorney General authority, in the interest of fairness and consistent with the United States' national interest, to suspend a forfeiture proceeding based on that presumption. This closes an important forfeiture loophole.

Section 321 allows the United States to exclude any alien that the Attorney General knows or has reason to believe is or has engaged in or abetted certain money laundering offenses.

A third important set of provisions modernize information sharing rules to reflect the reality of the fight against money laundering and terrorism.

Section 314 requires the Secretary of the Treasury to issue regulations to encourage cooperation among financial institutions, financial regulators and law enforcement officials and to permit the sharing of information by law enforcement and regulatory authorities with such institutions regarding persons reasonably suspected, based on credible evidence, of engaging in terrorist acts or money laundering activities. The section also allows banks to share information involving possible money laundering or terrorist activity among themselves—with notice to the Secretary of the Treasury.

Section 335 permits, but does not require, a bank to include information, in a response to a request for an employment reference by a second bank, about the possible involvement of a former institution-affiliated party in potentially unlawful activity, and creates a safe harbor from civil liability for the bank that includes such information in response to an employment reference request, except in the case of malicious intent. Given its different focus, it is not my intention to similarly limit a bank's safe harbor from civil liability for the filing of suspicious activity reports under the Bank Secrecy Act.

Section 340 contains amendments to various provisions of the Bank Secrecy Act, the Right to Financial Privacy Act, and the Fair Credit Reporting Act, to permit information subject to those statutes to be used in the conduct of United States intelligence or counter-intelligence activities to protect against international terrorism.

The modernization of our money laundering laws represented by Subtitle III is long overdue. It is not the work of one week or one weekend, but represents years of careful study and a bipartisan effort to produce a piece of prudent legislation. The care taken in producing the legislation extends to several provisions calling for reporting on the legislation's effect and a provision for a three-year review of the legislation's effectiveness.

Title III responds, as I've indicated, to the statement of Assistant Attorney General Chertoff, the head of the Department of Justice's Criminal Division, at the Banking Committee's September 26 hearing that ''[w]e are fighting with outdated weapons in the money laundering arena today.'' Without this legislation, the cracks in the system of which bin Laden boasted will remain open. We should not, indeed we can not, allow that to happen, any more than we can delay dealing with the financial aspects of the terrorist threat.

Title III is a balanced effort to address a complex area of national concern. I strongly urge my colleagues to follow the unanimous recommendation of the Banking Committee and support this important component of the anti-terrorism package.

I ask unanimous consent that a section-by-section summary of Title III be included in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

TITLE III—INTERNATIONAL MONEY LAUNDERING ABATEMENT AND ANTI-TERRORIST FINANCING ACT OF 2001—SECTION-BY-SECTION SUMMARY

Sec. 301. Short title and table of contents.

Sec. 302. Findings and purposes.

Sec. 303. Provides that the provisions added and amendments made by Title III will terminate after September 30, 2004, if the Congress enacts a joint resolution to that effect, and that such joint resolution will be given expedited consideration in each Houses of Congress.

SUBTITLE A. INTERNATIONAL COUNTER-MONEY LAUNDERING AND RELATED MEASURES

Sec. 311. Gives the Secretary of the Treasury, in consultation with other senior government officials, authority (in the Secretary's discretion) to impose one or more of five new ''special measures'' against foreign jurisdictions, entities, transactions and accounts that the Secretary, after consultation with other senior federal officials, determines to pose a ''primary money laundering concern'' to the United States. The special measures include: (1) requiring additional recordkeeping or reporting for particular transactions, (2) requiring the identification of the foreign beneficial owners of certain accounts at a U.S. financial institution, (3) requiring the identification of customers of a foreign bank who use an interbank payable-through account opened by that foreign bank at a U.S. bank, (4) requiring the identification of customers of a foreign bank who use an interbank correspondent account opened by that foreign bank at a U.S. bank, and (5) after consultation with the Secretary of State, the Attorney General, and the Chairman of the Federal Reserve Board, restricting or prohibiting the opening or maintaining of certain interbank correspondent or payable-through accounts. Measures 1–4 may not be imposed, other than by regulation, for a period in excess of 120 days; measure 5 may only be imposed by regulation. Also requires the Secretary of the Treasury, in consultation with the appropriate Federal banking agencies, to submit to Congress, within 180 days of the date of enactment, recommendations for the most effective way to require foreign nationals opening a U.S. bank account to provide identification comparable to that required when U.S. citizens open a bank account.

Sec. 312. Requires a U.S. financial institution that maintains a correspondent account or private banking account for a non-United States person to establish appropriate and, if necessary, enhanced due diligence procedures to detect and report instances of money laundering. Creates a minimum anti-money laundering due diligence standards for U.S. financial institutions that enter into correspondent banking relationships with banks that operate under offshore banking licenses or under banking licenses issued by countries that (a) have been found non-cooperative with international counter money laundering principles, or (b) have been the subject of special measures authorized by Sec. 311. Creates minimum anti-money laundering due diligence standards for maintenance of private banking accounts by U.S. financial institutions.

Sec. 313. Bars depository institutions and broker-dealers operating in the United States from establishing, maintaining, administering, or managing correspondent accounts for foreign shell banks, other than shell bank vehicles affiliated with recognized and regulated depository institutions.

Sec. 314. Requires the Secretary of the Treasury to issue regulations to encourage cooperation among financial institutions, financial regulators and law enforcement officials and to permit the sharing of information by law enforcement and regulatory authorities with such institutions regarding persons reasonably suspected, based on credible evidence, of engaging in terrorist acts or money laundering activities. Allows (with notice to the Secretary of the Treasury) the sharing of information among banks involving possible terrorist or money laundering activity.

Sec. 315. Expands the list of specified unlawful activities under 18 U.S.C. 1956 and 1957 to include foreign corruption offenses, certain U.S. export control violations, and misuse of funds of the IMF.

Sec. 316. Establishes procedures to protect the rights of persons whose property may be subject to confiscation in the exercise of the government's anti-terrorism authority.

Sec. 317. Gives United States courts ''long-arm'' jurisdiction over foreign persons committing money laundering offenses in the United States, over foreign banks opening United States bank accounts, and over foreign persons seizing assets ordered forfeited by a U.S. court.

Sec. 318. Expands the definition of financial institution for purposes of 18 U.S.C. 1956 and 1957 to include banks operating outside the United States.

Sec. 319. Treats amounts deposited by foreign banks in interbank accounts with U.S. banks as having been deposited in the United States for purposes of the forfeiture rules, but grants the Attorney General authority, in the interest of justice and consistent with the United States' national interest, to suspend a forfeiture proceeding based on that presumption. Requires U.S. financial institutions to reply to a request for information from a U.S. regulator relating to anti-money laundering compliance within 120 hours of receipt of such a request. Requires foreign banks that maintain correspondent accounts in the United States to appoint agents for service of process within the United States and authorizes the Attorney General and the Secretary of the Treasury to issue a summons or subpoena to any such foreign bank seeking records, wherever located, relating to such a correspondent account. Requires U.S. banks to sever correspondent arrangements with foreign banks that do not either comply with or contest any such summons or subpoena. Authorizes United States courts to order a convicted criminal to return property located abroad and to order a civil forfeiture defendant to return property located abroad pending trial on the merits. Authorizes United States prosecutors to use a court-appointed Federal receiver to find a criminal defendant's assets, wherever located.

Sec. 320. Permits the United States to institute forfeiture proceedings against the proceeds of foreign criminal offenses found in the United States.

Sec. 321. Allows the United States to exclude any alien that the Attorney General knows or has reason to believe is or has engaged in or abetted certain money laundering offenses.

Sec. 322. Extends the prohibition against the maintenance of a forfeiture proceedings on behalf of a fugitive to include a proceeding by a corporation whose majority shareholder is a fugitive and a proceeding in which the corporation's claim is instituted by a fugitive.

Sec. 323. Permits the government to seek a restraining order to preserve the availability of property subject to a foreign forfeiture or confiscation judgment.

Sec. 324. Increases from $100,000 to $1,000,000 the maximum civil and criminal penalties for a violation of provisions added to the Bank Secrecy Act by sections 311 and 312 of the Act.

Sec. 325. Directs the Secretary of the Treasury, in consultation with the Attorney General, the Federal banking agencies, the SEC, the CFTC and other appropriate agencies to evaluate operation of the provisions of Subtitle A of Title III of the Act and recommend to Congress any relevant legislative action, within 30 months of the date of enactment.

Sec. 326. Directs the Secretary of the Treasury to report annually to the Senate Banking Committee and House Financial Services Committee on measures taken pursuant to Subtitle A of Title III of the Act.

Sec. 327. Authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to issue regulations concerning the maintenance of concentration accounts by U.S. depository institutions to prevent an institution's customers from anonymously directing funds into or through such accounts.

Sec. 328. Provides criminal penalties for officials who violate their trust in connection with the administration of Title III.

Sec. 337. Directs the Secretary of the Treasury and the Federal bank regulatory agencies to submit reports to Congress, one year after the date of enactment, containing recommendations on possible legislation to conform the penalties imposed on depository institutions for violations of the Bank Secrecy Act with penalties imposed on such institutions under section 8 of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act.

Directs the Secretary of the Treasury to report to Congress, within one year of the date of enactment, on the need for additional legislation or regulatory controls relating to underground banking systems.

Sec. 342. Authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to instruct the United States Executive Director of each of the international financial institutions (for example, the IMF and the World Bank) to use such Director's ''voice and vote'' to support loans and other use of resources to benefit nations that the President determines to be contributing to United States efforts to combat international terrorism, and to require the auditing of each international financial institution to ensure that funds are not paid to persons engaged in or supporting terrorism.

SUBTITLE E. MISCELLANEOUS

Sec. 371. Expands the SEC's emergency order authority.

Sec. 372. Creates uniform protection standards for Federal Reserve facilities.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I thank the distinguished chairman of the Banking Committee, the senior Senator from Maryland, Mr. SARBANES. He did unbelievable work in this committee to pass out a money-laundering bill—a very complex and difficult subject. He did it unanimously, I believe, in a committee that probably has as diverse a membership—that is an understatement—as one might find. I compliment him and thank him for his kind words.

I reserve the remainder of my time. I see the chairman of the Senate Intelligence Committee here, who wishes to give his opening statement.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nevada is recognized.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I conferred with Senator DASCHLE a few minutes ago. It is his desire—so there is no misunderstanding of the Members—that a number of opening statements be given: The Senator from Florida, the chairman of the Intelligence Committee, and we understand Senator STABENOW wishes to speak, and there may be a couple of other opening statements.

As soon as that is done, we are going to turn to Senator FEINGOLD to offer the first of his amendments. After that, there will be a vote on the first Feingold amendment.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I yield 10 minutes to the senior Senator from Florida.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Florida is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. President, I wish to commend Senators DASCHLE and LOTT for their leadership in bringing this critical piece of legislation to the Senate just 1 month after the horrific events of September 11. Senators LEAHY and HATCH also deserve credit for moving quickly to shape the judiciary components of this bill and choreograph other provisions, including those affecting the intelligence agencies.

My remarks will focus on title IX of this legislation, which is entitled ''Improved Intelligence,'' as well as the other provisions in the bill that directly affect the mission of the agencies of the intelligence community.

Title IX is derived from S. 1448, legislation which was developed within the intelligence community, entitled ''Intelligence to Prevent Terrorism Act of 2001.''

Since long before September 11, I have been working with members of the committee, particularly Senators FEINSTEIN and KYL, on comprehensive counterterrorism legislation. Most of the provisions of our bill, with some changes requested by the administration, have now become title IX of S. 1510.

The provisions in title IX, as well as other provisions in the bill, are designed to accomplish a daunting but not impossible task. That task is to change the cultures within the Federal law enforcement and intelligence agencies—primarily the FBI and the CIA—so they work seamlessly together for the good of the American people.

Both the FBI and the CIA are very good. They are the standards of the world in their own missions. But those missions are very different. The Federal Bureau of Investigation is goal oriented. A criminal case has a beginning, a middle, and an end. In a case that has developed the guilty party, the end is a conviction for the crime committed. The information collected during a criminal case is very closely held. It is held closely because its purpose is to result in the successful prosecution of an event that occurred in the past—not to inform thinking about what may happen now or in the future.

The Central Intelligence Agency, on the other hand, as well as its other companions in the intelligence community, has a global approach, literally and figuratively. The CIA is restricted to activities outside the United States of America. The CIA collects information on a worldwide basis, and it processes that information, analyzes that information, and it places it in the hands of its customers. Its customers are other Federal agencies and senior policymakers, including the President of the United States. The purpose of that information is to allow those senior policymakers to make more informed decisions.

Given the threats we now face, the cultures growing out of these different missions must be melded. We cannot fight terrorism by putting yellow tape around a bomb site, calling it a crime scene, collecting evidence, and proceeding to trial frequently years later.

We must put the evidence collected after such an event to work for us in real time so we can predict and prevent the next attack. If there is a single goal of the intelligence components of this antiterrorism bill, it is to change the focus from responding to acts that have already occurred to preventing the acts which threaten the lives of American citizens in this country and abroad.

It is critical that all information lawfully available to the Federal Government be used efficiently and effectively to fight terrorism. We cannot continue to use critical information only in a criminal trial. Any information collected must be available to intelligence officials to inform their operational initiatives so as to prevent the next attack.

Along these lines, several provisions of S. 1510 are designed to change the way information is handled within the Federal Government. For example, section 203 permits law enforcement to share information collected in grand jury proceedings and from title III criminal wiretaps with intelligence agencies. Current law, as it has been interpreted, prevents that sharing, except in very limited circumstances.

Section 905 then complements section 203 in that it requires law enforcement officers, FBI agents, and the Justice Department prosecutors to provide foreign intelligence derived in the course of a criminal investigation, including grand juries, criminal wiretaps, FBI interviews, and the like, to the Central Intelligence Agency and to other intelligence agencies.

A ''permissive'' approach is not good enough under current circumstances. Too many lives have been lost, too many lives are at risk. Law enforcement sharing of information with the intelligence agencies must be mandatory.

Section 908 further complements this legislation by providing the training of law enforcement officers at the Federal, State, and local agencies so they will be better equipped to recognize foreign intelligence information when they see it, and to get it to the right place on a timely basis.

Let me give a couple of hypothetical but eerily-close-to-reality examples. It is likely that there are, tonight, grand juries meeting at various places in the United States to deal with issues related to the events of September 11. Witnesses may be providing information—information about training camps in Afghanistan, ground warfare techniques used by al-Qaida and the Taliban, the types and quantity of weapons available. This type of information will be critical for the military—critical for the military now, not 2 years from now when these cases might go to trial.

Another example is in the area of wiretaps. Let me just take two wiretaps. One has been issued under the Foreign Intelligence Surveillance Act because there was a finding by a Federal judge that there was credible evidence that the telephone was being used by an agent of a foreign power.

In the course of listening to the wiretap, this conversation comes across: I am planning to fly from a specifically designated site in Central America to a city in Texas. I am going to take my flight a week from Monday. My intention is, once I arrive over that city, to distribute chemical or biological materials that will terrorize the people of that city by creating havoc due to the illnesses that will be provoked.

But how are you going to pay for this? You don't have the money to buy a plane, chemicals, or get the expertise necessary to do that?

I am going to do that because I am going to rob a bank next Monday in order to get the money that I need to pay for this operation. The bank is going to be located at the corner of First and Main, and I am going to do it 3 hours after the bank closes next Monday.

The person listening to that conversation with a foreign intelligence wiretap is under a legal obligation to make known to the appropriate law enforcement officials that there is about to be a bank robbery at a specific location on a specific date and time in a certain Texas city.

Conversely, if that exact conversation had taken place under a criminal wiretap under title 3, the person listening to that conversation would be prohibited from telling the foreign intelligence agencies that there was about to be a terrorist attack on a date certain against a specific Texas city originating at a specific site in Central America.

Try to convince the American people that makes sense. It clearly does not in today's reality. This legislation is going to make the same requirement of mandatory sharing when the information is gathered under a criminal wiretap that involves foreign intelligence information, as is the case today when information gathered under a Foreign Intelligence Surveillance Act wiretap must be made available to appropriate law enforcement officials.

Another provision of title 9 addresses the role of the Director of Central Intelligence in the process of collecting foreign intelligence under the Foreign Intelligence Surveillance Act. It recognizes the need to target limited resources, including personnel and translators against the highest priority targets.

I ask if I can have an additional 5 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Vermont.

Mr. LEAHY. I have about 11 minutes left that has not been committed which I thought I might use to answer some questions. I give the Senator 2 of my 11 minutes.

Mr. GRAHAM. I appreciate the Senator's limitations.

Mr. LEAHY. We just had one Senator ask me for 30 minutes. I am looking at my 11. How can I give him 30? But I will give you 2 of the 11.

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from Vermont.

We have a provision that the Director of Central Intelligence, the DCI, will set the overall strategic goals for the collection of foreign intelligence so that we can use our limited resources as effectively as possible.

In order to complement that, we also have a provision that will establish a national virtual translation center as a means of increasing our woefully limited linguistic capabilities to translate the material which we are gathering.

We will also provide for additional capability with human intelligence. We have become very reliant on technology—eavesdropping, satellite imagery, to the exclusion of the use of human beings. If we want to gain information about the bin Ladens of the world, we cannot just take a picture of bin Laden.

Today it is increasingly difficult to eavesdrop on bin Laden. What we need to do is get a human being who is able to get close enough to bin Laden to learn his intentions and capabilities. This gets to the difficult issue of what kind of assets, human beings, we hire to work for us to gather such information?

We would all like to employ the purist of people, all choir boys to do this type of work. Unfortunately, they are not the type of people who are likely to be able to get close to the bin Ladens of the world. Thus, we have a provision in this legislation in the nature of a sense of Congress which we hope will send a strong message to the intelligence community that we are encouraging them to overcome some previous messages from Congress and to proceed to recruit the persons who they find to be necessary to gain access to terrorists so that we can have the best opportunity of protecting ourselves.

With the adoption of this legislation, we have not reached the end of our task or responsibilities to protect the American people. We are taking a substantial step in that direction.

To reiterate, another provision of title 9 addresses the role of the Director of Central Intelligence in the process of collecting foreign intelligence under the Foreign Intelligence Surveillance Act. It recognizes the need to target limited resources—e.g. translators—against the highest priority targets.

In order to ensure that scarce resources are effectively used, the DCI—in his role as head of the Intelligence community, not as CIA Director—will set overall strategic goals for FISA collection.

He will work with the Attorney General to ensure that FISA information is distributed to the intelligence operators and analysts who need it government-wide.

Of course, the operational targeting and collection using wiretaps will be conducted by the FBI, as it has in the past; the DCI will perform no role in those decisions.

One of the scarce resources that has plagued the Intelligence Community, as well as law enforcement, is translation capability.

Section 907 of this bill requires the FBI and CIA to work together to create a ''National Virtual Translation Center.''

Such a center would seek to remedy the chronic problem of developing critical language abilities, and matching those resources to intelligence collected by the wide range of techniques available.

It is not enough to be able to listen to the conversations of terrorists and their supporters.

Those conversations must be translated, often from difficult languages such as Urdu, and analyzed, all in a timely fashion.

Our intelligence services collect vast amounts of data every day. It is possible that we may find that a critical clue to the September 11 attacks may have been available, but untranslated, days, weeks, or even months before the hijackings.

We must address this problem before another specific threat is overlooked.

Finally, I would like to mention a problem that has received a great deal of attention in recent weeks. There has been criticism of the intelligence agencies for placing too great a reliance on technical intelligence collection—laws dropping, satelite photograph—in recent years at the expense of human sources, or spies.

A corollary of this criticism is that CIA officers are to risk-averse and that they do not aggressively recruit sources overseas that may have access to terrorist groups because the sources may have engaged in human rights violations or violent crimes.

As to the first problem, the Intelligence authorization bill for fiscal year 2002, which may come to the floor next week, provides greater resources for human source recruitment—and it is part of a 5-year plan to beef up this method of collection.

With respect to the second problem, we in the Congress simply must accept some of the responsibility for creating a risk-averse reaction at CIA, if needed there is one.

The internal CIA regulations addressing the so-called ''dirty asset'' problem grew out of the criticisms by Congress in the mid-1990s about the recruitment of sources in Guatemala with sordid pasts.

We address this issue in S. 1510, section 903, by sending a strong message to CIA Headquarters and CIA officers overseas that recruitment of any person who has access to terrorists or terrorist groups should be of the highest priority.

There is no place in times like these for timidity in seeking every method available to learn the capabilities, plans, and intentions of terrorists.

Congress needs to send a strong message that we value such efforts to recruit sources on terrorism, even those with pasts we would not applaud.

Section 903 sends that message.

I urge passage of S. 1510.

I again commend the Members of the Senate who have played such an effective role.

I also thank the staff: Al Cumming, Bob Filippone, Vicki Divoll, Steven Cash, Bill Duhnke, Paula DeSutter, Jim Hensler, and Jim Barnett.

They have been working for the past many months to bring us to the point of this legislation being available for adoption by the Senate tonight and for the safety of the American people.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator has expired. The Senator from Vermont.

Mr. LEAHY. I ask the distinguished Senator from Utah—I see the distinguished senior Senator from Pennsylvania is here—perhaps after the senior Senator from Utah, and then after the senior Senator from Pennsylvania speaks, whether it might be possible to go to the Senator from Wisconsin for the purpose of bringing up his amendments, and we can then debate and vote on them. Will that be agreeable to everybody?

Mr. HATCH. It is agreeable.

Mr. LEAHY. I ask unanimous consent that after the Senator from Utah, and the Senator from Pennsylvania, we go to the Senator from Wisconsin for the purpose of bringing up his amendments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Senator from Utah.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, in my opening remarks, I was remiss in not mentioning the tremendous work of the distinguished chairman and vice chairman of the Intelligence Committee. They have done a tremendous amount of work on the intelligence aspect of this bill. As a member of the Intelligence Committee, I express my high regard for the both of them and the work they have done.

I also express my regard for my friend from Maryland, Senator SARBANES, who came to the Senate with me, for the work he has done on the money-laundering section of this bill. He and Senator GRAMM and the Banking Committee have done yeoman's service on this, and I hope we are able to have that as part of the final bill.

I would be remiss if I did not acknowledge the great work that has been done—also, Senator KYL and so many others. I felt I needed to say that. I thank the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, parliamentary inquiry, that I have 30 minutes under the unanimous consent request?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct.

Mr. SPECTER. I yield myself 15 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, I have sought recognition and asked for this reservation of time to express my concerns about the record which the Senate is creating so that whatever legislation we pass will pass constitutional muster.

The Supreme Court of the United States has handed down a series of decisions in the past decade which question the constitutionality and, in fact, invalidate acts of Congress because there has been an insufficient record compiled. So I make these statements and review the record so far with a view to urging my colleagues to create a record in this Chamber, in conference, or wherever that opportunity may present itself.

In 1989, in the case of Sable v. FCC, the Supreme Court of the United States struck down an act of Congress saying, ''no Congressman or Senator purported to present a considered judgment.'' I thought it was a remarkable statement by the Supreme Court since Congressman Tom Bliley in the House of Representatives had established a very comprehensive record.

The Supreme Court in 1997, in a case captioned Reno v. ACLU, again invalidated an act of Congress noting, ''the lack of legislative attention to the statute at issue in Sable suggests another parallel with this case.''

It was surprising to me that the Supreme Court of the United States would invalidate an act of Congress on the ground that no Senator or Congressman had purported to present a considered judgment, when that is the view of the Supreme Court which is contrary to Congress.

Under our doctrine of separation of powers, it seemed to me an act of Congress should stand unless there is some specific provision in the Constitution which warrants invalidating it or for vagueness under the due process clause of the fifth amendment.

The Supreme Court of the United States, in January of last year, did it again in a case captioned Kimel v. Florida Board of Regents, a case which involved the Age Discrimination in Employment Act. There the Court said, ''our examination of the act's legislative record confirms that Congress' 1974 extension of the Act to the States was an unwarranted response to a perhaps inconsequential problem.'' Again, a remarkable holding that the Congress had an unwarranted response and that it was an inconsequential problem, totally contradicting the judgment of the Congress of the United States.

Then the Court went on in the Kimel case to say, ''Congress had no reason to believe that broad prophylactic legislation was necessary in this field.''

Those are only a few of the cases where the Supreme Court of the United States has invalidated acts of Congress. There is no doubt there is a need for legislation to expand the powers of law enforcement to enable us to act against terrorists. My own experience in 8 years on the Intelligence Committee, 2 years of which was as chairman, and my work as chairman of the Judiciary Subcommittee on Terrorism have convinced me without a doubt of the scourge of terrorism which we have seen many times but never with the intensity which we observed on September 11 of this year.

The act of Congress in expanding law enforcement has to be very carefully calibrated to protect civil liberties and be in accordance with the Constitution of the United States. Attorney General Ashcroft met with a number of us on Wednesday, September 19, just 8 days after the incident of September 11, and asked that we enact legislation by the end of the week. My response at that time was I thought it could not be done in that time frame, but I thought we could hold hearings in the remainder of that week, perhaps on Thursday the 20th, or Friday the 21st, or Saturday the 22nd, to move ahead, understanding the import of the administration's bill, and legislate to give them what they needed, consistent with civil rights.

The Judiciary Committee then held a hearing on September 25 where the Attorney General testified for about an hour and 20 minutes. At that time, as that record will show, only a few Senators were able to ask questions. In fact, the questioning ended after my turn came, and most of the Judiciary Committee did not have a chance to raise questions.

On September 26, the following day, I wrote to the chairman of the committee saying:

I write to urge that our Judiciary Committee proceed promptly with the Attorney General's terrorism package with a view to mark up the bill early next week so the full Senate can consider it and hopefully act upon it by the end of the week. I am concerned that some further act of terrorism may occur which could be attributed to our failure to act promptly.

I then found out on October 3 that the Subcommittee on the Constitution was having a hearing. By chance, I heard about it in the corridors. Although we were having a hearing with Health and Human Services Secretary Thompson on bioterrorism, I absented myself from the bioterrorism hearing and went down the hall to the Judiciary subcommittee hearing and participated there and expressed many of the reservations and concerns I am commenting about today.

On that date, I again wrote to Senator LEAHY. I ask unanimous consent that the full text of my letter to him and the full text of his reply to me of October 9 be printed in the RECORD at the conclusion of these remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(See exhibit 1.)

Mr. SPECTER. I quote only from the first sentence of Senator LEAHY's response to me:

I thank you for your letters of September 26 and October 3 and for your participation in the September 25 hearing regarding antiterrorism legislation. On October 3, you wrote that you were concerned about the lack of hearings. I share that concern and have tried to notice prompt hearings on a number of aspects of the legislative proposals at the earliest possible time.

On this state of the record, which I hope can yet be perfected, I am concerned about our meeting the standards of the Supreme Court of the United States for a sufficient deliberative process.

When Attorney General Ashcroft appeared before the Judiciary Committee on September 25, he said the only detention he wanted on aliens was those who were subject to deportation proceedings. I then pointed out, as the record will show, that the legislation submitted by the Attorney General was much broader and did not limit detention simply or exclusively to those who were subject to deportation proceedings. So my comment was that it was necessary to analyze the bill very carefully, not do it hurriedly, and give the Attorney General of the Department of Justice what he needed, consistent with constitutional rights.

The other issue which I had an opportunity to raise in the very brief period of time I had—some 5 minutes—involved modifications to the Foreign Intelligence Surveillance Act, where the issue was to change the law from ''the purpose,'' being the gathering of intelligence, to ''a purpose.'' Ultimately the legislation has been modified to read ''a significant purpose.''

At that hearing, the Attorney General said he did not look to obtain content from electronic surveillance unless probable cause was established. But in the draft bill, which the Department of Justice had submitted at that time, that was not what the bill provided. So that on this state of the record, I think the Congress has some work to do, tonight in conference or perhaps by other means, to see to it we have a record which will withstand constitutional scrutiny.

On our Judiciary Committee, we have many Members who have expertise in this field. This bill, as the RECORD will show, was negotiated by the chairman and ranking member with the Department of Justice, with the participation of the committee only to the extent of the hearing of the full committee on September 25 and the subcommittee on October 3.

We have on our Judiciary Committee a number of Members who have had experience as prosecuting attorneys. We have a number of lawyers who are learned in law. We have other Members who have extensive experience on the Judiciary Committee and a great deal of common sense which may top some of us who have prosecutorial experience or extended experience with probable cause and search warrants or surveillance of some sort or another.

I express these concerns so whatever can be done by the Congress will be done to meet the constitutional standards.

How much of the 15 minutes have I used?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has 3 minutes 37 seconds remaining.

Mr. SPECTER. I reserve the remainder of my time, and I yield the floor.

EXHIBIT 1

U.S. SENATE,
Washington, DC, September 26, 2001.

Hon. PATRICK J. LEAHY,
Chairman, Senate Judiciary Committee, Washington, DC.

DEAR PAT: I write to urge that our Judiciary Committee proceed promptly with the Attorney General's terrorism package with the view to mark up the bill early next week so the full Senate can consider it and hopefully act upon it by the end of next week.

I am concerned that some further act of terrorism may occur which could be attributed to our failure to act promptly.

Sincerely,

ARLEN SPECTER.

U.S. SENATE,
Washington, DC, October 3, 2001.

Hon. PATRICK J. LEAHY,
Chairman, Senate Judiciary Committee, Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR LEAHY: I am very much concerned about the delay in acting on the antiterrorism legislation and also about the absence of hearings to establish a record for the legislative package.

In recent decisions, the Supreme Court of the United States has declared acts of Congress unconstitutional when there has been an insufficient record or deliberative process to justify the legislation.

On the anti-terrorism legislation, perhaps more than any other, the Court engages in balancing the needs of law enforcement with the civil rights issues so that it is necessary to have the specification of the problems to warrant broadening police power.

In my judgment, there is no substitute for the hearings, perhaps in closed session, to deal with these issues.

As you know, I have been pressing for hearings. I am now informed that Senator Hatch has convened a meeting of all Republican senators to, in effect, tell us what is in a proposed bill where Judiciary Committee members have had no input.

We could still have meaningful hearings this week and get this bill ready for prompt floor action.

Sincerely,

ARLEN SPECTER.

U.S. SENATE,
COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY,
Washington, DC, October 9, 2001.

Hon. ARLEN SPECTER,
711 Hart Senate Office Building, Washington, DC.

DEAR ARLEN, I thank you for your letters of September 26, 2001 and October 3, 2001 and for your participation in the September 25, 2001 hearing regarding anti-terrorism legislation. On October 3, 2001, you wrote that you were concerned about the lack of hearings. I share that concern and have tried to notice prompt hearings on a number of aspects of the legislation proposals at the earliest possible time.

As you know, the Attorney General consented to appear at our September 25, 2001 hearing for only an hour and we had to prevail upon him to stay a few extra minutes so that Senator Feinstein and you could have a brief opportunity to ask the Attorney General a single question. I invited him to rejoin us the following Tuesday to complete the hearing and I continue to extend such invitations, but he has not accepted any of my follow up invitations. In addition, although Members of the Committee submitted questions in writing to the Attorney General following the September 25, 2001 hearing, they have yet to be answered. I agree with you that these are important matters that justify a more thorough record than we have been able to establish.

Last week, Senator Feingold chaired an important hearing on civil liberties concerns before the Constitution Subcommittee. This week Senators Schumer, Feinstein and Durbin each are working to organize hearings on these matters and Senators Kennedy and Biden are working on possible hearings next week.

At the same time, we have continued to work nonstop to prepare for Senate action on legislative proposals. We suffered a setback last week when after weeks of intensive negotiations the White House reneged on agreements reached on Sunday, September 30, 2001, and we had to spend much of last week renegotiating a legislative package. Finally, last Thursday S. 1510 was introduced by the Majority Leader, the Republican Leader, the Chairmen of the Judiciary, Banking and Select Intelligence Committees and by Senators Hatch and Shelby as Ranking Members. I am seeking to work closely with the Senate leadership to be prepared to proceed to that legislation at the earliest opportunity. The House is on a similar track and may well consider its version of legislation later this week, as well.

You and I both know that no legislation can guarantee against future terrorist attacks. Nonetheless, I have expedited work on anti-terrorism legislation, within which the Administration has insisted on including general criminal law measures not limited to terrorism, in order to allow the Senate to act promptly in response to the unprecedented attacks of September 11, 2001.

Sincerely,

PATRICK LEAHY,
Chairman.

Mr. LEAHY. I understand the distinguished Senator from Wisconsin is willing to have the distinguished Senator from Michigan recognized for 5 minutes. I ask unanimous consent she be allowed to proceed preceding the Senator from Wisconsin.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Senator from Michigan is recognized for 5 minutes.

Ms. STABENOW. I thank our distinguished chairman and my friend from Wisconsin for allowing me to proceed before he presents his amendments.

I rise this evening to congratulate all involved in this effort. As has been said on so many occasions, it is not perfect but we have come together with a very positive, important step forward that we can all celebrate this evening on a bipartisan basis.

As the Senator from Michigan, along with my colleague, Senator LEVIN, we certainly celebrate the efforts along the northern border and the important authorizations for dollars that allow us to continue to protect and strengthen the efforts at the border. I thank my chairman of the Banking Committee, Senator SARBANES, for his efforts to put into this important bill language dealing with the critical issue of money laundering which essentially allows us to follow the money.

My colleague, Senator LEVIN, has been extremely involved in helping to lead efforts to lay out the case for this. Senator KERRY and Senator GRASSLEY have been involved in important work. I thank them.

The antiterrorism bill before the Senate takes a significant step forward in cutting the flow of terrorist money. As the President has repeatedly said, stopping the flow of money is key to stopping terrorism. That is what we are doing this evening. In particular, we are establishing important new responsibilities, both for our Government and for our financial institutions. The bill authorizes the Treasury Secretary to take special measures to stop suspected money-laundering activities. This anti-money-laundering language is significant because it requires financial institutions to set up their own due diligence to combat money laundering, particularly for private and corresponding banking situations. This is a key provision of which I was proud to be a part. I am pleased we were able to come up with language that allows that.

Another important provision I was pleased to offer in the Banking Committee, which is now part of the bill, was clear authority for the Treasury Secretary to issue regulations to crack down on abuses related to concentration accounts. These accounts are administrative accounts used by financial institutions to combine funds from multiple customers, various transactions. They do not require any identification or accountability of who is involved or how much money we are talking about.

The amendment I advocated urges the Treasury Secretary to issue regulations ensuring these concentration accounts identify by client name all of the client funds moving through the account to prevent anonymous movement of the funds that might facilitate money laundering. This is a classic case of why this is so important: Raul Salinas, brother of former Mexican President Carlos Salinas, transferred almost $100 million to Citibank administrative accounts in New York and London without any documentation indicating the ownership of these funds. The wire transfers sent the funds to Citibank and asked each transfer be brought to the attention of a specific private banker. Later, the private banker transferred the funds to private accounts controlled by Mr. Salinas. The origin of this money—$100 million—was never satisfactorily identified.

Allegations of drug money or other corporate sources persist to this day. We know, through Senator LEVIN's exhaustive documentation at his hearings, that other private banks use this practice as well. Although financial regulators have cautioned against this practice over and over again, they have not yet issued regulations to stop this loophole. That is why the language in this bill is so important.

The use of these anonymous concentration accounts breaks the audit trail associating specific funds with specific clients. Again, the goal, as the President said, is to follow the money. We have to have information if we are going to follow the money.

It should now be abundantly clear to Treasury that they have the authority to stop this practice. I hope it is also abundantly clear it is a serious problem. I am very concerned that the administration act quickly on these anonymous accounts.

I congratulate everyone involved in this effort. I think the effort regarding the anti-money-laundering language is a critical part of making sure we have an effective antiterrorism bill. I thank my colleagues for their work.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Michigan has expired. Who yields time?

The Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. FEINGOLD. Mr. President, I will give a brief statement before I start my amendments, and I ask unanimous consent the time be equally divided amongst the time I have on each of my four amendments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. FEINGOLD. Mr. President, 1 month ago, we all were viciously attacked. I am pleased and grateful that both the domestic and international effort to respond to these attacks is fully underway. As we recall, almost as soon as the attacks of September 11 ended, our public discussion turned to two issues: how the United States will respond to these terrorist acts and how we can protect ourselves against future attacks.

Almost immediately, discussion of that second issue raised the question of how our efforts to prevent terrorism will affect the civil liberties enjoyed by all Americans as part of our constitutional birthright.

I was encouraged by many of the reactions that our leaders and Members of this body had, but especially encouraged by the words of our colleague, Senator GEORGE ALLEN of Virginia who represents one of the States struck by terrorism. On the day after the attacks he said:

> We must make sure that as we learn the facts, we do not allow these attacks to succeed in tempting us in any way to diminish what makes us a great nation. And what makes us a great nation is that this is a country that understands that people have God-given rights and liberties. And we cannot—in our efforts to bring justice—diminish those liberties.

I agree with Senator ALLEN. I believe that one of the most important duties of this Congress is in responding to the terrible events of September 11, in order to protect our civil liberties, which, of course, derive from our Constitution. That is why I am pleased that we did not take the Attorney General's advice to enact an anti-terrorism bill immediately without any deliberation or negotiation. I commend Senator LEAHY for all his efforts to improve this bill. It is certainly a better and more comprehensive bill than the one the administration originally proposed. I think even the administration recognizes that.

But I still believe we needed a more deliberative process on this bill, and more careful consideration of the civil liberties implication of it. I held a hearing in the Constitution Subcommittee at which many serious and substantive concerns about the bill were raised by commentators and experts from both sides of the political spectrum.

As the chairman of the subcommittee, I took many of those concerns very seriously. That is why I would not consent on Tuesday night to bringing up this bill and passing it without any amendments being considered. I am pleased that we were able to reach agreement on a process that will allow some of my concerns with this bill to be debated and voted on through the amendment process.

That is not to say that no measures to strengthen law enforcement should be enacted. They should be. We need to do it. We need to do some very serious updating of a number of these laws. This bill does many things to assist the Department of Justice in its mission to catch those who helped the terrorists and prevent future attacks. We can and we will give the FBI new and better tools. But we must also make sure that the new tools don't become instruments of abuse.

There is no doubt that if we lived in a police state, it would be easier to catch terrorists. If we lived in a country where the police were allowed to search your home at any time for any reason; if we lived in a country where the government was entitled to open your mail, eavesdrop on your phone conversations, or intercept your email communications; if we lived in a country where people could be held in jail indefinitely based on what they write or think, or based on mere suspicion that they were up to no good, the government would probably discover and arrest more terrorists, or would be terrorists, just as it would find more lawbreakers generally. But that would not be a country in which we would want to live, and it would not be a country for which we could, in good conscience, ask our young people to fight and die. In short, that country would not be America.

I think it is important to remember that the Constitution was written in 1789 by men who had recently won the Revolutionary War. They did not live in comfortable and easy times of hypothetical enemies. They wrote the Constitution and the Bill of Rights to protect individual liberties in times of war as well as in times of peace.

There have been periods in our nation's history when civil liberties have taken a back seat to what appeared at the time to be the legitimate exigencies of war. Our national consciousness still bears the stain and the scars of those events: The Alien and Sedition Acts, the suspension of habeas corpus during the Civil War, the internment of Japanese-Americans during World War II and the injustices perpetrated against German-Americans and Italian-Americans, the blacklisting of supposed communist sympathizers during the McCarthy era, and the surveillance and harassment of antiwar protesters, including Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr., during the Vietnam war. We must not allow this piece of our past to become prologue.

Preserving our freedom is the reason we are now engaged in this new war on terrorism. We will lose that war without a shot being fired if we sacrifice the liberties of the American people in the belief that by doing so we will stop the terrorists.

That is why this exercise of considering the administration's proposed legislation and fine tuning it to minimize the infringement of civil liberties is so necessary and so important. And this is a job that only the Congress can do. We cannot simply rely on the Supreme Court to protect us from laws that sacrifice our freedoms. We took an oath to support and defend the Constitution of the United States. In these difficult times that oath becomes all the more significant.

There are quite a number of things in this bill that I am concerned about, but my amendments focus on a small discreet number of items.

At this point, I would like to turn to one of the amendments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is recognized.

AMENDMENT NO. 1899

Mr. FEINGOLD. I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

> The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. FEINGOLD] proposes an amendment numbered 1899.

Mr. FEINGOLD. I ask unanimous consent the reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

> (Purpose: To make amendments to the provisions relating to interception of computer trespasser communications)
>
> On page 42, line 25, insert ''or other'' after ''contractual''.
> On page 43, line 2, strike ''for'' and insert ''permitting''.
> On page 43, line 8, insert ''transmitted to, through, or from the protected computer'' after ''computer trespasser''.
>
> On page 43, line 20, insert ''does not last for more than 96 hours and'' after ''such interception''.

Mr. FEINGOLD. I ask this time now be charged to the first amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Ms. STABENOW). The time will be charged.

Mr. FEINGOLD. Madam President, this amendment simply clarifies the provision in the bill dealing with computer trespass, section 217, so that it more accurately reflects the intent of the provision, as frequently expressed by the administration. Section 217 is designed, we have been told, to permit law enforcement to assist computer owners who are subject to denial of service attacks or other episodes of hacking. As currently drafted, however, this provision could allow universities, libraries, and employers to permit government surveillance of people who are permitted to use the computer facilities of those entities. Such surveillance would take place without a judicial order or probable cause to believe that a crime is being committed. Under the bill, anyone accessing a computer ''without authorization'' is deemed to have no privacy rights whatsoever, with no time limit, for as long as they are accessing the computer at issue. Basically, the way I read this, this provision completely eliminates fourth amendment protection for a potentially very large set of electronic communications.

The danger that this amendment tries to address is that ''accessing a computer without authorization'' could be interpreted to mean a minor transgression of an office or library computer use policy. Let's take an example. A working mom uses an office computer to purchase Christmas presents on the Internet. Company policy prohibits personal use of office computers. This person has potentially accessed a computer without authorization and her company could give permission to law enforcement to review all of the e-mails that she sends or receives at work, monitor all the instant messages she sends, and record every website she visits: No warrant, no probable cause, no fourth amendment rights at all. My amendment makes clear that a computer trespasser is not someone who is permitted to use a computer by the owner or operator of that computer.

This amendment also limits the length of this unreviewed surveillance to 96 hours, which is a longer time frame than that placed on other emergency wiretap authorities. Again, if this provision is aimed solely at responding to cyber-attacks, there is no need to continue such surveillance beyond 96 hours—which is the time we put in our amendment—because that time is sufficient to allow the government to obtain a warrant to continue the surveillance. It is not as if they cannot continue it, they simply have to get a warrant after 4 days. Warrants based on probable cause are still the constitutionally preferred method for conducting surveillance in America. The need for immediate and emergency assistance during a denial of service attack or hacking episode, which I certainly think is a legitimate concern, cannot justify continued surveillance without judicial supervision.

Finally, this amendment prevents law enforcement from abusing this authority in investigations unrelated to the actual computer trespass. The current provision potentially allows law enforcement to intercept wire and electronic communications in many investigations where they may not want, or be able, to secure a court order. If the government suspects a person of committing a crime but does not have probable cause to justify monitoring of the suspect's work computer, it could pressure the owner or operator of the computer to find some transgression in the suspect's computer use, allowing the government carte blanche access to email and internet activity of the suspect. I suspect that few small business owners will be anxious to stand up to federal law enforcement requests for this information.

Now the administration was apparently willing to add language to deal with employees using office computers, but it refused to recognize that in our society many people use computers that they do not own, with permission, but without a contractual relationship. People who don't own their own home computers use computers at libraries. Students use computers at school in computer labs or student centers. Without my amendment, these innocent users could become subject to intrusive government surveillance merely because they disobeyed a rule of the owner of the computer concerning its use. I have been told that this is not the administration's intent, but they would not fix this provision. So I think it is fair to ask why. Why does the administration insist on leaving open the possibility that this provision will be abused to entirely eliminate the privacy of students' and library patrons' computer communications? Is there a hidden agenda here? I sincerely hope not, but I was very disappointed in the administration's unwillingness to address this concern. I remain willing to negotiate on this amendment, but if there is no further movement on it, I hope my colleagues will recognize that this amendment will leave the publicly expressed purpose of the computer trespass provision untouched and fix a potentially disastrous case of overbreadth.

I reserve the remainder of my time.

I ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second?

There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. FEINGOLD. Madam President, how much time do I have remaining on my side?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighteen and one-half minutes on this amendment.

Mr. FEINGOLD. Madam President, I yield 5 minutes to the Senator from Washington.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Washington is recognized.

Ms. CANTWELL. Madam President, I rise to support my colleague, Senator FEINGOLD, and his amendment to section 217. I think the Senator has done a tremendous job in outlining the issues related to this bill and the fact that haste can sometimes make waste. Haste in some instances on very well crafted language to uphold our rights under the Constitution can be infringed upon.

Section 217 is intended to allow computer system owners and operators to fully engage Federal law enforcement where someone hacks or intrudes into their system. As Senator FEINGOLD mentioned, that could be a business owner, or it could be a library system, or it could be a university system.

Unfortunately, as drafted, there are few limits on what communications the Government could intercept without showing probable cause that a crime has been committed and without having the opportunity for judicial review of those intercepts.

The provisions do not even limit the scope of the surveillance. Once authorized, the Government could intercept all communications of a person who is allegedly a trespasser. Again, let me be clear: Without meeting the fourth amendment requirement to show probable cause.

Further, there is no time limit on the surveillance under the provision of this legislation. For those who may be reviewing this legislation for the first time, and understanding that as they go to their workplace, or as they go to their educational institution, or as they go to their library to enhance their education, they could be under surveillance for a very long and indefinite period of time without their knowledge.

Thus, once authorized by a computer system operator, the Government could intercept all communications of a person forever without a proper search warrant. Even a court order wiretap expires after 30 days.

This amendment would remedy some of the defects in this bill. It would do that by requiring that the surveillance be only of communications associated with the trespass and that the length of the surveillance be limited to 96 hours, which, by the way, is twice as long as the time limit placed on emergency wiretap authority. If the problem continues, investigators could easily obtain additional warrant time for the surveillance to continue.

This is a very important time in our country's history. It is a time in which we want to act in unity and support the administration. It is a time in which we want to act to give law enforcement the tools they need to apprehend those who have been responsible and may be responsible for future acts of terrorism. But we also must preserve the right of citizens of this country when it comes to the fourth amendment.

I encourage my colleagues to support the Feingold amendment. I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. FEINGOLD. Madam President, first, I want to say how important it is to have on the committee the Senator with expertise in this area as well as her own background. I appreciate very much her help on this matter.

Madam President, how much time do I have remaining on my side?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has 14½ minutes.

Mr. FEINGOLD. I am happy to yield 5 minutes to the Senator from Minnesota.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. WELLSTONE. Madam President, my colleague from Washington I think speaks within a framework of expertise that she brings to this particular amendment. I speak from the framework of a layperson who has been trying to understand this bill's pluses and minuses.

I say to Senator FEINGOLD and all colleagues, since I think there is kind of a rush to table all of the Feingold amendments, that this amendment is eminently reasonable. The Senator from Wisconsin is saying: Let's put a time limit on this. That is good. Let's have some judicial oversight. That is good as well.

There are international terrorists who have killed many Americans and want to kill more Americans. There are a lot of provisions in this bill which I think are right on the money, including northern border protection which is relevant to the Chair, relevant to the Senator from Washington, and certainly relevant to the people I represent. But I also think there is no reason, in this rush to pass the bill, that we can't make some changes. These are minor changes the Senator wants to make. This just gives this piece of legislation more balance.

I will say this: There is a lot that is good in this bill and a lot that is attractive to me as a Senator. When you add some of the additional security provisions that help all the people we are asked to represent in addition to the benefits—the financial help to all of the rescue workers and all of the innocent people's families, people have been murdered—there is much in this bill that is commendable. The Senator from Wisconsin is just trying to give it more balance.

I say to my colleagues that I hope you will support this amendment. I want to say one other thing as well. I really believe what is good about this bill is the provisions that focus on the people whom the terrorists are basically trying to kill—Americans. What is not as good is when the reach of the bill goes too far beyond that and is too broad.

The sunset provision that passed in the House is so important, so that we can continue to monitor this legislation as we move forward.

I think this amendment that the Senator from Wisconsin has submitted is a step to give this piece of legislation a little more balance, and it will be more vigilant of people's civil liberties. I think it is the right step.

I thank the Senator for his amendment.

Mr. FEINGOLD. I thank the Senator from Minnesota for his help, especially for making this point: All this amendment is about is making sure that it is about the problem we face with the terrorism that is threatening our country and our freedoms. That is all we are trying to do—make sure it doesn't go broadly into people's rights, and into their privacy, and into their own lives.

At this point, I am simply going to reserve the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. HATCH. Madam President, let me talk a little bit about the provision of today's legislation that has been referred to as the ''computer trespasser'' exception.

This provision is a perfect example of how our laws dealing with electronic surveillance have become outdated, and nonsensical as applied to modern technology.

Imagine the following scenario. A terrorist decides to wreak havoc in a major U.S. city by shutting down an electrical power grid. He uses a computer to hack into the mainframe computer of a regional utility company, which he plans to use to bring down the power grid. Before the terrorist can accomplish his goal, the utility company recognizes that an intruder is attempting to access their computer. The company quickly calls the FBI for assistance in repelling the intruder.

Guess what? Under current law, even with the permission from the utility company, the FBI is not permitted to monitor the terrorist's activity on the utility company's computer, because current law perversely grants the terrorist privacy rights with respect to his communications on the computer he has invaded.

It is as if police could not investigate a burglary, even when invited into the house by the victim of the burglary, because the burglar had established privacy rights inside the home he has invaded.

It is anomalies such as this, in our current laws regarding electronic surveillance, that today's legislation is designed to fix.

As it stands, the computer trespasser provision is defined in such a way that the owner or operator of a computer network cannot arbitrarily declare the user of the network at trespasser, and then invite law enforcement in to monitor that user's communications.

The provision, as written, provides that a person is not considered a computer trespasser if the person has an ''existing contractual'' relationship for access to all or part of the computer network.

Senator FEINGOLD's amendment would broadly amend the negotiated exception, including within its scope anyone with a contractual or ''other'' relationship to the owner or operator of a computer network. What is meant by ''other'' relationship? Any hacker could make the argument that they have a relationship with a computer operator. Indeed, were I a defense counsel, I would argue that the mere fact that the hacker has accessed the computer has created some form of relationship. Clearly, the proposed amendment would broadly and unwisely give immunity from our cyber-crime laws. This amendment creates an exception to the criminal laws and puts law enforcement back in the same position they currently are—that is, powerless to investigate hacking incidents where the owner of the computer network wants the assistance of law enforcement.

Madam President, we should not tie the hands of our law enforcement to assist the owners of our computer networks. We should not help hackers and cyberterrorists to get away.

If you are a victim of a burglary, shouldn't you have the right to ask the police to investigate your house, to come to your house and investigate?

Why should the owners of the computer not have the right to ask the police to investigate a commuter-hacking incident, especially where it appears it is terrorist oriented?

This act applies, as written, only to people without authorization to be on the computer. Why should the law protect people who have invaded a computer they have no right to be on?

Let me say one last comment about this. The proponents of this amendment argue it will apply to students using a university computer. That is true, but only if such students use that university computer to hack into a place where they do not belong.

Either we have to get serious in this modern society, with these modern computers, about terrorism or we have to ignore it. I, for one, am not for ignoring it. I believe we need to have this language in here—so does the Justice Department; so does the White House and the White House Counsel's Office—in order to do what cannot be done today to protect people in our society, and to protect our powerplants, our dams, and so many important facilities in our society that are vulnerable to cyber-terrorists. This law, the way it is currently written, will help to do that.

That is all I care to say about it. But I believe we should vote down the Senator's amendment. I know it is well intentioned. I have great respect for the Senator from Wisconsin. He is one of the very diligent members of our committee, and I appreciate him very much, but on this amendment I believe we have to keep the language of the bill the way it is written in order to give our law enforcement people the tools to be able to stop terrorist hacking into computers.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. FEINGOLD. I thank my friend for his kind words.

Madam President, in response to the points he made, first, let me respond that I accept the premise of this basic provision in terms of updating the ability to get at computer hackers. That is an update. We did not know what this was a few years ago. We did not know what risks it posed. Nobody opposes that very important part of this bill.

But what the Senator claims is that the phrase ''contractual relationship'' somehow makes sure that people are protected from being subject to this who really should not be subject to this; but it does it.

I can think of at least three categories of people who do not come within the category of ''contractual relationship.'' One is in the context employment. It is nice if you have a contract, but a lot of employees do not.

They do not fall within the protection of a contractual relationship.

The same goes for people who would go and use a computer at a library. They do not have a contractual relationship to protect them in this situation.

And finally, as the Senator conceded here, in his last example, that certainly students, students at all our universities across the country, are not protected by that language. And that is all we want to do, to make it clear that this amendment is related to the problem of computer hackers, not moms who might be buying Christmas presents on a computer at work, even though they are not supposed to, or students who maybe are gambling on a university computer. Of course they should not do that, but should that subject them to extraordinary, unprecedented intrusion by Government law enforcement authority? Of course not.

The Senator attempts to suggest that the provision in here having to do with our desire to have the language say ''contractual'' or ''other'' relationship would somehow allow a hacker to claim that he is protected. The notion that a hacker would be considered as somebody who has a relationship with the company under this amendment is an absurd interpretation of the amendment's intent, so that clearly is not what this amendment would do.

And finally, let me get back to the students, the example the Senator from Utah mentioned. It is simply an unprecedented intrusion into individual rights for a university to be able to allow—because of a minor use that is not within university rules—that person to be completely subject to this kind of intrusion.

Mr. DURBIN. Will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. FEINGOLD. Yes.

Mr. DURBIN. I have followed this debate closely. I commend the Senator for the hearing he had on the constitutional rights part of this debate. But I want to make sure I understand exactly what his amendment sets out to do.

Is my understanding correct that under the Feingold amendment there could be surveillance of a computer for 96 hours before there is any court approval, so that in the example given by the Senator from Utah, the law enforcement authorities could, in fact, monitor the communications of someone using this computer for 96 hours before ever going to a court and asking for a warrant for that search?

Mr. FEINGOLD. That is correct. And that even troubles me for the length of time that it is allowed—but it is far better than an infinite position. Law Enforcement should be required to seek a warrant as soon as possible, within reason, given the fact that what the amendment tries to get at is emergency situations involving hackers. As soon as possible, they should have to meet the standards that are normally met.

But, yes, the amendment does permit that, in my view, rather extraordinary period of time before the requirement would have to be made.

Mr. DURBIN. And that period of time, I ask the Senator from Wisconsin, is roughly twice the amount currently given under emergency wiretap authority; is that correct?

Mr. FEINGOLD. That is correct.

Mr. DURBIN. One last question. I want to try to understand. I ask the Senator do you not say, in your amendment, that a trespasser does not include someone who is permitted to use a computer by the owner or operator of the computer?

Mr. FEINGOLD. Correct.

Mr. DURBIN. And the difference, of course, is whether it is a contractual relationship or just a permission to use; you are including permission to use as well as contractual relationship?

Mr. FEINGOLD. That is correct.

Mr. DURBIN. The examples you have given are of people going to a library, who may not have a contractual relationship with the library but use the computer, who would be subjected to this warrantless search of their computer communications for an indefinite period of time.

Mr. FEINGOLD. That is right, exactly. This is exactly the problem. All we asked of the committee and of the administration yesterday was to make it clear that they did not want to reach these people. That is what we have been told. The purpose of this is to get at the threat of computer hackers.

The Senator from Illinois has just illustrated, with those examples—and he is, of course, correct—that this could be interpreted and could be understood to include situations that not only have nothing to do with the problem but represent a very serious departure from the individual rights people should have in our country.

Mr. DURBIN. I thank the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. FEINGOLD. I thank the Senator from Illinois and reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. LEAHY. Madam President, I have been concerned about the scope of the amendment carving an exception to the wiretap statute for so-called ''computer trespassers.'' This covers anyone who accesses a computer ''without authorization'' and could allow government eavesdropping, without a court order or other safeguards in the wiretap statute, or Internet users who violate workplace computer use rules or online service rules.

I was unable to reach agreement with the administration on limiting the scope of this amendment, and the Feingold amendment makes further refinements. It is unfortunate that the administration did not accept this amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. HATCH. Madam President, how much time remains?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wisconsin has 4 minutes 47 seconds; the managers have 9 minutes 14 seconds.

Mr. HATCH. I am prepared to yield back whatever time we have, if it is all right with the distinguished Senator from Vermont, with the understanding that we are just trying to stop unauthorized hacking that could be done by terrorists and others who are criminals that currently cannot be stopped. I am prepared to yield back the time, if the distinguished Senator from Vermont is.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. SPECTER. Madam President, I ask the chairman of the committee, after listening to the presentation by the Senator from Wisconsin, what is the chairman's view of the incursion on law enforcement by the limitation of 96 hours?

Mr. LEAHY. The incursion of law enforcement by the 96 hours?

Mr. SPECTER. The principal thrust of what the Senator from Wisconsin seeks to do is to broaden the definition of a contractual relationship to someone who may otherwise have permission. What I am trying to do is to understand the administration's position, the law enforcement position as to how law enforcement is adversely impacted by what the Senator from Wisconsin seeks to do.

My concern, as expressed earlier, is that, especially in the face of the challenge by the amendment, this is a complicated bill.

The reality is, it is hard to know all of it without the normal hearing process. Now we have a specific challenge. What I would like to know is, how does it inhibit law enforcement? What about the broader definition gives problems to law enforcement? And then, what is the difficulty in having 96 hours, which is 4 days, to see what is going on to find some basis for seeking a warrant with probable cause?

Mr. LEAHY. Frankly, I don't have a problem with the Feingold amendment as it is written. I do have a problem, however, with keeping a bill together. The initial administration request had no limitations whatsoever. It was so wide open we were concerned that someone who might be using a computer at work to add up their accounts for the month would be trapped by this because the company said you couldn't use the computer to add up your checking account, for example, to use a farfetched example, because they would be accessing the computer without authorization and the Government could just step in and go forward.

The administration moved partly our way. We actually ended up with a compromise on this. I suspect what they would say to the Senator from Pennsylvania is that these attacks last more than 96 hours and that they would be unable to go after them if they were limited to the 96 hours.

We saw this recently 2 or 3 weeks ago where we had a continuous roving attack on a number of Government computers. As I recall—I didn't pay that much attention at the time—they were attacking them one week and when we came back the following week, they were still attacking them. So you had more than 96 hours.

Frankly, it is a case where we have reached a compromise. The distinguished ranking member, speaking on behalf of the administration, said this is not acceptable to them. Had this been part of the original package, I wouldn't have found it acceptable.

Mr. HATCH. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. SPECTER. Yes.

Mr. HATCH. Basically, what the administration is after here is that if a burglar is coming into your home and the police come to investigate, they don't have to report to a judge within 96 hours. The police have to act on these terrorist matters. If they find that a terrorist has infiltrated a computer controlling an electrical grid system, they want to get right on the ball and do something about it. That is what they are trying to do with this provision.

There are no fourth amendment rights implicated because you have people who have hacked into a computer that they don't have any right to be in.

We want to give law enforcement the power to stop that. This provision upsets that power and basically puts us back where we are when we can't do anything in a modern digital age to stop terrorists from stopping power grids and damaging dams and a whole raft of other things.

Mr. SPECTER. Madam President, if the Senator from Utah will yield for a question?

Mr. HATCH. Surely.

Mr. SPECTER. The Senator from Wisconsin makes the point that people may have standing to use a computer even without a contractual relationship. He uses the example of a student. Does the Senator from Utah believe or does the administration represent that there are no relationships other than contractual which give a person the legitimate standing to use the computer?

Mr. HATCH. Under this provision, you do not have a right to hack into another private computer, whether you are a university student or anybody else. It only applies, the law we have written, to unauthorized access. It does not apply to authorized access. But unauthorized access, yes, it applies to that. If we don't put it in there, we will be leaving a glaring error that currently exists in our laws that prohibit us from solving some of these problems. It would be a terrible thing to not correct at this particular time, knowing what we know about how these terrorists are operating right now.

Mr. SPECTER. So is the Senator from Utah saying that if you have permission, that is a form of a contractual relationship?

Mr. HATCH. I am saying that if you have permission, you are not covered by this provision as written. In other words, you would not be considered a hacker.

Mr. SPECTER. On its face you would seem to, unless there is a contractual relationship?

Mr. HATCH. It comes down to authorized or unauthorized access. If it is authorized, it is not covered under the computer trespasser provision.

Mr. SPECTER. I thank the Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. FEINGOLD. Madam President, did the Senator yield back his remaining time?

Mr. HATCH. Yes, we are prepared to yield.

Mr. LEAHY. We are prepared if the Senator from Wisconsin is.

Mr. FEINGOLD. I want to clarify a couple points, then I will be prepared to yield the remaining time.

These were helpful exchanges on a couple of points. First of all, it became very clear from Senator SPECTER's excellent questioning that, of course, there is no guarantee, under the way this language is set up, under the words ''contractual relationship,'' that the provision would not apply to students or to people who would use a computer at a library. I can't understand why, if that is the intent of the administration, the intent of the legislation, why they don't just agree to language that would say so. That is all we asked for yesterday. It could have resolved the problem. For some reason, they won't agree to it.

Second, is this notion that a hacker could somehow get in under our language. There is no way that a hacker has a relationship with the computer owner that permits the use of the computer. The hacker is, obviously, the antithesis, the opposite of an individual with a relationship that permits use of the computer.

Finally, I am amazed at this notion that this amendment, even under our version of it, would allow only 96 hours for surveillance when under the example of the Senator from Utah, an ongoing hacker attack is occurring.

Is it the Senator's contention that at the end of 96 hours, the FBI would not have probable cause to get a warrant, when all it has been dealing with for 4 days is this hacking of the computer? Of course, it would. It would be the easiest thing in the world.

Section 217 is a very dramatic exception to the usual rule as derived under our system, and expressed in the fourth amendment. Normally, you have to come up with probable cause and a warrant. There are exceptions because we have difficult problems sometimes. But 96 hours? At the end of that time, with clear evidence of a hacking attempt, a warrant could easily be obtained. Obviously, our amendment takes care of the need for emergency authorization. In fact, I think it is too generous. I am trying to put some kind of a time limit on this so we can have some semblance of the normal rules that protect our citizens.

If the other side yields their time, I will yield my remaining time as well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The majority leader is recognized.

Mr. DASCHLE. Madam President, I have listened to this debate with great interest, and I appreciate very much the arguments made by the Senator from Wisconsin. As the Senator from Vermont and, I believe, the Senator from Pennsylvania, have noted, there are circumstances where I can easily see that we could be sympathetic to his amendment. He makes an argument.

My difficulty tonight is not substantive as much as it is procedural. There is no question, all 100 of us could go through this bill with a fine-tooth comb and pinpoint those things which we could improve. There is no doubt about that. I have looked at this bill, and there are a lot of things, were I to write it alone, upon which I could improve. I know the chairman of the committee believes that too.

I think we also have to recognize that this is the product of a lot of work in concert with our Republican colleagues, in concert with the administration, in concert with civil liberties groups, and in concert with law enforcement. We have come up with what I would view as a delicate but, yes, successful compromise.

Now, if we had opened the bill to amendment, I have no doubt there are many colleagues who would offer amendments with which I would vehemently disagree—in fact, so much so that I might want to filibuster the bill. I would probably lose. I think there is a realistic expectation that on a lot of these issues, my side would lose. I think you could make the same case for the other side. So, we made the best judgment we could, taking into account the very delicate balance between civil liberties and law enforcement that we had to achieve in bringing a bill of this complexity to the floor.

I have to say, I think our chair and ranking member and all of those involved did a terrific job under the most difficult of circumstances. What we did was to say: Let's take this product and work with it; let's review it; if we have to make some changes, let's consider them; but let's recognize that if we were to take this bill open-ended, there would be no end to the amendments—that is the result that would most likely occur in such a circumstance.

While I may be sympathetic to some amendments offered tonight, had it been an open debate, there would have been a lot of amendments for which I would not have been sympathetic.

Given those circumstances, my argument is not substantive, it is procedural. We have a job to do. The clock is ticking. The work needs to get done. We have to make our best judgment about what is possible, and that process goes on.

I hope my colleagues will join me tonight in tabling this amendment and tabling every other amendment that is offered, should he choose to offer them tonight. Let's move on and finish this bill. Let's work with the House and come up with the best product between the Houses. Then, let's let law enforcement do its job, and let's use our power of oversight to ensure that civil liberties are protected.

I make a motion to table.

Mr. LEAHY. Will the Senator withhold that motion to table for a moment?

Mr. DASCHLE. Yes.

Mr. LEAHY. Madam President, I have served with over 250 Senators here, and I have been proud to serve with all of them. I know of no Senator who has a stronger commitment to our individual rights and personal liberties than the senior Senator from South Dakota, our majority leader. But I also know that were it not for his commitment and efforts, we would not be here with a far better bill than the one originally proposed by the administration. It has been because of his willingness to back us up as we try to improve that bill, to remove unconstitutional aspects of it, because of his willingness, we were able to get here.

As the Senator from South Dakota, the dearest friend I have in this body, has said, he could find parts he would do differently, and he knows there are parts I would do differently—even on this one. I have high regard for the Senator from Wisconsin, and I would have loved to have had his amendment. Actually, I would have done it probably differently than that. But we had a whole lot of places where we won and some where we lost.

I can tell you right now, if we start unraveling this bill, we are going to lose all the parts we won and we will be back to a proposal that was blatantly unconstitutional in many parts. So I join, with no reluctance whatsoever, in the leader's motion.

Mr. DASCHLE. Madam President, I move to table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. FEINGOLD. Madam President, on this bill there was not a single moment of markup or vote in the Judiciary Committee. I accepted that because of the crisis our Nation faces. This is the first substantive amendment in the Senate on this entire issue, one of the most important civil liberties bills of our time, and the majority leader has asked Senators to not vote on the merits of the issue. I understand the difficult task he has, but I must object to the idea that not one single amendment on this issue will be voted on the merits on the floor of the Senate.

What have we come to when we don't have either committee or Senate deliberation on amendments on an issue of this importance?

I yield the floor, and I yield back the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All time is yielded back.

Mr. DASCHLE. Madam President, I move to table the amendment.

Mr. LEAHY. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second?

There is a sufficient second.

The question is on agreeing to the motion.

The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. NICKLES. I announce that the Senator from North Carolina (Mr. HELMS), the Senator from New Mexico (Mr. DOMENICI), the Senator from South Carolina (Mr. THURMOND), and the Senator from Mississippi (Mr. LOTT) are necessary absent.

I further announce that if present and voting the Senator from North Carolina (Mr. HELMS) would vote ''yea.''

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Are there any other Senators in the Chamber desiring to vote?

The result was announced—yeas 83, nays 13, as follows:

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. LEAHY. I move to reconsider the vote.

Mr. DASCHLE. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. LEAHY. Madam President, so we understand where we are, there is still a fair amount of time on the bill that the Senator from Utah and I have and we have committed to Senators on both sides of the aisle who need time. The remaining time is for the Senator from Wisconsin who has three more amendments with the same time as he had in the last amendment.

The Senator from Massachusetts has asked for 5 minutes. I understand we have three more amendments that would take probably an hour or so per amendment with the vote if the Senator from Wisconsin wishes to use all his time, and he has a right to do that.

Once those are disposed of, the Senator from Utah and I are probably prepared to yield back our time.

I yield 5 minutes to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. KERRY. Madam President, it was depending entirely on what the Senator from Wisconsin was doing. I reserve that now and see where we are heading.

Mr. LEAHY. I yield the floor.

Mr. FEINGOLD. Madam President, it is my intention to offer two more amendments, not the third amendment. I believe the time for each of these amendments could be less than the full time allotted. We have a fair amount of interest, but I didn't expect as much debate. I think the last two could be expedited, and I am prepared to proceed, if that is what my colleagues desire.

AMENDMENT NO. 1900

I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. FEINGOLD] proposes an amendment numbered 1900.

Mr. FEINGOLD. I ask unanimous consent reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

On page 21, line 14, insert ''except that, in such circumstances, the order shall direct that the surveillance shall be conducted only when the target's presence at the place where, or use of the facility at which, the electronic surveillance is to be directed has been ascertained by the person implementing the order and that the electronic surveillance must be directed only at the communication of the target,'' after ''such other persons''.

Mr. KERRY. For the purpose of planning, could the Senator give us a sense of both amendments and how long he thinks he will talk.

Mr. FEINGOLD. I have about 12 minutes on this amendment subject to any response to that and approximately the same on the second amendment.

Mr. KERRY. I thank the Chair.

Mr. FEINGOLD. Madam President, this amendment has to do with what is called roving wiretap, or multipoint surveillance authority. This is one of the first things Attorney General Ashcroft asked for in the first days after the September 11 attack and gave the example of a terrorist using throwaway cell phones and the need for continued roaming wiretap authority to allow the FBI to keep up with the ready availability of this new technology.

First, let me say I have a lot of sympathy for the idea of updating this area of the law. Obviously, it is needed in light of changes in technology. It is vitally important for Members of the Senate to understand that roving wiretap authority is already available for criminal investigations under title III. It is in title 18, section 2518(11) and (12). The Attorney General doesn't need nor has he asked for any new roving wiretap authority for criminal investigations. He already has it.

What the bill does in Section 206 is provide similar authority in investigations under the Foreign Intelligence Surveillance Act, known as FISA. I am not opposed to expanding existing roving wiretap authority to include FISA investigations, but I am very concerned that Section 206 does not include a key safeguard that was part of the roving wiretap authority when it was added to title III in 1986. That protection minimizes the possible misuse of the authority, whether intentional or unintentional, to eavesdrop on the conversations of individuals who are not the subject of the investigation.

Let me read from the Senate Judiciary Committee's report on the legislation that granted roving wiretap authority:

> Proposed subsection 2518(12) of title 18 provides, with respect to both ''wire'' and ''oral'' communications, that where the federal government has been successful in obtaining a relaxed specificity order, it cannot begin the interception until the facilities or place from which the communication is to be intercepted is ascertained by the person implementing the interception order.

In other words, the actual interception could not begin until the suspect begins or evidences an intention to begin a conversation.

It further reads:

> It would be improper to use this expanded specificity order to tap a series of telephones, intercept all conversations over such phones and then minimize the conversations collected as a result. This provision puts the burden on the investigation agency to ascertain when the interception is to take place.

It seems to me that Congress struck the right balance in that provision. It recognized the needs of law enforcement, but also recognized that rights of innocent people were implicated and designed a safeguard to protect them.

When Congress passed FISA in 1978 it granted to the executive branch the power to conduct surveillance in certain types of investigations without meeting the rigorous probable cause standard under the Fourth Amendment that is required for criminal investigations. Investigations of agents of foreign powers were different. There is a lower threshold for obtaining an order from the FISA court. But I don't think that roving wiretap authority under FISA should be less protective of the constitutional rights of innocent people who are not the subject of the investigation than the authority that Congress intended to grant in a standard criminal investigation.

My amendment takes the safeguard from Title III—from current law—and includes it in the FISA roving wiretap authority provision. The amendment simply provides that before conducting surveillance, the person implementing the order must ascertain that the target of the surveillance is actually in the house that has been bugged, or using the phone that has been tapped.

Let me give a few examples of how this would work, which should also show why it is necessary. Indeed, it may be constitutionally required. If the government receives information that the target of the FISA investigation is making phone calls from a particular bank of pay phones in a train station, it may set up wiretaps at all the phones in that bank, but may only listen in on a particular phone that the subject is using. Before beginning the actual surveillance it must know that the suspect is using a particular phone. Otherwise, on the basis of a report that a terrorist has been using a particular bank of pay phones, the private conversations of innumerable innocent Americans with absolutely no connection to the investigation would be subject to government scrutiny. That violates their Fourth Amendment rights. Similarly, the Government should not be able to conduct surveillance on all payphones in a neighborhood frequented by a suspected terrorist or on a particular payphone all day long while innocent people use it.

Another example. Suppose a target of a FISA investigation has the practice of using a neighbor's or relative's phone. Under my amendment, the Government would not be able to listen in on all calls from that phone, but only those taking place when the target is in that person's home. Likewise, if the government believes that the target uses computers in a library, it can only monitor the one that the terrorist is actually using, not all the computers in that facility even when the terrorist is not there.

I don't believe this amendment should affect the Government's authorization to monitor a new cell phone obtained by the target. If the phone is in the possession of the target or is registered to the target, then the person implementing the surveillance has ascertained that the facility is being used by the target. They could do it, and I support that.

Now, it has been pointed out to me that in 1999 this safeguard was removed from Title III with respect to wiretaps but left in place with respect to bugs. The change was made in the conference report of an intelligence authorization bill, without consideration by the Senate Judiciary Committee.

I remind my colleagues again that my amendment was part of the roving wiretap authority that Congress granted federal law enforcement in criminal investigations in 1986. It contains a standard that as far as we know served law enforcement adequately in conducting effective surveillance on very sophisticated criminal organizations, including the mafia and drug importation and distribution organizations. I submit that if this standard is not sufficient, we would have seen an open effort to change it, but we didn't. Even after the change made in 1999 without discussion or debate, the standard remains in effect for bugs placed in homes or businesses. Without this protection, Section 206 threatens the rights of innocent people.

If law enforcement has been significantly impaired in conducting effective surveillance in criminal investigations under the roving wiretap provision in current law, we should be shown specific evidence of its shortcomings. But if it has not been impaired, then there is no reason not to include a similar safeguard in the roving wiretap authority under FISA.

I urge my colleagues to take a close look at this amendment. It is reasonable, it appropriately reflects current law, but it also allows for updating to face the reality of new technology and all the technologies that are implicated here. And it protects the constitutional rights of people who are not the subjects of an investigation.

Mr. WELLSTONE. Will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. FEINGOLD. Yes.

Mr. WELLSTONE. Again, I am not a lawyer. I do not think I understood exactly all the argument you were making.

Are you saying there has to be some standard of proof? That before conducting surveillance, law enforcement has to make sure? In other words, before you actually wiretap a phone or bug a house or a home, the target of the surveillance has to be in that home you are bugging?

Mr. FEINGOLD. No. Let's say somebody goes to their neighbor's house to use their phone. They do that once or twice or whatever it might be. Our amendment makes sure this new provision doesn't open up that house and everybody in it and every phone call they have in the house to unlimited Government surveillance. It requires what has been normally required under the law, that the law enforcement people ascertain that the person is in the house at the time so it is credible that they would be using that phone again.

Mr. WELLSTONE. In other words, other people who are in the house who have nothing to do with the target of surveillance, their conversations could be—

Mr. FEINGOLD. Their conversations could and undoubtedly would be, without some protection.

Mr. WELLSTONE. And the same thing for the bugging?

Mr. FEINGOLD. Exactly.

Mr. WELLSTONE. So you are trying to minimize the misuse of authority. It might be unintentional?

Mr. FEINGOLD. Absolutely. There are standards, as I indicated in my statement. There have been rules about how law enforcement has to ascertain, whether it be at a phone bank or in somebody else's home, that there is a reasonable belief that the individual is actually there. Without that kind of rule, what we are doing is not just extending this authority to the reality that people have cell phones and move around and use different phones of their own, but it takes us into an area that, frankly, prior to September 11 we would never have dreamed of allowing.

Mr. WELLSTONE. Madam President, if I could take 2 minutes —I ask the Senator from Wisconsin, might I have 2 minutes?

Mr. FEINGOLD. Yes. Madam President, I ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second? There appears to be.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. FEINGOLD. I yield 2 minutes.

Mr. WELLSTONE. My colleague is saying we have to be very careful about not eavesdropping on the conversations of innocent individuals.

Again, we all are painfully aware of September 11. I personally think there is much in this bill that is good, that we need to do. But I think all the Senator from Wisconsin is trying to do is achieve some balance and make sure we do not go above and beyond going after terrorists who are trying to kill Americans and instead end up eavesdropping on innocent people in our country.

I think the vast majority of the people in the country, if they understood what this amendment was about, would support this amendment. I do not think passing this amendment does any damage whatsoever to much of what is in this bill, which is so important.

So, again, I hope Senators will support this amendment on the merits. I think it is a very important amendment. I thank the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. FEINGOLD. I thank the Senator from Minnesota very much for his help, and I reserve the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time? The Senator from Utah.

Mr. HATCH. Madam President, under current law, law enforcement has so-called-roving or multi-point surveillance authority for criminal investigations under title III, but FISA does not have comparable provisions for agents investigating foreign intelligence. Roving interceptions are tied to a named person rather than to any particular communications facility or place. Today's bill adds this vital authority to FISA.

This authority is critical for tracking suspected spies and terrorists who are experts in counter-surveillance methods such as frequently changing locations and communications devices such as phones and computer accounts.

It simply makes no sense that our wire-tapping statute recognizes this problem, and provides roving wiretap authority for surveillance of common criminals, but makes no provision for roving authority to monitor terrorists under the FISA statute.

The proposed amendment would not succeed in its stated goal of harmonizing the standard between title III wiretaps and FISA wiretaps. The proposed amendment would put a requirement on the interception of wire or electronic communications under a FISA warrant that does not exist in the title III context—a requirement that the law enforcement officer implementing the wiretapping order personally ascertain that the target of the order is using a telephone or computer, before the monitoring could begin.

This requirement is operationally unworkable. The way that roving orders are implemented, requires that law enforcement officers have the ability to spot check several different telephones in order to determine which one is being used by the target of the order. The language proposed in this amendment does not give law enforcement officers the ability to do so. In fact, they would be worse off under this proposal than they are under current law.

The goal of the roving wiretap provision is to give counter-terrorism investigators as much authority to conduct wiretaps as their counterparts have in conducting criminal investigations. This amendment defeats that goal by putting new, significant obstacles in the path of investigators attempting to investigate and prevent terrorist activities.

Mr. LEAHY. Madam President, Senator FEINGOLD provided invaluable assistance to the committee during our consideration of this legislation. He also held a hearing in his Constitution Subcommittee last week on the critical civil liberties issues raised by the Administration's anti-terrorism bill. I fully appreciate the depth of his concern and his desire to improve this bill.

The Attorney General and I agreed in principal that the roving, or multipoint, wiretap authority for criminal cases should be available under FISA for foreign intelligence cases. The need for such authority is especially acute to conduct surveillance of foreign spies trained in the art of avoiding surveillance and detection.

Senator FEINGOLD's amendment simply assures that when roving surveillance is conducted, the Government makes efforts to ascertain that the target is actually at the place or using the phone, being tapped. This is required in the criminal context. It is unfortunate that the Administration did not accept this amendment.

I hope all time could be yielded back on both sides.

Mr. FEINGOLD. It is my understanding the opponents have yielded all time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct.

Mr. LEAHY. If the Senator is going to yield his.

Mr. FEINGOLD. I yield my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The majority leader.

Mr. DASCHLE. Madam President, I will just use a minute of my leader time to respond.

I have already made my argument on the first amendment. I, in the interest of time, am not going to repeat it. As I said before, I am sympathetic to many of these ideas, but I am much more sympathetic to arriving at a product that will bring us to a point where we can pass something into law. The record reflects the compromises that have been put in place, the very delicate balance that we have achieved. It is too late to open up the amendment process in a way that might destroy that delicate balance. For that reason, I move to table this amendment.

I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second? There is a sufficient second.

The question is on agreeing to the motion. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. NICKLES. I announce that the Senator from North Carolina (Mr. HELMS), the Senator from South Carolina (Mr. THURMOND), and the Senator from New Mexico (Mr. DOMENICI) are necessarily absent.

I further announce that if present and voting the Senator from North Carolina (Mr. HELMS) would vote ''yea.''

Mr. LEAHY. I move to reconsider the vote.

Mr. HATCH. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Vermont.

Mr. LEAHY. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a Statement of Administration Policy on the USA Act.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATEMENT OF ADMINISTRATION POLICY

(This statement has been coordinated by OMB with the concerned agencies)

S. 1510—UNITING AND STRENGTHENING AMERICA (USA) ACT OF 2001

The Administration commends the Senate leadership and the Chairman and Ranking Member of the Senate Judiciary Committee on reaching agreement on S. 1510. This bill contains, in some form, virtually all of the proposals made by the Administration in the wake of the terrorist attacks perpetrated against the United States on September 11th. The Administration strongly supports passage of this bill.

The Administration's initial proposals, on which S. 1510 is based, were designed to provide Federal law enforcement and national security officials with the tools and resources necessary to disrupt, weaken, and counter the infrastructure of terrorist organizations, to prevent terrorist attacks, and to punish and defeat terrorists and those who harbor them. S. 1510 includes the provisions proposed by the Administration in three main areas: (1) information gathering and sharing; (2) substantive criminal law and criminal procedure; and (3) immigration procedures. The Administration strongly supports passage of these provisions. The Administration also supports valuable provisions, introduced by the Chairman of the Senate Judiciary Committee, aimed at improving the Nation's border protection.

Information Gathering and Sharing

Existing laws fail to provide national security authorities and law enforcement authorities with certain critical tools they need to fight and win the war against terrorism. For example, technology has dramatically outpaced the Nation's statutes. Many of the most important intelligence gathering laws were enacted decades ago, in and for an era of rotary telephones. Meanwhile, the Nation's enemies use e-mail, the Internet, mobile communications and voice mail.

S. 1510 contains numerous provisions that address this problem by helping to make the intelligence gathering and surveillance statutes more ''technology-neutral.'' Specifically, the bill updates the pen-register, trap-and-trace, and Title III-wiretap statutes to cover computer and mobile communications more effectively, while ensuring that the scope of the authority remains the same.

The bill also provides for nationwide scope of orders and search warrants, and other practical changes that will enable law enforcement to work more efficiently and effectively. In addition, the bill contains important updates of foreign intelligence gathering-statutes, with the identical goal of making the statutes technology-neutral. Even more important, the bill contains provisions to reduce existing barriers to the sharing of information among Federal agencies where necessary to identify and respond to terrorist threats. The ability of law enforcement and national security personnel to share this type of information is a critical tool for pursuing the war against terrorism on all fronts.

Substantive Criminal Law and Criminal Procedure

S. 1510 contains important reforms to the criminal statutes designed to strengthen law enforcement's ability to investigate, prosecute, prevent, and punish terrorism crimes. The bill would remove existing barriers to effective prosecution by extending the statute of limitations for terrorist crimes that risk or result in death or serious injury. The bill also creates and strengthens criminal statutes, including a prohibition on harboring terrorists and on providing material support to terrorists, and provides for tougher penalties, including longer prison terms and higher conspiracy penalties for those who commit terrorist acts. These provisions will help to ensure that the fight against terrorism is a national priority in our criminal justice system.

Border Protection and Immigration Procedures

S. 1510 also contains a number of provisions that would enhance the ability of immigration officials to exclude or deport aliens who engage in terrorist activity and improve the Federal government's ability to share information about suspected terrorists. Under the bill, those who contribute to or otherwise support terrorist organizations and terrorist activities would be denied admission to or deported from this country, and the Attorney General would be authorized to detain deportable persons who are suspected of terrorist activities pending their removal from the United States. In addition, the bill provides for access by the Department of State and the Immigration and Naturalization Service to criminal history records and related information maintained by the Federal Bureau of Investigation.

Money Laundering

Title III of S. 1510 includes money laundering and other financial infrastructure provisions, arising from a separate legislative proposal from the Administration. These provisions were added to this bill after unanimous approval was reached on these provisions in the Senate Banking Committee. The Administration supports the effort to strengthen the money laundering statutes to help combat terrorism, and supports virtually all of the proposals that are now included in S. 1510.

Pay-As-You-Go Scoring

Any law that would increase direct spending is subject to the pay-as-you-go requirements of the Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Act. Accordingly, S. 1510, or any substitute amendment in lieu thereof that would also increase direct spending, will be subject to the pay-as-you-go requirement. OMB's scoring estimates are under development. The Administration will work with Congress to ensure that any unintended sequester of spending does not occur under current law or the enactment of any other proposals that meet the President's objectives to reduce the debt, fund priority initiatives, and grant tax relief to all income tax paying Americans.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Vermont.

Mr. LEAHY. Madam President, I know the Senator from Wisconsin has another amendment. I have had requests for time on our side of the aisle from the distinguished Senator from Washington State, Ms. CANTWELL, for 7 minutes; the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts, Mr. KERRY, for 5 minutes; the distinguished Senator from Minnesota, Mr. WELLSTONE, for 5 minutes; the distinguished Senator from Michigan, Mr. LEVIN, for 2 minutes.

I mention that, not to lock that in, because the time is there, but just to give people an idea of where we are.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. FEINGOLD. Madam President, is the Senator from Vermont proposing a time agreement?

Mr. LEAHY. No. I am just saying what people are requesting for time. I am trying to get some idea. A number of Senators have asked the distinguished leader and myself how much longer we are going to be here tonight.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The majority leader.

Mr. DASCHLE. Madam President, let me just say, anybody who wishes to speak on this bill is certainly welcome to do so, but we will be here after the vote for anybody who wishes to accommodate any other Senator who would like to go home.

The hour is late. We have one more amendment, and then we have final passage. It is my hope that we can complete our work on the bill and certainly leave open the opportunity for Senators to express themselves. We will stay just as long as that is required. I hope, though, we can accommodate other Senators who may not feel the need to participate in further debate.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. SPECTER. Madam President, I had spoken earlier this evening at some length about my concerns as to the procedures on the bill. I want to make a very few brief comments at this time.

I am concerned about the procedures on establishing a record which will withstand constitutional scrutiny. I shall not repeat the citations from decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States which I cited earlier, except to say that the Supreme Court has invalidated acts of Congress where there is not a considered judgment.

I understand the position of the majority leader in wanting to get this bill finished. Earlier this evening, I went through an elaborate chronology as to what has happened here. Nine days after September 11, the Attorney General submitted a bill. I had suggested hearings that week. The bill was submitted on September 20. We could have had hearings on September 21 and even on September 22, a Saturday. The Judiciary Committee had one hearing, a very brief one, on September 25.

I wrote the chairman of the committee two letters urging hearings, and there was ample time to have hearings to find out about the details of this bill. There was a Judiciary subcommittee hearing on October 3.

This bill was negotiated between the chairman and ranking member and the White House. The Judiciary Committee did not take up the bill. We have had ample time. This bill should have been before the Senate 2 weeks ago. If we had moved on it promptly after it was submitted on the 20th, we could have had hearings, perhaps some in closed session. We could have had a markup. We could have had an understanding of the bill.

When the Senator from Wisconsin has offered two amendments, which I have supported, I am inquiring as to what is the specific concern about law enforcement to preclude the adoption of the amendments of the Senator from Wisconsin and on the possible invasions of privacy that may result from the amendments not being adopted.

This is a very important bill. I intend to vote for it. I served 8 years on the Intelligence Committee, 2 years as chairman. I chaired the Subcommittee of Judiciary on Terrorism. I have been through detailed hearings and understand the problem we face, especially in light of the warning which was put out today, and I understand, with the approval of the President, that a terrorist act may happen in the United States or overseas in the next several days.

We do need adequate law enforcement powers. We should have finished this bill some time ago. But when the majority leader says he is concerned about procedure and not about substance, we are regrettably establishing a record where we have not only not shown the deliberative process to uphold constitutionality, but we are putting on the record a disregard for constitutionality and elevating procedure over substance, which is not the way you legislate in a constitutional area where the Supreme Court of the United States balances law enforcement's needs with the incursion on privacy.

I feel constrained to make these comments. I hope yet that we can create a record which will withstand constitutional scrutiny.

Again, I intend to vote for the bill, but say again that this body ought to be proceeding in a way to establish the record. The worst thing that would happen is if we try terrorists, having used these procedures, and have the convictions invalidated. I have had experiences as a prosecuting attorney and know exactly what that means.

I want my concerns noted for the record. I thank the Chair and yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. KERRY. Madam President, I have 5 minutes, but I will not use it. I want to make two very quick points.

One, as a former prosecutor, I am sympathetic to the comments of the Senator from Pennsylvania. I think all of us ought to be respectful of what the Senator from Wisconsin has been talking about this evening.

I will vote for the bill. I am particularly sensitive to what the majority leader has said about the delicacy and the balance. Even within that delicacy, there are some very legitimate concerns.

It is my hope that when this goes to conference, some of the positions of the House will be thought about carefully and respected and that the Senate may even be able to improve what we have by taking those into account.

The second point is that there is within this legislation for the first time a very significant effort on money laundering. I will say to my colleagues that of all the weapons in this war and for all of our might militarily, the most significant efforts to ferret out and stop terrorists are going to come from the combination of information, intelligence that we gather and process, and from our ability to take unconventional steps, particularly those such as the money-laundering measures.

Senator LEVIN has done an outstanding job of helping to frame that, as has Senator SARBANES. The truth is, there are banking interests that even to this moment still resist living up to the standards of the Basel convention and the international standards about knowing your customer and being part of the law enforcement effort rather than a blockade to it.

We are told there may be some effort through the House to try to strip this out. It is my hope that the Senate will stand firm and hold to the full measure of what President Bush has asked us to do.

This will be a long effort, a painstaking effort. If we are serious about it, we have to have the law enforcement tools to make this happen.

One of the most critical ones is empowering the Secretary of the Treasury to do a reasonable, ratcheted, sort of geared process of addressing the concerns of ferreting out money laundering and taking the money away from these illicit interests around the globe. They are not just in terrorism. They are linked to money laundering, to illegal alien trafficking. They are all part of the same network which also funds the terrorists themselves.

We recognize that three-quarters of the heroin that reaches the United States comes from Afghanistan. The Taliban and al-Qaida were both trafficking in that heroin. These networks and the interconnectedness of them to the banking institutions, the financial marketplace, are absolutely essential for us as we fight a war on terrorism.

I hope this money-laundering component will be part of the final terrorism bill.

I yield whatever remaining time I have.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Michigan.

Mr. LEVIN. Madam President, I thank Chairman LEAHY, Chairman SARBANES, and members of their committees, for including our very strong anti-money-laundering provisions in the antiterrorism bill. The antiterrorism bill is simply incomplete unless it has anti-money-laundering provisions. Our provisions are strong provisions. They will help prevent terrorists and other criminals from using our banks to get their money into this country to fund their activities which are terrorizing this country.

There apparently is going to be a continuing effort in the House of Representatives to strip the anti-money-laundering provisions, which we have worked so hard on, from the antiterrorism bill. It is my understanding the White House will support keeping those provisions in the bill. Our committees have worked very hard to keep our anti-money-laundering provisions in the antiterrorism bill. Unless these provisions are in there, we are providing the executive branch with only half a tool box in the fight against terrorism.

Three years ago, the minority staff of the Permanent Subcommittee on Investigations which I now chair, began its investigation into money laundering using U.S. banks. Three years, three sets of hearings, two reports and a five-volume record on correspondent banking and money laundering was the result.

We found, not surprisingly, that U.S. banks have accounts for foreign banks and that the customers of those foreign banks can then use the U.S. banks to move their money. But if foreign banks do a poor job of screening their customers, criminals and terrorists can end up using U.S. banks for their criminal purposes.

We found that U.S. banks do a poor job in screening the foreign banks they accept as correspondent customers. Banks told us ''a bank is a bank is a bank'' but that's not true. There are good banks and bad banks. We found numerous banks where the bank was engaged in criminal activity or had such poor banking practices any criminal could be a customer. If a bad bank has a correspondent account with a U.S. bank, customers of that bad bank have access to U.S. financial system. Then criminals, including drug traffickers and terrorists, are able to use our financial systems to carry out their crimes.

In response to what we learned, we developed a bill—S. 1371, the Money Laundering Abatement Act introduced in early August.

It's a bipartisan bill, and I would like to recognize my cosponsors—in particular, Senator CHUCK GRASSLEY who has helped to lead the fight for including this money laundering legislation on this anti-terrorism bill. The cosponsors in addition to Senator GRASSLEY are: Senators SARBANES, KYL, DEWINE, BILL NELSON, DURBIN, KERRY and STABENOW. The provisions of this bill have been included in the legislation we are now considering.

We now know that the September 11 terrorists used our financial institutions and systems to help accomplish their ends. They used checks, credit cards, and wire transfers involving U.S. banks in Florida, New York, Pennsylvania. We've seen the photos of two of the terrorists using an ATM machine. Osama bin Laden has bragged about it. There are reports of large, unpaid credit card bills.

We know that current law is not tough enough in area of correspondent banking—the mechanism used to transfer money around the globe. There are too many holes that let in bad banks and bad actors, and we need to close them.

Look at what we've learned just in the last few days about bin Laden and al-Qaida. Several U.S. banks have had correspondent accounts for a Sundanese bank called the al Shamal Islamic Bank.

A 1996 State Department fact sheet states that bin Laden helped finance the bank in the amount of $50 million. A respected international newsletter on intelligence matters, Indigo Publications in March 16, 2000, said bin Laden remains a leading shareholder, although the al Shamal Bank apparently denies that.

Testimony in the February 2001 criminal trial of the 1998 terrorist bombings of U.S. embassies in Kenya and Tanzania, revealed that a bin Laden associate who handled financial transactions for al-Qaida testified al-Qaida had a half dozen accounts at al Shamal bank, one of which was in bin Laden's name. The witness at that trial said in 1994 a bin Laden associate took $100,000—in cash, U.S. Dollars—out of the Shamal Bank gave it to the witness and told him to deliver it to an individual in Jordan, which he did.

Another bin Ladin associate testified at the same trial that he received $250,000 by a wire transfer from the Shamal Bank to his account in a U.S. bank in Arlington, Texas, to purchase a plane in the United States for bin Laden. He said he personally delivered the plane to bin Laden.

Why did this bank have a correspondent account with a U.S. bank? Why should we allow that to happen?

Even today, when you look at the al Shamal bank website, the bank is still active and advertises an extensive correspondent bank network. Three U.S. banks are listed. One of those banks has closed its account, but the two other banks continue to have accounts, although the accounts are frozen. Those accounts are now inactive because Sudan, home country of al Shamal, is on the list of terrorist countries and any business with the government of those countries has to be approved. But the accounts were operational at one point in time. Moreover, al Shamal bank has correspondent accounts with other foreign banks which have accounts with U.S. banks.

That means al Shamal bank can still be using the U.S. financial system through an account with a foreign bank that has a correspondent account with a U.S. bank. We call this nesting and it's a serious problem. It means the al Shamal bank and its customers can still use the U.S. banking system.

The bill before us would require U.S. banks to do a lot more homework on the banks they allow to have correspondent accounts. Under the anti-terrorism bill, it is my belief and my hope that a bank like al Shamal would never be granted a correspondent account at a U.S. bank.

The bill would also allow U.S. law enforcement to capture any illicit funds in a U.S. correspondent account. Now, if a criminal or terrorist has money in a foreign bank that has an account at U.S. bank and illicit money is being held in a U.S. account, law enforcement can't freeze that money unless the person is on the terrorist list or can prove that the foreign bank with the correspondent account is part of a criminal or terrorist act. That's an excessively hard threshold. This legislation would allow law enforcement to freeze money in correspondent accounts to the same extent they can freeze money in regular, individual accounts.

We need all the tools possible in our arsenal to fight the financial network of terrorism. The money laundering provisions in this bill close the loopholes in existing law and provide additional tools for law enforcement to use.

I thank Chairman SARBANES and the other members of the Banking Committee for including so much of the Levin-Grassley anti-money laundering bill, S. 1371, in the Committee's bill. I also thank Chairman LEAHY and the other Judiciary Committee members for including anti-money laundering provisions in title 3 of S. 1510, the anti-terrorism bill. Strengthening our anti-money laundering laws will strike a blow against terrorism by making it harder for terrorists to get the funds they need into United States; an anti-terrorism bill without these anti-money laundering provisions would be providing U.S. law enforcement with only half a toolbox against terrorism.

I would like to take a few minutes to discuss a few key provisions from the Levin-Grassley bill that have been incorporated into S. 1510. These provisions are based on an extensive record of hearings and reports issued in connection with investigations conducted over the past few years by the Permanent Subcommittee on Investigations, which I chair, into money laundering in the correspondent and private banking fields.

The four provisions I want to focus on are provisions that would ban foreign shell banks from the U.S. financial system; require U.S. financial institutions to exercise due diligence; add foreign corruption offenses to the crimes that can trigger a U.S. money laundering prosecution; and close a major forfeiture loophole involving foreign banks.

First is the shell bank ban in Section 313 of S. 1510. This provision is a very important one, because it attempts to eliminate from the U.S. financial system one category of foreign banks that carry the highest money laundering risks in the banking world today. Those are foreign offshore shell banks which, as defined in the bill, are banks that have no physical presence anywhere and no affiliation with any bank that has a physical presence. Our Subcommittee investigation found that these shell banks carry the highest money laundering risks in the banking world, because they are inherently unavailable for effective oversight. There is no office where a bank regulator or law enforcement official can go to observe bank operations, review documents, talk to bank officials, or freeze funds. Only a few countries now issue licenses for unaffiliated shall banks; they include Nauru, Vanuatu, and Montenegro. Nauru alone is believed to maintain licenses for somewhere between 400 and 3,000 offshore shell banks, none of which are being actively supervised, and some of which are suspected of laundering funds for Russian organized crime. A staff report that we issued in February of this year includes four detailed case histories of offshore shell banks that were able to open correspondent accounts at U.S. banks and used them to move funds related to drug trafficking, bribe money and financial fraud money. The possibility that terrorists are also using shell banks to conduct their operations is real and cannot be ignored. That is why this provision seeks to exclude shell banks from the U.S. financial system.

The provision flat-out prohibits U.S. financial institutions from opening accounts for shell banks. Period. It also requires U.S. financial institutions to take reasonable steps to make sure that other foreign banks are not allowing shell banks to use their U.S. accounts to gain entry to the U.S. financial system. The point is to prevent shell banks from getting direct or indirect access to U.S. financial accounts. The shell bank ban applies to both banks and securities firms operating in the United States, so that it is as broad and as effective as possible.

The provision directs the Treasury Secretary to provide regulatory guidance to U.S. financial institutions on the reasonable steps they have to take to guard against shell banks using accounts opened for other foreign banks. One possible approach would be for U.S. financial institutions to include a new section in the standard language they use to open accounts for foreign banks asking the foreign bank to certify that it will not allow any shell bank to use its U.S. accounts. The U.S. financial institution could then rely on that certification, unless it encountered evidence to the contrary indicating that a shell bank was actually using the account, in which case the financial institution would have to take reasonable steps to evaluate that evidence and determine whether a shell bank was, in fact, using the U.S. account.

The provision contains one exception to the shell bank ban, which should be narrowly construed to protect the U.S. financial system to the greatest extent possible. This exception allows U.S. financial institutions to open an account for a shell bank that is both affiliated with another bank that maintains a physical presence, and subject to supervision by the banking regulatory of that affiliated bank. This exception is intended to allow U.S. financial institutions to do business with shell branches of large, established banks on the ground that the regulator of the established bank can and does oversee all of that bank's branches, including any shell branch.

This exception could, of course, be abused. It is possible that an established bank in a jurisdiction with weak banking and anti-money laundering controls could open a shell branch in another country with equally weak controls and try to use that shell branch to launder funds in ways that are unlikely to be detected or stopped by the bank regulator in its home jurisdiction. In that case, while the shell bank ban exception would not flat-out bar U.S. financial institutions from opening an account for the shell branch, another provision would come into play and require the U.S. financial institution to exercise enhanced due diligence before opening an account for this shell bank. I would hope that U.S. financial institutions would not open such an account—that they would exercise common sense and restraint and refrain from doing business with a shell operation that is affiliated with a poorly regulated bank and inherently resistant to effective oversight.

Many U.S. financial institutions already have a policy against doing business with shell banks, but at least one major U.S. bank, Citibank, has a history of taking on shell banks as clients. In order to keep those clients, Citibank tried very hard to expand the exception in this section to also allow U.S. accounts for shell banks affiliated with financial service companies other than banks, such as securities firms or financial holding companies. The broad exception was firmly and explicitly rejected by both the Senate Banking Committee and the House Financial Services Committee, because it would have opened a gaping loophole in the shell bank ban and rendered the ban largely ineffective. All a shell bank would have had to do to evade the ban was establish an affiliated shell corporation and call it a financial services company in order to be eligible to open a U.S. bank account. The Citibank approach would, for example, have allowed a shell bank established by bin Laden's financial holding company, Taba Investments, to open accounts at U.S. banks and securities firms. That would perpetuate the very problem that the Senate investigation identified in two of its shell bank case histories involving M.A. Bank and Federal Bank, each of which opened Citibank accounts in New York and used those accounts to deposit suspect funds associated with drug trafficking and bribery.

The exception to the shell bank ban is intended to be narrowly construed, and U.S. financial institutions will hopefully use great restraint in doing business with any shell bank that is not affiliated with a well known, well regulated bank. The shell bank ban is intended to close the U.S. financial marketplace to the money laundering risks posed by these banks, and it is my hope that other countries and the Financial Action Task Force on Money Laundering will follow the U.S. lead and take the same action in other jurisdictions.

The next provision is the due diligence requirement in Section 312 of S. 1510. This is another critical provision that tightens up U.S. anti-money laundering controls by requiring U.S. financial institutions to exercise due diligence when opening and managing correspondent and private banking accounts for foreign banks and wealthy foreign individuals.

The provision targets correspondent and private banking accounts, because these two areas have been identified by U.S. bank regulators as high risk areas for money laundering, and because Congressional investigations have documented money laundering abuses through them. For example, two weeks ago, I testified before the Banking Committee about a high risk foreign bank in Sudan that was able to open accounts at major banks around the world, including in the United States and, in 1994, used these accounts to funnel money to a bin Laden operative then living in Texas. On one occasion, he used a $250,000 wire transfer from the Sudanese bank to buy an airplane capable of transporting Stinger missiles, fly it to Sudan and deliver the keys to bin Laden. Six months earlier, we released a staff report with ten case histories of high risk foreign banks that used their U.S. accounts to transfer illicit proceeds associated with drug trafficking, financial fraud and other crimes. A year earlier, another staff report presented four case histories of senior foreign government officials or their relatives opening U.S. private banking accounts and using them to deposit millions of dollars in suspect funds. The bottom line is that U.S. banks need to do a much better job in screening the foreign banks and wealthy foreign individuals they allow to open accounts in the United States.

The due diligence provision would address that problem. It would impose an ongoing, industry-wide legal obligation on all types of financial institutions operating in the United States to exercise greater care when opening accounts for foreign banks and wealthy foreign individuals. Its due diligence requirements are intended to function as preventative measures to stop dubious banks and as well as terrorists or other criminals from using foreign banks' U.S. accounts to gain access to the U.S. financial system.

The general obligation to exercise due diligence with respect to all correspondent and private banking accounts is contained in paragraph (1). Paragraphs (2) and (3) then provide minimum standards for the enhanced due diligence that U.S. banks must exercise with respect to certain correspondent and private banking accounts. Paragraph (4)(B) gives the Treasury Secretary discretionary authority to issue regulatory guidance to further clarify the due diligence policies, procedures and controls required by paragraph (1).

The regulatory authority granted in this section is intended to help financial institutions understand what is expected of them. The Secretary may want to issue regulations that help different types of financial institutions to understand their obligations under the due diligence provision. However, one caveat needs to be made with respect to the Secretary's exercise of this regulatory authority, and that involves how it is to be coordinated with Section 5318(a)(6), which authorizes the Secretary to grant ''appropriate exemptions'' from any particular money laundering requirement. There are going to be many efforts made by various groups of financial institutions to win an exemption from the due diligence requirements in this section—from insurance companies, to money transmitters, to offshore affiliates of large foreign banks. But the Committee's and the Senate's clear intention is to cover all major financial institutions operating in the United States. That is why Chairman SARBANES changed the language in my bill, S. 1371, so that the due diligence requirement did not apply just to banks, but to all financial institutions as that term is defined in Section 5312(a)(2) of title 31. That broad coverage is exactly what is contemplated by this statute. The bottom line, then, is that the Secretary is intended to apply the due diligence requirements broadly to U.S. financial institutions, and not to grant an exemption without a very compelling justification.

This same reasoning also applies to the shell bank ban. There will be some that will seek one exemption or another from the ban, asking the Treasury Secretary to use the authority available under Section 5318(a)(6). Again, the intent of the Committee and this Senate is to enact as comprehensive a shell bank ban as possible to protect the United States from the money laundering threat posed by shell banks. That means that the Secretary should refrain from granting any exemption to the shell bank ban without a very compelling justification.

The third provision I want to discuss is the provision in Section 315 adding new foreign corruption offenses to the list of crimes that can trigger a U.S. money laundering prosecution. This is another important advance in U.S. anti-money laundering law. Right now, because foreign corruption offenses are not currently on the list of crimes that can trigger a U.S. money laundering prosecution, corrupt foreign leaders may be targeting U.S. financial institutions as a safe haven for their funds. This provision will make it clear to those who loot their countries, or accept bribes, or steal from their people, that their illicit money is not welcome here. Our banks do not want that money, and if it is deposited in U.S. banks, it is subject to seizure and the depositor may become subject to a money laundering prosecution.

The fourth provision would close a major forfeiture loophole in U.S. law involving foreign banks. This provision is in Section 319(a) of S. 1510. It would make a depositor's funds in a foreign bank's U.S. correspondent account subject to the same civil forfeiture rules that apply to depositors funds in other U.S. bank accounts. Right now, due to a quirk in the law, U.S. law enforcement faces a significant and unusual legal barrier to seizing funds from a correspondent account. Unlike a regular U.S. bank account, it is not enough for U.S. law enforcement to show that criminal proceeds were deposited into the correspondent account; instead, because funds in a correspondent account are considered to be the funds of the foreign bank itself, the government must also show that the foreign bank was somehow part of the wrongdoing.

That's not only a tough job, that can be an impossible job. In many cases, the foreign bank will not have been part of the wrongdoing, but that's a strange reason for letting the foreign depositor who was engaged in a wrongdoing escape forfeiture. And in those cases where the foreign bank may have been involved, no prosecutor will be able to allege it in a complaint without first getting the resources needed to chase the foreign bank abroad.

Take, for example, the case of Barclays Bank which has frozen an account because of suspicious activity suggesting it may be associated with terrorism. If that account had been a correspondent account in the United States opened for Barclays Bank, U.S. law enforcement could have been unable to freeze the particular deposits suspected of being associated with terrorism, because the funds were in the Barclays correspondent account and Barclays itself was apparently unaware of any wrongdoing. That doesn't make sense. U.S. law enforcement should be able to freeze the funds.

Section 319(a) would eliminate that quirk by placing civil forfeitures of funds in correspondent accounts on the same footing as forfeitures of funds in all other U.S. accounts. There is just no reason foreign banks should be shielded from forfeitures when U.S. banks would not be.

Section 319 has many other important provisions as well, including provisions dealing with Federal Receivers, legal service on foreign banks and more.

I want to again thank Senator SARBANES and Senator LEAHY and their staffs for their hard work and cooperative spirit in bringing this bill to the floor and including the provisions of our bill in it.

I need to add that the hard work in passing this bill will be for naught if some of the banks have their way in the House and in Conference Committee. I'm very concerned with reports that there is an effort in the House to separate the money laundering and anti-terrorism bills, so money laundering will be considered separately. The banks should be working with us to figure out even more ways in which the money flow of terrorists can be shut down.

Madam President, I ask unanimous consent to print letters of support for this legislation and testimony from the FBI in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATEMENT OF DENNIS M. LORMEL, CHIEF, FINANCIAL CRIMES SECTION, FEDERAL BUREAU OF INVESTIGATION, BEFORE THE HOUSE COMMITTEE ON FINANCIAL SERVICES, WASHINGTON, DC, OCTOBER 3, 2001

Correspondent banking is another potential vulnerability in the financial services sector that can offer terrorist organizations a gateway into U.S. banks just as it does for money launderers. As this Committee well knows, the problem stems from the relationships many U.S. Banks have with high risk foreign banks. These foreign banks may be shell banks with no physical presence in any country, offshore banks with licenses limited to transacting business with persons outside the licensing jurisdiction, or banks licensed and regulated by jurisdictions with weak regulatory controls that invite banking abuses and criminal misconduct. Attempts to trace funds through these banks are met with overwhelming obstacles. The problem is exacerbated by the fact that once a correspondent account is opened in a U.S. Bank, not only the foreign bank but its clients can transact business through the U.S. bank. As Congress has noted in the past, requiring U.S. banks to more thoroughly screen and monitor foreign banks as clients could help prevent much of the abuse in correspondent bank relationships.

Hon. CARL LEVIN,

Hon. CHARLES GRASSLEY,
Co-Chairman, Senate Drug Caucus, U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN AND MR. CO-CHAIRMAN: We are writing in response to your recent letter to Attorney General Ashcroft concerning S. 1371, the Money Laundering Abatement Act. We appreciate your continued commitment to addressing the serious problem of money laundering in this country and abroad, as demonstrated by your introduction of S. 1371. As you indicated in your letter, the Attorney General has expressed the need to strengthen our money laundering laws. In his August 7th speech, the Attorney General stated: ''The Department of Justice has identified several areas in which our money laundering laws need to be updated to more effectively combat organized crime and to better serve the cause of justice.''

We were very pleased to see that one of the areas highlighted in the Attorney General's speech—the need to add to the list of foreign offenses that constitute predicate crimes for money laundering prosecutions—is included in S. 1371. This and other provisions in your bill would greatly improve our money laundering laws.

As the Attorney General also indicated in his speech, the Department of Justice has been developing its own proposal to update our money laundering laws and we hope to provide Congress with our own recommendations in the near future. We look forward to working with you in pursuing our mutual goal of strengthening and modernizing our money laundering laws to meet the challenges of this new century.

Thank you for your attention to this matter. If we may be of additional assistance, we trust that you will not hesitate to call upon us. The Office of Management and Budget has advised that there is no objection from the standpoint of the Administration's program to the presentation of this report.

Sincerely,

DANIEL J. BRYANT,
Assistant Attorney General.

Hon. CARL LEVIN,
Chairman, Permanent Subcommittee on Investigations, Committee on Governmental Affairs, U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: Thank you for requesting our views on S. 1371, the ''Money Laundering Abatement Act,'' which is designed to combat money laundering and protect the United States financial system by strengthening safeguards in private and correspondent banking.

We greatly appreciate your initiative in this important area and believe that several provisions of S. 1371 would be of particular benefit to DEA's efforts to combat money laundering. In addition, as Assistant Attorney General Bryant recently indicated in his letter to you, the Administration has been working for some time on a package of additional suggested money laundering amendments, which we hope to be able to share with you shortly.

We look forward to working with you to strengthen and improve the Nation's money laundering laws. If I can be of any further assistance, please do not hesitate to contact me. The Office of Management and Budget has advised that there is no objection to the presentation of this report from the standpoint of the Administration's program.

Sincerely,

ASA HUTCHINSON,

FEDERAL DEPOSIT
INSURANCE CORPORATION,
Washington, DC, September 7, 2001.

Hon. CARL LEVIN,
Chairman, Permanent Subcommittee on Investigations, U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: Thank you for the opportunity to comment on S. 1371, the Money Laundering Abatement Act. The Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation shares your concern about the damage to the U.S. financial system that may result from money laundering activities and we congratulate you for your leadership in this area.

As deposit insurer, the FDIC is vitally interested in preventing insured depository institutions from being used as conduits for funds derived from illegal activity. As you may know, in January of this year, the FDIC, together with the Department of the Treasury, the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System, the Office of the Comptroller of the Currency, the Office of Thrift Supervision, and the Department of State, issued Guidance On Enhanced Scrutiny For Transactions That May Involve The Proceeds Of Official Corruption. The FDIC is also an active participant in other working groups that seek more effective ways to combat money laundering.

S. 1371 is an important step in trying to preclude foreign entities from laundering money through U.S. financial institutions. S. 1371 would, in several ways, require U.S. financial institutions to identify foreign parties who open or maintain accounts with U.S. banks, such as through correspondent accounts or private banking accounts. The bill would also prohibit customers from having direct access to concentration accounts, and make it a crime to falsify the identity of a participant in a transaction with or through U.S. financial institutions. Correspondent and concentration accounts have the potential to be misused so as to facilitate money laundering, and the bill appropriately addresses these concerns.

One point we would like to raise is in relation to Section 3 of the bill. Section 3 provides for consultation between the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System and the Secretary of the Treasury, both in regard to devising measures to combat money laundering and defining terms relating to anti-money laundering measures. The FDIC believes that such consultation requirements should include the FDIC as well as the other Federal banking agencies.

Thank you again for the opportunity to provide our views on S. 1371. Please do not hesitate to contact Alice Goodman, Director of our Office of Legislative Affairs, at (202) 898–8730 if we can be of any further assistance.

Sincerely,

DONALD E. POWELL,
Chairman.

STATE OF MICHIGAN,
DEPARTMENT OF ATTORNEY GENERAL,

Hon: CARL LEVIN,
U.S. Senator, Russell Senate Office Bldg., Washington, DC.

Hon. CHUCK GRASSLEY,
U.S. Senator,
Hart Senate Office Bldg., Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATORS LEVIN AND GRASSLEY: I write to express my strong support for S1371, the Money Laundering Abatement Act. This is a prevalent problem that has allowed the criminal element to secrete the proceeds of criminal activity and to generate funds needed to facilitate and underwrite organized crime.

The bill will make it harder for foreign criminals to use United States banks to launder the proceeds of their illegal activity and allow investigators to detect, prevent, and prosecute money laundering. In particular, the bill strengthens existing anti-money laundering laws by adding foreign corruption offenses, barring U.S. banks from providing banking services to foreign shell banks, requiring U.S. banks to conduct enhanced due diligence, and making foreign bank depositors' funds in U.S. correspondence banks subject to the same forfeiture rules that apply to funds in other U.S. bank accounts.

Recent events highlighting the activities of foreign terrorists have demonstrated the necessity for his law. My colleagues in the U.S. Justice Department indicate that this and similar laws are essential if we are to succeed in our fight against organized crime, drug dealers, and terrorism. This bill is the result of lengthy hearings and congressional fact-finding that concluded that the regulations set forth in the bill are needed. The bill has my support, and I would urge its passage as soon as possible.

Sincerely yours,

JENNIFER M. GRANHOLM,
Attorney General.

STATE OF ARIZONA,
OFFICE OF THE ATTORNEY GENERAL,
Phoenix, AZ, August 2, 2001.

Hon. CARL LEVIN,
Russell Senate Office Building,
U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

Hon. CHUCK GRASSLEY,
Hart Senate Office Building,
U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATORS LEVIN AND GRASSLEY: I write to express my views on the Money Laundering Abatement Act you are planning to introduce soon. This bill would provide much needed relief from some of the most pressing problems in money laundering enforcement in the international arena. The burdens it places on the financial institutions are well considered, closely tailored to the problems, and reasonable in light of the public benefits involved.

The bill focuses on the structural arrangements that allow major money launderers to operate. These include the use of shell banks and foreign accounts, abuse of private banking, evasion of law enforcement efforts to acquire necessary records, and of safe foreign havens for criminal proceeds. The approach is very encouraging, because efforts to limit the abuse of these international money laundering tools and techniques must come from Congress rather than the state legislatures, and because such measures attack money laundering at a deeper and more lasting level than simpler measures.

The focus on structural matters means that this bill's effects on cases actually prosecuted by state attorneys general are a relatively small part of the substantial effects its passage would have on money laundering as a whole. Nevertheless, its effects on money laundering affecting victims of crime and illegal drug trafficking would be dramatic. I will use two examples from my Office's present money laundering efforts.

My Office initiated a program to combat so-called ''prime bank fraud'' in 1996, and continues to focus on these cases. Some years ago, the International Chamber of Commerce estimated that over $10 million per day is invested in this wholly fraudulent investment scam. The ''PBI'' business has grown substantially since then. To date, my Office has recovered over $46 million in these cases, directly and in concert with U.S. Attorneys and SEC. Prime bank fraudsters rely heavily on the money movement and concealment techniques that this bill would address, particularly foreign bank accounts, shell banks, accounts in false identities, movement of funds through ''concentration'' accounts, and impunity from efforts to repatriate stolen funds. One of our targets was sentenced recently in federal court to over eight years in prison and ordered to make restitution of over $9 million, but without the tools provided in this bill, there is little hope that the victims will even see anything that was not seized for forfeiture in the early stages of the investigation.

My Office is now engaged in a program to control the laundering of funds through the money transmitters in Arizona, as part of the much larger problem of illegal money movement to and through the Southwest border region. This mechanism is a major facilitator of the drug smuggling operations. Foreign bank accounts and correspondence accounts, immunity from U.S. forfeitures, and false ownerships are significant barriers to successful control of money laundering in the Southwest.

Your bill is an example of the immense value of institutions like the Permanent Subcommittee of Investigations, because this type of bill requires a deeper understanding of the issues that comes from long term inquiries by professional staff. We who are involved in state level money laundering control efforts should be particularly supportive of such long term strategies because they are most important to the quality of life of our citizens.

I commend your efforts for introducing this important legislation and will assist you in anyway I can to gain its passage.

Yours very truly,

JANET NAPOLITANO,
Attorney General.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Vermont.

Mr. LEAHY. Madam President, I tell the distinguished Senator from Michigan and the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts, who made such strong and valid points on money laundering, we just received from the administration their statement of policy saying: This includes money laundering, other financial infrastructure provisions arising from separate legislative proposals. These provisions were added to this bill after unanimous approval to have these provisions in the Senate Banking Committee. The administration supports the effort to strengthen this—

And so on. They are extremely important, and I can assure both Senators that I will strongly support retention of this in conference.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wisconsin.

AMENDMENT NO. 1901

Mr. FEINGOLD. Mr. President, I call up amendment No. 1901, which is at the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MILLER). The clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. FEINGOLD] proposes an amendment numbered 1901.

Mr. FEINGOLD. I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

(Purpose: To modify the provisions relating to access to business records under the Foreign Intelligence Surveillance Act of 1978)

Strike section 215 and insert the following:

SEC. 215. ACCESS TO BUSINESS RECORD UNDER FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE SURVEILLANCE ACT OF 1978.

(A) IN GENERAL.—Section 502 of the Foreign Intelligence Surveillance Act of 1978 (50 U.S.C. 1862) is amended—

(1) in subsection (a), by striking ''authorizing a common carrier'' and all that follows through ''to release records'' and inserting ''requiring a business to produce any tangible things (including books, records, papers, documents, and other items)'';

(2) in subsection (b)(2)—

(A) in subparagraph (A), by striking ''and'' at the end;

(B) in subparagraph (B), by striking the period at the end and inserting ''; and''; and

(C) by adding at the end the following new subparagraph:

''(C) the records concerned are not protected by any Federal or State law governing access to the records for intelligence or law enforcement purposes.''; and

(3) in subsection (d), by striking ''common carrier, public accommodation facility, physical storage facility, or vehicle rental facility'' each place it appears and inserting ''business''.

(b) CONFORMING AMENDMENT.—The text of section 501 of that Act (50 U.S.C. 1861) is amended to read as follows:

''SEC. 501. In this title, the terms 'agent of a foreign power', 'foreign intelligence information', 'international terrorism', and 'Attorney General' have the meanings given such terms in section 101.''.

Mr. FEINGOLD. Mr. President, this amendment has to do with section 215 in the bill. It allows the Government, under FISA, to compel businesses to turn over records to assist in an investigation of terrorism or espionage. The provision makes two significant changes from current law. Under current law, the FBI can seek records from only a limited set of businesses—from public accommodations, such as hotels and motels, car rental companies, storage facilities, and travel records, such as those from airlines.

Current law also requires the FBI to demonstrate to the FISA court that the records pertain to an agent of a foreign power. The FBI cannot go on a fishing expedition of records of citizens of this country who might have had incidental contact with a target of an investigation. But under section 215 of this bill, all business records can be compelled to be produced, including those containing sensitive personal information such as medical records from hospitals or doctors, or educational records, or records of what books someone has taken out of the library.

This is an enormous expansion of authority, compounded by the elimination of the requirement that the records have to pertain to an agent of a foreign power. Under this provision, the Government can apparently go on a fishing expedition and collect information on anyone—perhaps someone who has worked with, or lived next door to, or has been seen in the company of, or went to school with, or whose phone number was called by the target of an investigation.

So we are not talking here only about the targets of the investigation; we are talking about people who have simply had some incidental contact with the target. All the FBI has to do is to allege in order to get the order that the information is sought for an investigation of international terrorism or clandestine intelligence gathering. That is all they have to do, assert that—not to just get at the targets, but at people who have had any contact whatsoever with them.

On that minimal showing in an ex parte application in a secret court, the Government can lawfully compel a doctor or a hospital to release medical records or a library to release circulation records. This is truly a breathtaking expansion of the police power, one that I do not think is warranted.

My amendment does not completely strike the provision. There are elements of it that I think have legitimacy. First, my amendment maintains the requirement that the records pertain to a target alleged to be an agent of a foreign power. This provides some protection for American citizens who might otherwise become the subject of investigations for having some innocent contact with a suspected terrorist.

Second, while the amendment maintains the expansion of the FISA authority to all business records, it also requires the FBI to comply with State and Federal laws that contain a higher standard for the disclosure of certain private information. The amendment makes it clear that existing Federal and State statutory protections for the privacy of certain information are not diminished or superseded by section 215.

There are certain categories of records, such as medical records or educational records, that Congress and State legislatures have deemed worthy of a higher level of privacy protection. Let me quickly give you a couple of examples. In California, there is a very detailed statutory provision governing disclosure of medical information to law enforcement authorities. Generally, the law requires either patient consent, or a court order, or a subpoena. Before issuing an order for the records to be produced, the court must, among other things, find good cause based on a determination that there is a reasonable likelihood that the records in question will disclose material information or evidence of substantial value in connection with the investigation or prosecution.

Montana is another State with strong statutory, and indeed constitutional, protections for medical records. It provides that medical records can only be obtained with an investigative subpoena signed by a judge, and that subpoena may be issued only when it appears upon the affidavit of the prosecutor that a compelling State interest requires it to be issued. In order to establish a compelling State interest, the prosecutor must state facts and circumstances sufficient to support probable cause to believe that an offense has been committed, and that the information relative to the commission of that offense is in the possession of the person or institution to whom the subpoena is directed.

My State of Wisconsin, along with many other States, has very strong library confidentiality laws which requires a court order for disclosure of public library system records.

Texas, for example, permits disclosure of library records ''to a law enforcement agency or prosecutor under a court order or subpoena obtained after a showing to a court that: (A) disclosure of the record is necessary to protect the public safety; (B) the record is evidence of an offense or constitutes evidence that a particular person committed an offense.''

Missouri and Nevada library records confidentiality laws both require that a court find ''that the disclosure of such record is necessary to protect the public safety or to prosecute a crime.''

South Carolina's library records confidentiality law permits disclosure ''in accordance with a proper judicial order upon finding that disclosure of the records is necessary to protect public safety, to prosecute a crime, or upon showing of good cause before a presiding judge in a civil matter.''

In short, our States have made policy judgments about the protection to which certain kinds of records are justified. We have Federal laws that express similar judgments—Federal Educational Records Privacy Act. Indeed, as I will mention, this bill provides new standards for the production of educational records in connection with terrorism investigations.

So my fear is that what section 215 does is effectively trump any and all of these State and Federal privacy protections. I think that is a result that most of our citizens and their State representatives would not countenance. So my amendment simply provides that this new authority to compel the production of business records through an order of a FISA court does not apply if another State or Federal law governs the law enforcement or intelligence access to the records.

To the extent that the records sought have no such statutory protection, the only effect this amendment would have is to ensure that the records actually pertain to the target. But I strongly believe that merely alleging that the records are needed for an intelligence investigation should not override other protections provided by State and Federal law.

I will quickly highlight the problem by referring to section 508 of this bill. That section, I think, would be rendered meaningless if section 215 is not amended as I propose.

The original version of section 508 proposed by the administration would have given the Attorney General the right to obtain the educational records of virtually any student without a court order. I and many other Senators had serious problems with that provision, and it was significantly changed before S. 1510 was introduced. Section 508 now does require a court order and does provide a specific showing that the Attorney General must make to obtain the order to get at these educational records. But if section 215 is enacted without my amendment a university could be ordered to turn over such records as ''tangible things'' on a much lower showing.

The administration asserts that it is too great a burden for the Government to abide by existing privacy protections and seek court orders to obtain certain sensitive information specifically identified by Congress and State legislators. I remind my colleagues that the protections I seek to preserve were carefully drafted and debated and enacted at a time when legislators could thoughtfully consider the full weight of granting such protections. We are now asked to set these protections aside with scant discussion of either the merits or the consequences of such a proposal, during a time of incredible strain on our democratic principles, and for an indeterminate length of time.

If my amendment is adopted, law enforcement will still have access to all of the information it seeks. But my amendment simply maintains the integrity of protections enacted by Congress and State legislatures for certain kinds of sensitive information to ensure that access to this information is given only where it is necessary. It makes sure that this provision does not become the platform or an excuse for a fishing expedition for damaging information on American citizens who are not the subjects of FISA surveillance.

I reserve the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Minnesota is recognized.

Mr. FEINGOLD. I yield 5 minutes to the Senator.

Mr. WELLSTONE. Mr. President, I say, again, to colleagues that this amendment the Senator from Wisconsin introduced makes sure that our Federal and State laws regarding certain sensitive privacy areas are not diminished or superseded by this provision.

The amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin goes to the heart of the concerns that a lot of the people we represent have. I imagine that the vote may be overwhelmingly in opposition to this amendment. That has been the pattern.

Again, I thank the Senator from Wisconsin for raising these questions. This is what we should be doing.

I conclude this way: I really think, in part, because of the kind of questions the Senator from Wisconsin has raised—again, I am not a lawyer—in looking at this bill, Mr. President, I say to Senator LEAHY, it seems to me he and others have done a great job and are doing everything possible to make this more balanced. There are so many good provisions in this bill that we need. I believe that.

I hope we can keep the sunset provision, which is so essential to oversight, because I think what is good is the provisions of this legislation that focus on combating terrorism and what is not quite so good is the parts of this bill that reach way beyond that.

Yes, there is a lot of good. I will support it. I will reserve final judgment of what comes out of the conference committee. I think we can make it better.

I thank my colleagues, Senator HATCH included, for their work. Sometimes people can honestly disagree. I know this is important. I know where we are as a nation, but the Senator from Wisconsin has raised important concerns tonight, and others as well. I hope we do better in conference.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. FEINGOLD. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from Minnesota. He said it exactly right. Each of us who spoke on these amendments tonight cares just as much as everybody in this room about the fight against terrorism and stopping it. We just want to make sure we do not go beyond that goal with unnecessary language that intrudes on our civil liberties. That is it. That is all we are trying to do.

I am pleased to yield 5 minutes to the Senator from Washington.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Washington.

Ms. CANTWELL. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from Wisconsin for the time and his energies this evening. We all know that the hour is late and that there are many things we must accomplish in our acts to fight terrorism. This is probably one of the most significant pieces of legislation that affects our home-front activities in fighting that battle.

There are many good things in this bill. I am very proud of the authorizing language to triple the resources for our northern borders. I am very proud of the language in the bill that basically will set a new technology standard for our visa program so we can better identify people coming into this country. I am very proud of the many tools in the bill for law enforcement. I ask unanimous consent that the column in the Washington Post be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Washington Post, Oct. 10, 2001]

WHEN CARE BEATS HASTE

The complex antiterrorism legislation that the administration sent Congress less than a month ago could reach the floors of both houses this week. The original proposal has been considerably improved since its hasty submission, but civil liberties groups continue to warn with cause that some of the detention and surveillance provisions would give the government more power than is either necessary or healthy.

Some of the members of both parties who helped construct the current compromises are likewise uneasy about their own handiwork, but reluctant to be seen as holding up a bill the administration insists it needs right away. The reluctance will be the greater now that the country is engaged in military action in Afghanistan; there is fear—we have no doubt well-founded—of retaliation. But dangerous moments are precisely the ones when it is most important that civil liberties be protected.

The House Judiciary Committee has dealt with the conflicting pressures in part by putting a kind of asterisk after the surveillance sections of the bill. It has ''sunset'' them, meaning the powers they confer will expire after two years unless a subsequent Congress, having seen how the powers work out, votes to extend them. The administration opposes the sunset provision and succeeded in keeping it out of the Senate version. But it's a reasonable compromise. A bill such as this is a balancing of risks—the risk of further attack versus the risk to civil liberties in seeking to forestall the attack. If the bill is as benign as the administration insists, it has nothing to fear from a sunset provision, which ought to be retained.

Parts of the administration proposal were sensible and are not in dispute: allowing the government in an age of cell phones to seek court approval for placing a wiretap on a person rather than a particular phone, for example. Others were drawn too loosely, and some still need work. The administration had sought authority to detain indefinitely non-citizens whom the attorney general thought even might be engaged in terrorism or other activities that endangered national security. That power has been greatly circumscribed. A person not charged with a crime after seven days can be held only if the government is moving to deport him. The question, which the bills don't clearly answer, is how long, without judicial determination, can it hold him then?

Wiretap authority now is easier to get for foreign intelligence than for law enforcement purposes. The legislation would make it easier still. The question then becomes how to make sure that the new authority isn't abused—in fact used for law enforcement purposes or fishing expeditions—in such a way as to make such surveillance far more commonplace than now. Related issues have to do with the sharing of law enforcement and intelligence information among government officials. There are ways to provide the broader authority the government says it needs while hedging against its abuse; in our view, not all of those have been fully explored.

So too with the power the bill would give law enforcement officials to obtain records of an individual's Internet use, including addresses of e-mail sent and received. Phone records are now available to law enforcement agencies more or less on request—when were calls made from phone A to phone B? what should be the Internet analogy?

The administration was said yesterday to be pressing for quick passage by both houses of the Senate measure; the more careful work of the House Judiciary Committee would be set aside. That's wrong, and an acquiescent step that in the long run Congress likely would regret.

Ms. CANTWELL. This article said it best with the headline: ''When Care Beats Haste'':

The question then becomes how to make sure that the new authority isn't abused—in fact used for law enforcement purposes or fishing expeditions—

Later it says that it would be wrong for us to take an acquiescent step that in the long run would really hurt our country.

What Senator FEINGOLD is simply trying to say is that we have already painstakingly over many years crafted a careful balance in protecting personal privacy. This language in section 215 changes that. It basically says that the FBI can have access to other things, including business records from U.S. citizens who may have had incidental contact with someone who is defined as a terrorist.

Think about that for a second. If you are an employer and someone in your company has now been accused of these terrorists acts and is under investigation, your business records can also be attained if, as Senator FEINGOLD said, it was deemed part of this investigation, with very minimal judicial review.

Take for another example, you happen to live across the hall from someone who now has become a suspect. Maybe you have been over to their house for dinner several times. Now, all of a sudden, you may be part of that investigation, and your financial records, your medical records, your personal records can now be part of that investigation, again, with very minimal judicial review.

I have heard from many in my State, including my State librarian, consumers, and businesses that are concerned, that this provision is far too broad.

It takes little imagination, as I said, to think of all the tangible items this would give the FBI carte blanche to examine some people's most private and personal papers.

The bottom line is this legislation could circumvent or supersede Federal and State privacy laws that protect student records, library records, and health records not previously admissible under FISA.

What we are talking about in the Feingold amendment is trying to preserve those State and Federal laws that already specify protection. The amendment simply states where Congress or a State legislature has enacted a law which requires an order to obtain records, that Federal or State law stands.

That seems pretty simple. We have worked on these issues. We should not work on them in haste.

This is a very complex time. It is no ordinary time for our country. This process has to remember those fourth amendment rights that we have so diligently fought for in the past. I urge my colleagues to support this amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. FEINGOLD. Mr. President, I am grateful for the remarks of the Senator from Washington. I am afraid we are going to read them in a few years and wish maybe we listened more closely to what we are doing on this particular provision.

I reserve the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

The Senator from Vermont.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, the Senator from Utah wanted to say something for the record.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I thank my colleagues.

I oppose Senator FEINGOLD's amendment to Section 215 of the bill. Section 215 allows federal law enforcement to apply for a court order to obtain records and other evidence in the course of an investigation to protect against international terrorism or clandestine intelligence activities. This provision has many safeguards built in to prevent its misuse.

For instance, the application must be made by the Director of the FBI or his designee, whose rank cannot be lower than an Assistant Special Agent in Charge, and specify that the records concerned are sought for an authorized investigation to protect against international terrorism or clandestine intelligence activities. Additionally, the investigation must be conducted pursuant to approved Attorney General guidelines and may not be conducted on a United States person solely upon the basis of activities protected by the first amendment to the Constitution.

As written, the provision balances the investigatory needs of the FBI with privacy concerns and provides adequate protection, while not allowing a host of state-law provisions to stand in the way of national security needs. Senator FEINGOLD's amendment would condition the issuance of the court order on a myriad of federal and state-law provisions. Such conditioning will have the effect of making investigations to protect against international terrorism more difficult than investigations of certain domestic criminal violations.

Senator FEINGOLD's amendment purports to preserve privacy protections in place for certain records. The amendment's effect, however, will be to place foreign international and intelligence investigations at a disadvantage to criminal investigations. For example, this amendment would make it more difficult for the government to obtain business records in a foreign-intelligence or foreign counter-intelligence investigation through a court order than it is to obtain the same records in a criminal health-care fraud or child pornography investigation through a grand jury subpoena or administrative subpoena. (see 18 U.S.C. 3486).

Federal law enforcement officers investigating the activities of a terrorist organization or foreign intelligence target should not face a greater burden than that imposed on investigators of health-care fraud or child pornography.

I urge my colleagues to vote against this amendment.

Mr. LEAHY. Madam President, the administration originally wanted administrative subpoena authority in foreign intelligence cases for government access to any business record. I was able to reach agreement with the administration to subject this authority to judicial review and to bar investigations based on the basis of activities protected by the First Amendment.

The Feingold amendment would ensure that current laws providing safeguards for certain types of records, such as medical and educational records, be maintained. Again, it is unfortunate that the administration did not accept this amendment.

Mr. President, we are prepared to yield back the remainder of our time if the Senator from Wisconsin is prepared to yield back the remainder of his time.

Mr. FEINGOLD. If the majority leader is going to speak, I would like to respond. If not, I will simply yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. LEAHY. I yield back the remainder of our time.

Mr. DASCHLE. Mr. President, I move to table the amendment and ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second?

There is a sufficient second.

The question is on agreeing to the motion. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. NICKLES. I announce that the Senator from North Carolina (Mr. HELMS), the Senator from South Carolina (Mr. THURMOND), and the Senator from New Mexico (Mr. DOMENICI), are necessarily absent.

I further announce that if present and voting the Senator from North Carolina (Mr. HELMS) would vote ''yea.''

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Are there any other Senators in the Chamber desiring to vote?

The result was announced—yeas 89, nays 8, as follows:
